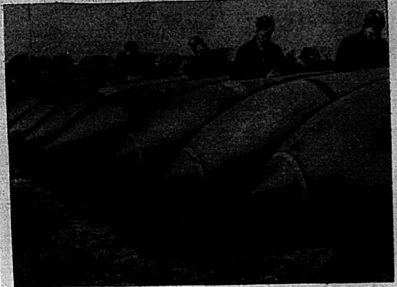
PREPARE EARTHQUAKE BOMBS FOR DELIVERY TO NAZIS



Armorers of the British Royal Air Force, are preparing a batch of the new 12,000-pound earthquake bombs for delivery to Germany. These bombs, far more powerful than the famous blockbusters, penetrate steel and concrete to a depth of 12 feet and then explode by delayed action fuse. They were used on the submarine pens at Brest with devastating effect. They are carried by Lancaster bombers.

THE SEA WILL GIVE UP TREASURE to men who think of tomorrow

SALVAGE SUBMARINE OF TOMORROW! . . . Already more than 40 million tons of shipping have been sunk in World War II. What a treasure trove of valuable metals and non-perishable cargoes may be reclaimed with these powerful undersea craft . . . equipped with salvaging cables and with decompression chambers for diving operations. They're coming . . . planned by men who think of tomorrow!

MEN who think of tomorrow are planning many startling post-war engineering enterprises. The salvage of deep sea treasure by giant submarines is one of the most practical . . . and profitable.

But until the day arrives when men and machines are free for such fascinating exploits, we have a lot of salvaging to do on the home front!

For instance, the need for waste paper has never been more urgent than it is now. Are you salvaging yours? . . . Gigantic quantities of explosives must continue to flow across the sea to our armed forces. That takes glycerine and glycerine takes kitchen fats. Are you salvaging every drop you can?

There is no respite for anybody in the kind of a war we're waging. None for the soldier, none for those at home . . . None of us is through with the job until the last enemy flag comes down. And that means, among other things, buying more and more War Savings Certificates and Victory Bonds, and it means hanging on to them, too!

Tomorrow will come, as it always has . . . but it will be the brighter for the sacrifices we make today. Let us all be MEN WHO THINK OF TOMORROW . . . and get ready for it NOW!

INVADERS BATTLE FOR PHILIPPINE AIRFIELDS
CANADIAN FORCES CONTINUE TO GAIN GROUND

Well-Supplied U.S. Troops Move Inland At a Rapid Pace

Japan Unable To Muster Large Scale Counter Blows

By C. YATES McDANIEL
Associated Press War Correspondent

Gen. MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Oct. 21 —(AP)— The fall of two Japanese airfields appeared imminent today as well-supplied United States troops, backed by overwhelming naval and air might, drove inland on all sectors at Leyte in the Central Philippines on the second day of invasion.

The 6,000-foot bomber field at Tacloban on the northeast was approached by one force. To the south, another force which advanced at such speed that Al Dopking, Associated Press War Correspondent said it was difficult to keep up with the men, was on the outskirts of an airfield near Dulag.

Japan's 16th division, remembered for its torture of the Americans and Filipinos who surrendered at Bataan, had succeeded nowhere in mustering a large-scale counter-attack.

Pending the seizure and utilization of land air bases, American planes from escort carriers swooped as flying artillery on the estimated 20,000 defenders of Leyte, blowing up pill-boxes and spewing death among motor convoys.

600-Ship Convoy.

The enemy air force, operating from the few fields in the Philippines which could be momentarily repaired between carrier plane attacks, managed two scattered night raids against small units of the 600-ship convoy which carried the U. S. 6th Army and Central Pacific units to the invasion.

A communique today acknowledged a torpedo hit on one vessel of undesignated size, while Japan belatedly acknowledged for the first time in an Imperial communique to the homeland that Allied forces have landed in the Tacloban area.

Ground forces, under immediate command of Lt.-Gen. Walter Krueger, apparently encountered their most tenacious opposition just south of Cancabato Bay at Palo.

Crafts Blown Up.

There Fred Hampson, Associated Press War Correspondent, saw four of the landing ships and several smaller craft blown up by enemy shore guns.

For several hours it was touch and go with the invaders sloshing ashore through a hail of machine-gun bullets and Japanese shells.

"Our ground forces are consolidating their beachhead positions and driving inland on all sectors," said today's communique.

"Food and supplies have been alnded on schedule against light opposition.

"Our ground casualties in the preliminary operation have been exceedingly light."

A Great Armada.

MacArthur, whose losing fight in 1942 was waged with a courageous but inadequately-supplied garrison, deprived in the end of all air and naval cover, brought back to the Philippines the greatest mass of men, planes, warships and tanks ever assembled in the Pacific.

Murlin Spencer, Associated Press War Correspondent, said the 600-ship convoy carried at least as many as, and perhaps more than, the number of men landed on D-Day in Normandy.

(Inasmuch as Prime Minister Churchill has discovered that nearly 250,000 men landed in France the first day, such a sizeable force for the Philippines operation might well suggest that even greater operations, with more landings on other islands, are in the offing against the estimated 225,000 Japanese defending the Philippines).

Every report from the invasion scene, while varying in the degree of opposition detailed, placed the Americans on the advance.

One Town in Ruins.

On the south end of Cancabato Bay, Asahel Bush, Associated Press War Correspondent, said the town of San Jose was in ruins as a result of the devastating bombardment from warships which included the battleship California.

San Jose is on the island road to Tacloban, capital of Leyte, on the opposite end of the bay.

Tokyo radio, after considerable silence, made claims the Japanese on Leyte were "cutting deep into enemy landing points" but in the same breath admitted the invaders were "heading toward Tacloban."

Widespread Destruction.

Both MacArthur and Admiral Nimitz reported widespread destruction of enemy planes—pushing beyond 1,400 the total wiped out since Oct. 9 in the air offensive building up to the invasion—and more blows at enemy shipping.

Gen Krueger is in command of the U.S. 6th Army.

The massed naval might brought together Vice Admiral Kinkaid, of the U.S. 7th fleet, Admiral Halsey, of the U.S. third fleet and Commodore John A Collins of the Australian squadron.

The constant air umbrella was supplied by the Far Eastern Air Force and Royal Australian Air Force, headed by Lt.-Gen. George C. Kenny, and the U.S. 3rd Fleet Carrier planes of Vice Admiral Mitscher.

Navy Bombards Nicobar Is. In Bay of Bengal

Kandy, Oct. 21—(CP)—The Royal Navy's eastern fleet bombarded the Nicobar islands in the bay of Bengal during this week, it was announced today in the Southeast Asia Command headquarters communique.

Tokyo radio previously had reported the bombardments.

The Nicobar islands lie to the northwest of Sumatra Island and Singapore, the Great British Naval Base which fell to the Japanese in February, 1942, shortly after the war spread to the Far East.

The attacks started Tuesday with a bombardment of Car Nicobar. This was synchronized with an attack on Nancowry harbor lasting 2½ hours.

An air attack on Car Nicobar followed when anti-aircraft gun positions and airfields were strafed.

At Nancowry, one medium-sized ship was sunk and some small ships damaged. The operations were repeated later. The enemy was not prepared for the first attack and there was no resistance, the communique said, but in the second strike the aircraft were intercepted by Japanese fighters.

The fighter attack was beaten off and eight Japanese planes were shot down.

Four Allied naval aircraft failed to return. There were no casualties or damage to the fleet.

The operation was under command of Vice Admiral Sir John Power.

Japanese Imperial headquarters had asserted in a broadcast communique from Tokyo Friday that a British aircraft carrier and a destroyer were sunk by Japanese planes off the Nicobar islands. The Japanese also claimed damage to a battleship and a destroyer.

Cat-and-Mouse War Being Fought With 12,000 Nazis in Dunkerque Port

By SEAGHAN MAYNES
(Reuter War Correspondent)

With the 1st Canadian Army outside Dunkerque, Oct. 21 — (CP-Reuter)—A strange cat-and-mouse war is being fought far behind the Allied lines at the French port of Dunkerque, where 12,000 German expendables are trapped with their back to England and the sea.

With them are 500 collaboration who preferred to stay with the doomed garrison rather than risk the vengeance of liberated France.

These suicide troops, remnants of the shattered German 7th army routed in France, today are holding defence positions almost similar to those British troops held in 1940 before the evacuation.

As they nervously await the final assault to smash them into the sea, they are showing a spirit of aggressiveness, especially at night, when they lunge fighting patrols into the Allied lines to raise as much hell as possible.

All along the 29-mile perimeter the Allies are watching every German move and attacking whenever German thrusts are made to test the Allied strength.

Whether the garrison will fight as did the British on the beaches to the last minute or surrender en Masse like other German port garrisons in Calais and Bologne under an all-out assault is problematical. But there is no doubt that their fighting spirit now is not greatly impaired.

CHURCHILL-STALIN TALKS PRAISED BY MOSCOW PRESS

Road Appears Clear Toward Framing A Firm Peace Although Differences Exist

By EDDY GILMORE
(AP War Correspondent)

Moscow, Oct. 21—(AP)—Moscow's press gave the Churchill-Stalin negotiations profuse praise today, vividly mirroring the good which official Russia believes resulted from the long, numerous and friendly discussions of the two leaders.

Editorials said differences still existed between Great Britain and the Soviet Union on certain European questions but asserted the road appeared clear towards framing a firm peace.

A joint communique summing up the 10-day meeting was issued this morning. It said the two leaders made "important progress" toward settling the Polish dispute, reached an agreement on remaining points in the Bulgarian armistice terms and that their governments have decided to pursue a joint policy in Yugoslavia. Military plans for the war also were reviewed.

Agreements at the conference were said to have the full approval of the United States government, represented by Ambassador W. Averell Harriman.

Moscow's morning press and radio gave top play to the Prime Minister's departure with Mr. Stalin seeing him off at the Moscow airport. The papers printed an eight-column front-page photograph.

Both Mr. Churchill and Mr. Stalin expressed regret that President Roosevelt was unable to attend. Before leaving Moscow Thursday the Prime Minister said he thought it would be an excellent idea for the three to get together again as they did at Teheran.

Discuss Polish Question.

Referring to the delicate Polish question which had shaken the United Nations structure, the communique said:

"Important progress was made toward the solution of the Polish question which was closely discussed between the Soviet and British governments . . .

"These discussions have notably narrowed differences and dispelled misconceptions. Conversations are continuing on outstanding points."

There was a heartening indication of an early fusion of the London and Lublin Polish factions, with the dispute over the ill-fated Warsaw revolt apparently pigeon-holed.

Polish Premier Stanislaw Mikolajczyk, who left for London Friday morning, is expected to return to Moscow soon. He was reported confident the London Poles would give him a mandate for constructing a unified government.

A few hours after the leaders of the Polish government in London and the leaders of the Lublin regime had optimistically forecast early agreement, however, a Tass dispatch to Pravda reported that a mass meeting of Lublin Poles had charged Mr. Mikolajczyk's government with responsibility for "criminal acts of terror."

Joint Policy in Yugoslavia.

The dispatch said a resolution demanded that the Committee of National Liberation get a public declaration from Mr. Mikolajczyk

Compulsion Should Hold No Place in Canadian Policy Says McNaughton

Kingston, Ont., Oct. 21 — (CP) — Compulsion should hold no place in Canadian policy, Gen. A. G. L. McNaughton, retired commander of the Canadian Army Overseas, today told a Queen's University Convocation gathering.

He spoke of the need for the development of tolerant leaders who, in the hard days ahead when tough post-war problems would have to be solved, would find the solution through an unpassioned interchange of views.

He told the students they were the future leaders and he asked them in finding solutions they listen to all the arguments and seize on those features which commend themselves to general assent. Prompt action should then be taken to give those features full effect and on other points the future leader should agree to disagree.

"When you come, as you will, to places of authority and influence, and you face the acute issues which may divide our country part from part, may I commend this principle of action to your best thought and interest — compulsion is ruled out; we proceed by agreement, or for a time we rest content to not pro- at all," he said.

The general, whose daughter Leslie sat among the students, also spoke of the need for more wide-spread education among the masses and he told of the work in this direction that had been done in the active army.

He spoke of plans for soldier studies which would result "in tens of thousands of the best of our youth turning their attention to study while they remain in the armies of occupation, and when they come back to Canada they will be most anxious to continue."

He told of a government plan to meet tuition fees and provide allowances for everyone who could show he was capable and would benefit. The score of this plan extended to post-graduate studies.

"I say to you that the young men and women in our armed forces today, as never before, are conscious of their need for education—they are very serious in their intent to equip themselves for their careers in the post-war world and they are looking to the schools and universities in Canada to give them what they need," said Gen. McNaughton.

CANADA'S FIRST CRUISER OF WAR IS COMMISSIONED

Hon. Leighton McCarthy Accepts Ship on Behalf of Canada From Great Britain

A United States Navy Yard, Oct. 21 — (CP) — Hon. Leighton McCarthy, Canadian Ambassador to Washington, in a speech prepared for delivery today at the commissioning of Canada's first cruiser of this war — the Uganda — said this Trafalgar Day was a fitting anniversary on which to mark "the attainment of another milestone in the growth and stature" of the Canadian Navy.

He spoke of the Navy's growth—"nearly fiftyfold" — and its shift from a defensive escort fleet to the full fighting navy and said Canadian seamen now could "look forward to the waters of the South Pacific, or wherever the exigencies of war against Japan may lead them."

He accepted the modern warship from the British government and told of the Navy's debt to Britain "whose unstinted help, guidance and co-operation made much of our progress possible."

He paid tribute to the work of the Navy Yard for the ship's new 'fighting trim' and also spoke of her empire link with the Uganda Protectorate, which had equipped her and Tynside which had built her.

Then he said:—"With such a fine ship, splendid officers and ship's company, I feel confident that His Majesty's Canadian Ship Uganda will give a good account of herself and bring credit upon all those who serve in her."

Speaking of the various stages in the development of the navy he recalled its growing responsibility in the Atlantic and added that in recent months it had "carried the whole burden almost single-handed."

Until today Canada's naval forces had consisted of "small ships, the fast, hard-hitting destroyer, the deadly frigate, the ubiquitous and sturdy corvette, the life-saving and courageous mine-sweeper, and all the sisterhood of fighting craft whose forte is dirty work at sea." And now a modern cruiser was added.

8TH ARMY UNITS BURST THROUGH NAZI REARGUARDS

Occupy Coastal Town of Vesenatico and Push on to Ravenna

By LYNN HEINZERLING
(AP War Correspondent)

Rome, Oct. 21 — (AP) — British 8th Army units burst through the rearguards of German parachute troops on the Adriatic sector today and occupied the coastal town of Vesenatico, 13 miles north of Rimini and 18 miles from Ravenna, their next coastal objective.

New Zealand and Canadian troops northeast of the fortress town and highway centre of Cesena made similar swift advances. Cesena was occupied and Allied troops were clearing one last enemy pocket on the western outskirts of the town, which is 12 miles southeast of Forli, boyhood home of Mussolini, on the Rimini-Bologna road.

"Considerable progress has been made by troops of the 8th Army in the Po Valley, north of the Rimini-Bologna road," the Allied communique said.

While successes on the Adriatic sector do not mean a breakthrough of the German line, the fact that New Zealand armor has been able to thrust a little farther into the Po Valley raised the hope that the 8th Army might yet be able to bring its superior armored forces to bear in the wide plain stretching ahead. There are many river barriers in the area, however, and uncertain weather makes them formidable.

Capture High Spots

The Allied 5th Army which is driving north toward Bologna captured several high spots, but still was engaged in heavy fighting, particularly in the area north and northeast of recently-captured Livergnand. There the Germans increased their artillery fire and were backing up their troops with tanks and self-propelled guns.

Division Leaders Are Announced

By ROSS MUNRO
(CP War Correspondent)

With the 1st Canadian Army, Oct. 21 — (CP Cable) — Maj.-Gen. Charles Foulkes of London, Ont., and Maj.-Gen. Harry Foster of Montreal are commanding formations in the 1st Canadian Army, it was permitted to disclose today.

Permission also was given to state that Brig. Basil Wedd of Toronto is the senior Canadian Civil Affairs Officer with the Canadian Army.

(Presumably Gen. Foulkes and Gen. Foster are in command of divisions, although the dispatch did not say so specifically.

(It was announced in Ottawa last January that Gen. Foulkes, 41, has been appointed to command a Canadian division overseas.)

ZAGREB, BUDAPEST NOW OBJECTIVES TITO'S PARTISANS

Join Russians And Move Up Three Main Highways Leading To Hungarian Capital

By DANIEL DE LUCE
Associated Press War Correspondent

Moscow, Oct. 21—(AP)—Marshal Tito's Yugoslav partisans, freed for new actions by the capture of their capital, Belgrade, joined with the Red Army today in drives toward the Croatian puppet seat of Zagreb and Budapest, the strife-torn Hungarian capital.

Zagreb lies 225 miles northwest of Belgrade in the Sava River valley. Budapest is on the Danube 190 miles north of Belgrade.

East and southeast of Budapest, other Russian forces supplemented by Romanian units rumbled up three main highways leading to the Hungarian capital, but they encountered stiff resistance from large German tank and anti-tank forces beyond the Tisza River.

The number of German captives seized in the liberation of Belgrade swelled toward 10,000 as the Russians and Yugoslavs mopped up every corner of the broken city, digging storm troops from cellars and attics of blasted buildings. Large numbers of enemy troops were seized along the Danube and Sava, where they had run in desperation before the wildly celebrating troops of Tito.

Much Equipment Seized.

A great amount of German equipment including tanks and self-propelled guns fell to the conquering Yugoslav-Russian armies after nearly a week of fiery street fighting in the city.

Lieut. Velimir Terzich, head of Marshal Tito's Military Mission in the Soviet Union called the occupation of Belgrade "a very important strategical junction for carrying the offensive into Germany."

Red Star said the city was taken with a four-column drive extending from the southeast to the southwest with a Danube flotilla coming up under the cover of darkness and pouring salvoes at the enemy from the rear. Gen. Feodor I. Tolbukhin directed the Russian attack.

Capture Debrecen

Meanwhile, Marshal Stalin also has announced the capture of Hungary's third city — Debrecen — a conquest, that broke the back of German resistance in Eastern Hungary after prolonged and furious armored battle estimated to have cost the Germans and Russians a total of 1,000 tanks.

Official Russian silence still enveloped the East Prussian front. When the news finally is released it is expected to be as sensational as the announcement of the Romanian drive in August.

(Berlin announced last night that Red Army troops had penetrated 12 miles inside East Prussia on an 80-mile front. The Germans also said the Russians in Hungary had rolled 30 miles beyond Debrecen, reaching the rail town of Tiszacsege on the Tisza river some 85 miles east of the capital.)

Drive Four Miles Nearer Roosendaal North of Antwerp

Last Remnants of Aachen Garrison Surrender to Yanks

By WILLIAM FRYE
(AP Staff Writer)

London, Oct. 21—(AP)—The 1st Canadian Army, slugging methodically through rain-soaked fields and thickets north of Antwerp, pushed its three-pronged offensive four miles nearer Roosendaal and Breda today, while American troops hunted down remnants of the German garrison in the outskirts of captured Aachen.

British infantry and Canadian tanks entered the road-junction of Wuestwezel, 12 miles north and slightly east of Antwerp on the Antwerp-Breda highway, and sent partols probing out a mile or two northwest of the town. Two other columns, in twin-drives along the roads to Roosendaal, seized Calmpthout and neared the Roosendaal canal.

This offensive was the second phase of the battle to win use of Antwerp port as a supply base. The first phase was drawing to an end west of Antwerp, with Canadians steadily closing in on the German pocket around Brekens south of the Schelde estuary.

In Eastern Holland, United States forces pushed within 4,000 yards of a German communications strongpoint near the Maas River. British 2nd Army troops meanwhile consolidated positions southeast of Venray on the Netherlands battlefront.

Eight hundred Germans, the remnants of the Aachen garrison, surrendered unconditionally today, and all organized resistance ended in the city and its suburbs.

The last defenders, who had been ordered by Hitler to fight to the death, laid down their arms at noon after savage infantry attacks had hammered them into traps from which there was no escape.

American troops fought their way through the centre and ran the remnants of the enemy garrison to earth on the fringes. Some 3,000 prisoners have been taken.

German communications farther south were crippled when fighter-bombers operating with the U. S. 3rd Army bombed and breached the Dieuze dam 25 miles northeast of Nancy, flooding the town of Dieuze and the surrounding countryside with a spreading shallow lake which covered the railroads and highways with two feet of water.

The Canadian forces were about seven miles southeast of the Netherlands town of Bergen op Zoom and its excellent harbor midway between Antwerp and Rotterdam.

The mopping up of Aachen was carried out by American 1st Army troops preparing for a further drive toward the Rhine.

18 Planes Downed In Two Dog Fights Over Nazi Cities

London, Oct. 21—(CP)—Eighteen German planes were shot down in two dog fights over Cologne and Coblenz yesterday by U.S. 9th Air Force fighter-bombers.

Dive-bombers claimed 228 railroad cars destroyed or damaged, 15 locomotives disabled, two barges sunk and 21 trucks shot up.

More than 1,100 sorties were flown Friday by continent-based R.A.F. and American planes. Nine American and two British fighters are missing.

One group of Thunderbolts blew a deep gap in a dam at Dieuze, 28 miles east of Nancy.

The 800-foot earthen dam was attacked by 24 Thunderbolts at 2 p. m. Each plane carried two 1,000-pound bombs and six direct hits were scored, making a breach at least 50 feet wide in the west end of the old structure, which is 50 feet thick, 20 feet high and impounded a lake of 1,500 acres.

Aerial photographs made two hours later showed water spreading across the countryside to a depth of two feet or more as far as Dieuze, enemy supply centre two miles to the east. The attack was made through intense flak, but no planes were lost in that operation.

Planes of the 19th Tactical Air Force flew more than 240 sorties and destroyed 10 locomotives, 57 freight cars and 23 trucks.

British Patrols Close in on Greek Town of Lamaia

Rome, Oct. 21 (AP) — British patrols are closing in on the Greek town of Lamaia about 100 miles northwest of Athens, Allied headquarters announced today.

German troops are believed to have withdrawn from the town. It is 65 miles beyond Thebes, which Allied troops were reported yesterday to have occupied.

Lamia is at the head of the Gulf of Lamia and beyond the historic Thermopylae Pass where the British fought a grim covering action for Allied troops evacuating Greece after withdrawal from the Mount Olympus sector early in 1941.

The Germans knocked the Tommies out of the pass late in April, 1941, but not without severe losses.

Today, the Germans were travelling at more accelerated pace in the opposite direction and the communique said British aircraft flying from newly occupied Greek airfields were harassing the retreat.

C.C.L. Not Altogether Satisfied With Press Editorial Comment on Labor

Quebec, Oct. 21 (CP)—Canadian Congress of Labor Friday night expressed mixed sentiments to the press.

The report of the education and publicity committee congratulated The Canadian Press and the British United Press for the "fair and impartial manner in which they have, generally speaking, reported major labor issues." The convention also expressed appreciation to reporters who have been concentrating on labor news.

This appreciation was not, however, extended to the majority of the newspapers themselves. Of these the report said: "All too often accurate reports from major news services have been displayed and situated in such a way as to leave erroneous impressions, while there is consistent editorial bias against labor in almost every major daily of the country, a bias which continues over into small town weeklies.

"Very often this bias reflects itself in unfair and misrepresentative attacks upon accepted and established labor objectives such as union security and nationally standard wages but is actually inaccurate. Often there is not only prejudice but ignorance. Apparently certain editorial writers, normally well-informed, do not even know the elementarly structure of Canadian labor and show this ignorance in editorials which are full of glaring inaccuracies."

The committee said it did not challenge the right of a newspaper to have its own opinions.

"It should be frankly pointed out that continued and obviously biased opposition to labor, which cannot be always wrong, is hardly an effective method of increasing public support for a privately-owned press" the report said.

CITY AND DISTRICT NEWS

PAIR WANTED HERE FOR CAR THEFT

Wanted in Belleville on charges of motor car theft, Edward Cledgett and Fred E. St. Pierre with no fixed address, were brought to this city yesterday by Provincial Constable Jack Truiasch, of Kingston. The pair are wanted here in connection with the theft of Miss Gibson's care last August. Although this vehicle was subsequently recovered, police have been searching for the alleged car thieves ever since. Provincial Constable Truiasch apprehended Cledgett and St. Pierre near Kingston last week and subsequent investigations resulted in the local charges being preferred. The pair were remanded in custody until Tuesday.

DRIVER SUMMONSED FOR EXCESSIVE NOISE

The continue. sounding of motor vehicle horns along the streets of Belleville have long since been a source of annoyance with local residents repeatedly complaining to the police department. However, late Friday night police finally came to patience's end and apprehended a local car driver, who persisted in blowing the horn of his motor car. The offender's name was registered and he will be summoned into court next week. "This practice of loud and continued blowing of motor vehicle horns has been carried to extreme in the city. This case is only the beginning and a warning to others", stated police officials today.

HORTHY IN GERMANY

London, Oct. 21 —(AP)— Admiral Nicholas Horthy, former Hungarian regent, is in Germany, Berlin's Transocean News Agency declared today.

Capt. R. Scott on Staff of Plastic Surgery Hospital in England Where Miracles of Repair Are Made

Overseas they call it the "stockroom for spare parts."

Officially it is the Canadian Army's neurological and plastic surgery hospital, said to be one of the "most wonderful institutions in the world," and until recently the only one of its kind.

The British now have a similar hospital and recently two American doctors who have been connected with the Canadian hospital left to set up an American institution.

The neurological part deals with injuries to the brain and nerves, the plastic surgery division to repairs of outer signs or damage, in most cases head wounds.

Here daily miracles are wrought with new ears, new skulls, new jaws, and even new faces.

Former Associate of Dr. Robertson.

On the staff with these modern medical miracle workers is a young Belleville doctor, Captain Russell Scott, Burlington, Ont., formerly associated with Dr. J. J. Robertson here, and who went overseas last June after receiving his captaincy in the Royal Canadian Army Medical Corps He is married to the former Miss Marion Hamm at one time associated with the administrative staff of the Belleville General Hospital.

In this hospital "somewhere in Britain" men of nearly every nation have been remade. After D-Day it had French civilians who had suffered disfiguring wounds. Nearly all its cases have been men who would have died in the last war or who would have eked out existence hidden away in horrible disfigurement.

There is the case of the corporal who had his nose snipped off as clean as a whistle. Within a few weeks, Captain Scott will slice a piece of cartilage from a rib, whittle it into the shape the corporal wants and insert it in the nose to give it firmness. The corporal wants one of those high-bridged aristocratic British noses, but Captain Scott thinks the "pug" type will suit him better.

Another lad had the calf of his leg shot away. He was given a new one—and now he can "wiggle" his toes.

New Face for Soldier.

A striking case is that of the young soldier who had almost his entire face blown off. About all that was left was the forehead and one eye, even the roof of his mouth was gone, exposing the lower side of the brain. By the time he reached hospital the brain had fungoided.

Penicillin cleared the brain infection, and surgeons under Lieut.-Col. Harry Botterell of Toronto, snipped off the damaged parts, which fortunately was not sufficient to affect his mentality. Plastic surgeons then began grafting flesh for a new face. Modellers have made new bones from plastic to serve as a framework. A plastic palate already has been formed. In a few months this boy will leave hospital to lead a normal life.

Making a new nose or an ear is a simple job and takes a little more than a month, Captain Scott states. Occasionally there is a real test of the surgeon's skill, like a man who has lost the bony structure back of the nose. They make a new bone including support for the nose out of plastic and the young soldier now takes his nose out morning and night and scrubs it like his grandfather does his false teeth. In place it is scarcely distinguishable from the real thing.

Numbered among the "amazing cures" are those soldiers who have had part of their skulls shot away exposing the brain. Sulfa and penicillin block infection and speedy operations remove damaged brain tissue. Later the plastic surgeon will fit a metal cap or plate under the scalp as additional protection.

Two wards are occupied with men who have received severe burns. Many leave with scarcely a scar, a fine tribute to the work of Canadian doctors. Since D-Day less than 26 men have died in this hospital.

Ten County Firms Exceed Quotas In Payroll Subscriptions to Loan

Once again showing leadership to the general public in the purchase of Victory Bonds, employees of 10 county business firms in the payroll savings and group payroll section of the county loan campaign have already exceeded their objectives in the Seventh Victory Loan, it was reported this morning from county loan headquarters in Belleville.

Eight of the firms which have exceeded their objectives even before the commencement of the Victory Loan campaign on Monday morning are in the payroll savings section, while two are in the group payroll. Four of the firms are in Belleville and the other six are situated in Trenton.

Repeating their accomplishment of last spring when they were first to exceed their quota in the Sixth Victory Loan, Corbin Lock Company were the first industrial plant in the county to exceed their objective in the current loan. On Thursday officials of this firm announced that they had reached 131 per cent of their objective, while Benedict Proctor of Trenton followed suit with over-subscription of 130 per cent reported on Friday.

Other county firms in the payroll savings section of the campaign to already exceed their objectives are Bell Shirt in Belleville with 101 per cent; Canada Cement of Point Anne, 126 per cent; Central Bridge, 114 per cent; Canadian Doughnuts Company, 165 per cent; Downs Coulter, 106 per cent, and Cross and Blackwell, 102 per cent. All four of the last named firms are situated in Trenton.

Firms to already "go over the top" in the group payroll section are Trudeau Motors of Belleville with 125 per cent and Trenton Dyeing and Finishing with 106 per cent of their objective reached.

Although objectives in the above firms have already been reached, taking of subscriptions will continue throughout the Victory Loan campaign, it was announced by committeemen, with plant officials intimating they expected to greatly increase their present subscriptions before the Victory Loan campaign was completed three weeks hence.

Ilsley Pays Tribute to Airmen For Leadership Shown in Purchase Of Bonds at Rally Held at Trenton

Victory Loan Salesmen and Payroll Executives Hear Minister of Finance at Air Station

Tribute to the members of the R.C.A.F. for the "leadership" shown in the purchase of Victory Bonds in the six previous loans was paid Friday evening by Finance Minister J L. Ilsley as he spoke to a combined rally of Victory Loan salesmen and group payroll executives at the airmen's mess at the Trenton Air Station.

"I fully appreciate the support which the members of the armed services have given the Victory Loan," stated Mr. Ilsley. "But then, no branch of the services know better why Victory Loans are necessary. It was they who won the first victory of this war, and it will be they who will smash the first road to Berlin in the advance of our land forces."

Introduced to approximately 400 Victory Loan workers by Mr. W. H. Ireland, vice-chairman for the county loan committee, the finance minister stated that the objective of the Seventh Victory Loan—$1,300,000,000—would not be easy and "it will be accomplished only with strenuous effort."

Make For National Unity

Victory Loan campaigns were a force making for national unity, according to the speaker, and this national unity had in no small measure been responsible for what Canada has achieved in the war, and without which the problems of peace could not be solved.

This unity, however, was now facing a fresh challenge with the people of Canada being asked to place all their available resources at the disposal of their country through the purchase of the new issue of Victory Bonds. It was hoped, he said, to make the Seventh Victory Loan the largest public borrowing operation in the history of Canada. Canadians have the money with which to turn this hope into a reality.

The minister touched briefly on the elimination of compulsory savings which had added approximately $9 millions a month to pay envelopes of people who pay income taxes. People were being asked to turn their former compulsory savings into volunteer savings.

Extra Funds Needed

Outlining the reasons for the increase in the Victory Loan, Mr. Ilsley defined the large outlays for war expenditures for the three services. "Supplies and equipment must be provided and replaced without regard to cost," he told loan workers. "That, we all know, is the wish of the Canadian people. . . no outlay is too great, no burden too heavy to carry, to bring about the end of this monstrous evil which threatened to engulf us — an evil already responsible for a world tragedy without parallel in history."

"It must be our consuming aim, or ferevent wish, to hasten the complete defeat of the forces which have brought this death, this suffering, and this destruction to humanity. That is why we are now making the supreme military effort of the whole conflict — that is why our spending is now at peak levels."

No Easing Up New

Touching on the current war situation Mr. Ilsley maintained that the nearness of the German defeat did not mean that Canada would need less money now. Even if the European phase of the war should cease before March there would not be any important immediate reduction in outlays or borrowing needs.

Problems of price control and of post-war rehabilitation were discussed by the minister. He stressed the fact that the effort required to maintain a reasonable degree of stability in price level was worth while. Cost-of-living index showed only a rise of 18 percent since the beginning of the war compared with 65 percent in the same period after the beginning of the last war.

High employment for the post-war period was claimed to depend upon three factors, all of which meant a continuous demand for the type of goods produced in Canada. First there was consumer goods, secondly, new machinery, new factories and new homes, and third, export goods. It must be recognized, however, that there is no single, simple way to ensure high employment. Plans must be made to remove obstacles to employment, and to stimulate employment, with adoption of plans to meet each situation and each difficulty.

Slogan Significant.

Plans for the future must not be allowed to divert attention from the immediate job at hand—the Seventh Victory Loan, concluded Mr. Ilsley. There was great significance in the three words of the Victory Loan slogan—"Invest in Victory."

"Think of the years of defeat, disappointment and frustration—years when only undying hope and blind confidence in our destiny urged us onward to our goal—think of all we have risked and endured to reach the day—this day—when Canadians can be asked to "Invest in Victory." These three words must inspire us to march forward relentlessly to complete the defeat of all our enemies—and, then, build an enduring peace."

Profusely decorated with Victory Loan flags and posters, the airmen's mess presented a delightful and patriotic picture for the Victory Loan rally which saw Mr. J. J. Trudeau, chairman of the county loan committee, officially welcome the guests and loan workers. Salesmen from all parts of Hastings and industrial plant directors and other workers attended the meeting. Supper was provided by R.C.A.F. personnel.

Refers to Past Successes

In expressing his official welcome Mr. Trudeau referred to past successes of Hastings county in oversubscribing its objectives in previous Victory Loans and expresed confidence that again this county would go on to greater success than before. Seated at the head table with Hon. Mr. Ilsley and Mr. Trudeau, were Group Captain Bell-Irving, commanding officer of Trenton Air Station, W. H. Ireland of Trenton, J. H. Legate of Belleville and Mr. J. Hartwick, chairman of Prince Edward county Victory Loan committee.

Throughout the dinner period the station band under the baton of W.O. E. Hancock, played soft dinner music and played the accompaniment for a period of community singing which was led by Station Warrant Officer John Silver.

Appreciation to S/L. Bell-Irving for the facilities and accommodation afforded to the Victory Loan committee was expressed by Chairman Trudeau, with the commanding officer in return wishing the Hastings committee the best of success in the forthcoming loan. Committee appreciation to the guest speaker was expressed by J. H. Legate, chairman of group payroll section.

Edward Cotton of Merchant Marine Spends Furlough in the City

The big tanker plowed her way slowly through the Caribbean fog. Miles south of Cuba a heavy mist hung over the smooth surface of the ocean. Bells jangled sharply as the veteran captain called for yet slower speed. Other craft were in the vicinity. So were lurking Nazi submarines.

Suddenly ahead the sun sparkled the light blue water. The fog cleared quickly as if lifted by a giant hand. The lookout in the ship's crow's nest looked, stared, then shouted, "Sub, off the port bow."

A half-mile away lazily proceeding in a parallel direction was a German submarine. It had been surfaced in the fog, satisfied it was safe from Allied ships. A sudden lifting of the fog had caught it unawares.

Never Seen Again.

Officers and men on its decks hurriedly scampered for the conning tower. Aboard the tanker a gun crew sprang to its battle posts. But even as the muzzle of the gun swung on its target the big undersea boat crash-dived. It was not seen again, nor did it make any effort to attack the tanker.

On the after deck of the big freighter stood junior engineer Edward Cotton, of Belleville. On his jauntily placed hat he wore the insignia of the Merchant Marine.

"That pigboat must have expended her torpedoes and was awaiting a mother ship, or the opportunity to slip into a port somewhere to replenish supplies and ammunition. It made no attempt to fire at us," Ed. said in an interview yesterday.

Answered Call.

He is one of those many Belleville lads who answered the call of the sea, and having tasted the salt air, loves it. He is home for a few weeks' furlough, and is anxious to once more feel the surge of a rolling deck beneath his feet.

It is a far cry from the rotunda of the Queen's Hotel here to the waving palms and blue water of the Caribbean Sea. For Ed. was a "bell-hop" in the city hotel prior to "joining up" with the Merchant Marine. For the past two and one-half years he has looked after the functions and wants of his engines "below" in the "innards" of tankers.

When a small boy he was mechanically inclined and this tendency was given full scope in the merchant marine. He has been stoker, oiler and is now a junior engineer, the midshipman rank of the fourth armed service.

He is a modest young man, and true to the traditions of the service that is as quiet, if not more so, than the Silent Service, the Royal Navy. He doesn't care to elaborate on his experiences in the service. That can wait until the war is over.

Meanwhile Ed. is enjoying old acquaintances here. But is won't be long before he will shoulder his worn dunnage bag and once more head for the open sea and the adventures that lie ahead.

BANCROFT

Hand Severely Injured By Cog in Crusher

Bancroft, Oct. 21 —(Special)— Bruce Sargent of this village received severe injuries to his right hand on Friday when it came in contact with a cog in the machinery of the Curran and Briggs crusher. The plant was operating on a 24-hour shift and Bruce had just gone on the day shift and was applying, it is said, a compound to the pulleys to give better traction to the carrier belt when his hand was caught. The thumb was broken in three places and the hand considerably crushed. He was attended at the Red Cross hospital by Dr. O. W. Anderson.

The plant has been crushing in a big gravel pit on Highway No. 28 two miles west of the village.

Belleville Woman Addresses Meeting

Ottawa, Oct. 21 — (CP) — Mrs. Walter Galbraith of South Renfrew, Ont., was re-elected yesterday as area chairman of the Eastern Ontario Women's Institutes at the 30th annual convention here.

Mrs. H. Warner of Mille Roches reported that nearly $11,000 was spent on war work by the institutes during the last year, an increase of $4,000 over expenditures during the previous year.

Mrs. C. Holmes of Belleville, provincial president, said women must study the marketing of farm products, for in the post-war period competition would be keen.

"Good products for good prices" should be their aim, to provide money for conveniences in rural homes, she added.

Discussing immigration, Mrs. Holmes said: "While we welcome people of other lands, we Canadians must always stand on guard to preserve our fine Canadian ideals and prevent European dissention from creeping in."

Decatur, Ill., Oct. 21 (AP) — Earl Horine bought seven rabbits but got more than he had bargained for. Ten days after the sale he took home the six does and one buck he had bought—plus 38 rabbits that arrived during the interim.

Berlin: "That Rubble Heap Near Potsdam"

(By Oscar Jacobi, Writing from Stockholm to the New York Times Magazine.)

I have just come out of Berlin. Whoever knows the city from before the war would have the greatest difficulty in recognizing the present collection of ruins in Germany's prosperous pre-war capital. The resemblance to the old city is almost nil. Berliners who have managed to retain some of their sense of humor refer to the place as "that rubble heap near Potsdam."

And well they may, for whole districts have been razed to the ground and the traffic net torn to pieces. Subway, bus and street car lines run sporadically. There is no attempt to keep up a fixed schedule. The simplest and certainly the surest way of getting anywhere in Herr Hitler's capital today is to walk, but even walking requires a great deal of the pathfinder's sense. Reaching any given destination presupposes, moreover, a thorough knowledge of the city, and finding one's way after dark is impossible.

Bomb craters and wreckage bar progress on every hand along avenues where stood the buildings that were Berlin's landmarks. This is particularly true downtown.

The housing situation, already desperate, is aggravated by the evergrowing influx of refugees from East Brussels. As fast as they come police chase these refugees out into the provinces, but most of them manage to sneak back, creating apparently unsolvable problems for the authorities.

The bombed-out and other homeless have turned to building wooden houses in the suburbs. Countless thousands of these shacks—for they are no more than shacks—already ring Berlin. To save lumber, space and manpower, regulations are that the floor area must not exceed twenty-two square metres—if it does police quickly tear the whole thing down. Official rules and regulations still are sacred in the Reich and woe betide anyone who breaks them.

With a good two-thirds of former apartment houses and tenements laid in ruins or uninhabitable, Berliners live under the most primitive conditions. Two or more families crowd together, sharing one roof, and are glad to do so. The main thing is to have a real and intact roof overhead. Many haven't.

Family life, according to civilized standards is, of course, impossible under the circumstances. Most women work in war plants. By now all able-bodied men have been drafted into the army. The outside world already knows that 16-year-olds are in this general draft but what it doesn't know is that boys down to the age of 12 have been conscripted and sent to the eastern front to help dig trenches.

The Goebbels propaganda machine presents it as a case of young fervor eagerly volunteering for front duty. Anyone who has witnessed the heartrending scenes of crying children forcibly torn from their weeping mothers knows it is a lie as horrible as it is cynical. Pale, thin, undernourished, these youngsters, who have had their nervous systems undermined from the very beginning, furnish a sad spectacle, a telltale sign of Nazi Germany's plight in the sixth year of war. Their sisters in their early 'teens meanwhile are being dragged off to war factories, and there are no exceptions.

Everyone in Berlin fears a food shortage, in fact is convinced it will come, bringing in its wake disease and epidemic. Poorly clad, insufficiently fed, forced to live in premises that would normally be condemned for cattle, working under high pressure and constantly in danger of being bombed out of existence, the average Berliner, indeed, lives a life worse than that of a slave.

There is only one penalty for loose talk—death. Thousands have been liquidated by the Gestapo this month. That parody of justice, the so-called "people's courts," works overtime pronouncing death sentences which are carried out either by shooting or hanging—the latter ignominious end deliberately inflicted by Nazi terror tribunals on so-called "defeatists." As a consequence hatred against the Gestapo and the S.S. is being intensified. I have the impression that the average German is longing for the day he can take a hand in settling the score with the Himmler crew.

French Woman Tells of Nightmarish Life in German Prison Camp

By RUTH COWAN
(Associated Press Writer)

Paris, Oct. 21 —(AP)— Because she hoped that some mother somewhere would help her aviator son, were he ever in need, a French woman of nobility took daring risks to help Allied airmen downed in France. Those risks sent her to a notorious prison in Germany for six months.

This woman, who has just returned to Paris via an internee camp, speaks about her deeds casually. But her blue eyes shine as she relates how women in France have dared grave personnel risks to feed, clothe, hide and buy railway tickets for airmen passing through.

"That's why there were so many women in that prison," she says. She was speaking of Ravensbruck, in north Germany, where many thousands of women—Poles, Russians, Czechs, French, Belgians, Norwegians and even Germans—were imprisoned. At the time she was there, she was the only American.

Now the wife of a Frenchman, she acquired American citizenship —which she has retained—by her first marriage. Her son by that marriage last heard of through the International Red Cross, was a lieutenant in the Air Corps.

Fate Worse Than Death.

"The Belgian women in that prison were magnificent," she says. "They could have been torn apart, and would have revealed nothing." This frail woman, whose hair is tinged with gray, lost nearly a third of her weight during imprisonment. She was arrested by the Gestapo, who told her: "We usually shoot people like you but we have a fate for you worse than death."

"At the end of last January," she continues, "1,200 women were collected from all over France, stuffed into cattle trains so crowded we couldn't stretch out. We were on the way four days and four nights. No water. Food was a loaf of black bread, and sausage—so decayed I threw mine away. Once we were served soup by the German Red Cross.

"We arrived in darkness at 3 a.m. We were bundled out by S.S. men, with dogs. It was freezing cold. We had to walk a half hour. When we reached the camp, the Germans screamed commands, and jammed the women into two small rooms, and left them there for days. There were no beds."

The women were given prison dress—grey with wide blue stripes, and short unlined jackets. The clothing was made of weed fibre, and had no warmth. They had no hats, and shoes were heel-less wooden sabots.

Six hundred women were housed in each barracks, with only nine toilets, 15 lavatories. Beds were in tiers, and they had to sleep two to a bed. There was no heat.

With a siren call at 3:30 a.m., they had to get up and go out for roll call regardless of the weather. The camp was run by armed German women soldiers. Food was poor, insufficient. They never received Red Cross parcels.

Women prisoners farmed, cooked, sewed German military uniforms, worked in an electrical factory

This woman relates the instance of a French woman aviator standing next to her at roll call being struck in the face by a husky German woman camp official, and having several teeth knocked out because she waved to a Polish friend.

During the last of August, she was removed during Allied raids to an internment camp, and was freed when the area was captured.

BANCROFT

Plane Crashed Into A Knoll

Bancroft, Oct. 21. (Special)—Sgt. Almer E. Churcher, 20, son of Ex-Warden J. L. Churcher and Mrs. Courcher of Bancroft, was killed instantly when his plane failed to come out of a dive and crashed into a knoll near the McLeod R.C.A.F. training school in Alberta, his parents have been informed. News of their son's death had been received earlier by Mr. and Mrs. Churcher but details were lacking.

Born in the Bancroft district, Sgt. Churcher enlisted in January, 1943, and after receiving his wings took an instructor's course at Quebec, later being posted to McLeod as instructor. Prior to his enlistment, he, with four brothers had assisted on his father's farm and dairy.

The brothers are Melvin, Gerald and Reginald at home, and Sgt. Lee Churcher, of Rockcliffe R.C.A.F. station, recently returned to Canada after service overseas.

Welcome Loan Salesmen

On Monday, October 23rd., Canada's Seventh Victory Loan will be launched and once again the people of the Dominion will have the opportunity to use their savings in the very practical way of buying bonds to support the Dominion's effort as the struggle draws nearer to the end in victory and peace. There has never been a time when the purchase of war bonds could be more effective, for victory is assured, but the home front like the fighting front has to be fully enlisted.

That this will be proven the case there is every assurance for Canadians never yet on the home front have failed to do justice to the noble cause in which the service of their sons and wealth has been necessary. As they have subscribed in the past, so they will respond to the latest call to do their utmost to invest more than ever in the Victory Loan. The campaign cannot fail to reach the minimum goal and it is everywhere believed that the participation of the people can easily exceed all expectations.

It is also a fact that the purchase of the loan serves the nation's interest in another way as it puts money to such use as will prevent inflation and curb unnecessary spending when money may well be placed in government bonds for security's sake, for what is saved adds to the strength of the home front.

Readers have read over the advertising of the National War Finance Committee which has shown the advantages of investing in the Victory Loan, especially for the post- war days when wartime savings can be of the utmost value.

Canadians will act from the patriotic motive and buy bonds because that is one of the necessary ways of supporting the Canadian war effort. War makes many demands and the lending of money to the nation is one of these ways of fighting for peace and security. At the same time they can regard the security aspect of the bond as the highest value of security and as the best reserve of wealth.

Somewhere in the not too far-off day will be victory and peace. That is being won by the sacrifice of life and limb and health of gallant men. It is also being won by the expenditure of wealth in the form of munitions and weapons which require money to provide the wheels of industry with the motive power. The heroism of the fighting forces needs no praise, it fills the heart with admiration at the courage and devotion of those in the services. On this patriotic motive the chief appeal of the loan stands.

So Canadians will decide to buy the utmost they can in bonds and so invest in victory, which is the goal of all the war effort. And they will greet the salesmen and surprise them with the amounts of their purchases of a big share in victory.

They Have Returned

Retribution is striking swiftly at Japan with mighty invasion forces landing in the Philippines. General MacArthur, who said two years and seven months ago on leaving the islands, "I shall return," has fulfilled his promise. With him is every able-bodied survivor of Corregidor, bent on making Japan pay for her crimes against justice and freedom.

The Philippines, one of the great prizes on which Japan set her greedy heart so much will be pried from the Nipponese for the invasion forces have come to drive the Japs into the sea. The story of growth of Allied power which has shown such supremacy on the sea and in the air and on the Pacific Islands which Japan had seized earlier in the flush of her depradations is to be repeated again and again until the foe is crushed and forced to relinquish every vestige of stolen territory. Japan's ill-gotten empire in the Pacific is falling away from her at a rate which the Japanese are powerless to halt.

In very truth the past successful operations show that President Roosevelt was speaking of the form of things to come when he said, "We have the will and the power to teach Japan the cost of treachery and deceit." He added that with the other Allies "we shall teach this lesson so that Japan will never forget it. We shall free the enslaved peoples. We shall restore stolen goods and looted wealth to their rightful owners. We shall strangle the black dragon of Japanese militarism forever."

The enemy is now finding treachery does not pay. It is bringing a heavy retribution and Japan will pay. "We have learned our lesson about Japan, said the U. S. President. "We trusted her and treated her with the decency due a civilized neighbor. We were foully betrayed. The price of the lesson was high. Now we are going to teach Japan her lesson."

So begins the redemption of these islands and they will have their reward in freedom as soon as the Japanese have been whipped out of the Philippines.

The invasion is the beginning of the end for Japan. Allied offensives have all led up to this latest operation. From here the way is on and on to the full exaction of the penalty from the enemy.

The Philippines were the victims of the foulest of treachery and aggression. Now these people are to have their reward in recovery of their freedom and their elevation to the high calling of a free and independent member of the family of nations—which is the very opposite of what Japan planned to do with these islands. Her plan was to bleed and rob them.

The world has looked forward to this day when the Philippines would be invaded and the powerful forces of the roused and fully armed free nations will whip the enemy from all possessions he has stolen and restore them to their peoples.

The Lesson of Aachen

Aachen has fallen, the first major German city to be torn from the Reich and Hitlerism. The gateway to the Ruhr has been unable to hold back Allied power.

Hitler here strove to show German resistance at its sternest but the Allies have countered with blows which have made short work of the vaunted Nazi defence.

The striking might of the United Nations has shown that Hitler's defences cannot withstand the hammering from Allied weapons and Allied soldiery.

Hitler's decision to fight to the bitter end has been answered with blows that his armies could not endure. The Allies have shown that they are more than a match for the German fighting machine.

Athens is Cleansed Again

(New York Times)

The Nazi flag no longer flies over the Acropolis. After a little less than three years and a half it has been hauled down. The Nazi jackboots no longer tramp the streets of Athens. Their owners have business elsewhere. They are going on a journey. They are returning to their northern homes, as the Persians long ago returned to their eastern ones. There was a glory over Athens twenty-five centuries ago, after Marathon, in the time of Pericles and Phidias, and in that hungry, disease-smitten city, where so many have died since 1941, where the barbarism of the invaders has been so hideously manifest, there is glory still.

Athens may not today contain architects and sculptors capable of fixing in stone such a concept of beauty, of dignity and of freedom as did the builders of the Acropolis. It could have them tomorrow, for we never know where genius will light upon this earth. Certainly, the Greek spirit lives forever in Western civilization, and Greek courage did not die in Greece itself. The Nazis tried to kill them both, and they have failed. It is more than the remnants of an army that now flee where once they marched in insolent triumph. Athens is free. The strong winds of freedom sweep above the hill whose ruins are more lovely, and mean more to mankind, than all the monuments to all the conquerors.

THE SEASONS

Four seasons fill the passing year
  And never one the other sees.
Winter has never known the cheer
  Of leaf and blossom on the trees.

Drab are the woods and fields and hills
  Till winter blankets them with snow,
For trilliums and daffodils
  Are charms that winter cannot know.

The springtime never sees the rose,
  Nor the rich gold of ripened grain.
Always into the past it goes,
  To wait the time to plant again.

Then softly summer slips away
  Out of the year beyond recall,
Denied the privilege to stay
  And see the glory of the fall.

Who Cares if Reich Recovers?

(An Editorial in the Port Arthur News-Chronicle)

Walter Lippmann, the columnist, in one of his recent articles, discusses the possibilities of economic recovery in Germany after the war. He says:

"Suppose that the only demand of the Allies is that Germany disarm and that she should not take any steps to rearm for the next 15 years. Post-war Germany would nevertheless be an economic ruin.

"How do we know this? We know it from what happened between 1919 and 1939—namely, that after the First World War Germany never achieved a workable civilian economy . . . During the 20 years of peace Germany was kept from an economic collapse first by foreign loans, which turned out to be grants-in-aid, and when these dried up, by Hitler's armament program. The German economy is such that it has been able to provide adequate employment only when it received enormous subsidies from Allied peoples, or when it was used by Hitler as a war-making machine. Forbidden to rearm and without subsidies from us, the present German economic structure will be incapable of employing the civilian population."

Well, it will be just too bad for Germany if its people, supposed to be the smartest on earth, are not capable of working out an economy that is not based on preparation for and the waging of war.

If that is the way it is, the Germans will have to take their place beside the Hottentots, who do not make war on the world. Who cares if there is any economic recovery in that country if the price is war which next time would most likely bring success to the Germans, in which case it is the Allied peoples who would have to assume the status of the Hottentots?

If it is to be one or the other let it be the Germans. We are not raising our next generation of boys to shed their blood to pay for German prosperity in the 20-year interval.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Plea for Gas Plant

Editor Ontario Intelligencer:

I have seen in your paper of the 11th inst a report of the proceedings of the City Council where it is stated that Ald. Pringle has given notice of motion that he will present a resolution to the Council calling for a referendum of the ratepayers of the city to bring about the confiscation of our gas plant.

As one who is deeply interested in a financial way in the gas service, I desire to make emphatic protest against any such action being taken. I consider the proposal to be grossly unfair and unjust.

There are said to be approximately 800 homes and other places in Belleville where gas services are installed and regularly used. I am informed that there are about four times that number who have electrical services. All the users of electricity would have the right to vote upon the adoption of this by-law. In such a vote the users of gas would be out-numbered four to one. Anybody can see that in such a referendum the owners of the gas services would not have a snowball's chance of winning. The gas utility would be voted out of existence just as certainly as four votes are greater than one.

I wonder if the members of the City Council have given any serious study of thought to what is involved in this proposed action.

In the first place the gas-generating plant and distributing system represents a capital investment of at least half a million dollars. The collective investment of the individual consumers would probably involve an expenditure of half as much more. By what right in justice or in equity can a majority claim the right to take such action as would render valueless the property of so substantial a minority? I have heard of such things being done in the countries overrun by Germany but would not look for such action in a land where democracy presumably prevails.

Personally I am engaged in a business where gas is a primary essential. I began rather more than three years ago. I made my investment following the assurance given me by Mr. Glen E. Thompson, who was then Mayor of the city, and by others that the gas service would be permanent. I then believed and still believe that those assurances were given in all good faith. They never contemplated that any such action as a referendum method of confiscation was possible.

Less than a month ago I purchased two large gas-ranges from the Belleville Public Utilities Commission. These must have been sold to me in the belief that I would have them to use in a continuing business.

Are the members of the City Council aware of the fact that gas is being used in practically every hotel and restaurant in Belleville? Do they know that our bakeries and several industries employ gas as an essential in their processes? Are these bakeries and industries going to be compelled to close here and seek other locations because gas is no longer available at Belleville?

What is the matter with our gas plant anyway? Other cities in Ontario in the same class as Belleville operate successful gas utilities. What is the reason that the same thing can't be done here? Guelph and Owen Sound have made their gas plants pay their way. Is there any valid reason why the same happy result cannot be brought about at Belleville?

Has our City Council ever employed the services of a really competent expert to advise them how to make our gas plant a success? By "expert" I mean some authority who really knows and believes in municipal gas services and who is not obsessed with the all-importance of electricity.

I therefore strongly suggest to the City Council that as a matter of ordinary fairness and justice, not only to myself, but to 800 other ratepayers in Belleville, they seek the considered opinion of a genuine authority on this problem and not recklessly proceed on a course involving confiscation and abandonment of valuable property, and a highly essential utility.

Signed:
Geo. De Vuyst,

concerning "criminal reaction" before undertaking negotiations with his government.

The Churchill-Stalin meetings produced an agreement between the British and Russian governments to pursue a joint policy in Yugoslavia centred around a union between King Peter's government and Marshal Tito's liberation movement until after the war when, the communique said, the Yugoslav people will have the right "to settle their future constitution for themselves."

In effect, Mr. Stalin has underwritten Mr. Churchill's previous Yugoslav policy which led to last summer's pact between Tito and Premier Ivan Subasic.

IMMUNITY TO CRI

Our family has continual colds all fall, winter and spring. At present we're stuffing ourselves with liberal quantities of vitamins A, D and B-complex, but colds continue, so we wonder if your booklet Call it Cri might help us to gain some degree of immunity or freedom from such attacks. (H. L. C.)

Whether increased intake of vitamin A is more important than increased intake of D and B-complex (these latter being the vitamins nearly everybody needs to supplement the everyday refined diet) is questionable. In the booklet (for copy send twenty-five cents and stamped self addressed envelope) I say "Vitamin A serves a specific purpose in nutrition which, in my opinion, warrants the belief that it is essential in the development and maintenance of the highest degree of immunity against respiratory infections in general. It promotes the integrity and healthiness of the mucous membranes lining the respiratory tract. Normal condition and functioning of these mucous membranes constitutes the first line of defence against invading bacteria. Therefore, particularly for young persons who show a tendency toward adenoids, enlarged tonsils, perhaps enlarged "kernels" in the neck and frequent or constant snuffles, I recommend an optimal daily ration of natural vitamin A., that is, considerably more vitamin A than one is likely to get in the ordinary diet".

I am less impressed regarding the importance of vitamin A than I was five years ago. In the pamphlet on "Tonsils and Adenoids" — for copy send stamped envelope bearing your address— which I wrote a few months ago I barely mention vitamin A, but instead I recommend a daily ration of vitamin D and vitamin B-complex to supplement the diet of every child with tonsils and adenoids.

There is another factor which the reader's letter suggests—health ignorance. As long as respiratory infections are called "colds" in the reader's household the infections will probably be spread from one member of the family to another, for if they are dumb enough to believe such illness is due to atmospheric or weather conditions they will take no precautions against peppering each other with whatever any one member of the household happens to bring home.

That's the good and sufficient reason why I urge everybody to call it cri (kree)—Common Respiratory Infection—until a specific diagnosis can be made. When you call it cri you acknowledge or recognize that it is probably communicable—and that it is only fair and decent to take reasonabe precautions against spread of the infection.

Mussolini as Seen by His Wife

(From an Article by Frank Gervasi, in Collier's Magazine)

It was late in the afternoon of July 27, 1943, less than 48 hours after Benito Mussolini was arrested as he left the presence of King Victor Emmanuel III in the Villa Savoia.

A regiment halted before the burned umber walls of the Villa Torlonia, where Mussolini and his family lived. A company commanded by a small, well built and reasonably competent young captain detached itself from the regiment and took up stations.

Some time later a message was brought down to the young company commander by a servant from the villa. It was from the Donna Rachele Mussolini, and it summoned him to her. He was ushered by a servant into a hall of the house where the Mussolinis dwelt. They didn't live in the great princely villa of Torlonia, but in a lodge or guest house. Donna Rachele was there to greet him.

"I have called you, captain," Donna Rachele said, "to thank you for the unobtrusive manner in which you have taken over your duties."

* * *

There was a brief silence. Only Rachele was poised and calm. She was born the daughter of a schoolteacher mother and of a father who ran a trattoria in Predappio, near Mussolini's birthplace. She had been a stout limbed, full bosomed, round faced scullion in her father's kitchen, where she met a wild-eyed radical named Benito Mussolini.

Then Donna Rachele talked. The words came in a tempered rush. "Mussolini is finished as a political leader. He may be finished as a man. It is reasonable and just that it is so. For he had in his blood the taint of treason. He lived by betrayal. I do not speak of his personal infidelities. These were indeed many. He betrayed the Socialists to follow Corridoni to become the tool of the industrialists who wished to crush elements in Italy for their own gain. Above all, he betrayed himself, for he was a peasant son of a peasant and of common stock. He betrayed the common people and therefore himself. Had he remained faithful to himself, he might have lived a full life as a simple schoolteacher or as the Socialist he promised to be in his early years and perhaps have helped his nation and his people. Had he done so, we might still have Bruno—"

That was all. For 21 years, Donna Rachele had been a dim figure in the background of the life of the Duce of Fascism. She never attended public ceremonies, was permitted rarely to open an orphanage or to lay a cornerstone. Now, in honest words to an unsophisticated young captain, she had opened the shutters of her existence briefly.

NUGGETS OF KNOWLEDGE

In Colonial days the lower house of the legislature of North Carolina was called "The House of Commons," while in Virginia it was called "The House of Burgesses."

The total area of the original thirteen states was 892,135 square miles.

The average area of the 48 states of the Union is 63,057 square miles. Georgia, with an area of 59,265, most nearly approaches the average. Texas, with an area of 265,896 square miles, is the largest, while Rhode Island, with an area of only 3,824, is the smallest.

The average altitude of the 48 states of the Union is about 2,500 feet above sea level. Delaware, with an average altitude of only about 60 feet, is the lowest State; Colorado, nicknamed the Mountain State, with an average altitude of 6,800 feet, is the highest. There are 41 mountain peaks in Colorado more than 14,000 feet in altitude.

The highest and lowest points in the United States proper are both within 100 miles of each other in Inyo County, California. They are Mt. Whitney, 14,495 feet above sea level, and a point in Death Valley 276 feet below sea level.

"Statutory offence" is a euphemism frequently used in referring to violations of the statutes against various sex offences. The phrase is employed especially by newspapers when it would not be good taste to mention the offence specifically. "Statutory charge" is used in a related sense.

Probably the majority of people who use the phrase "of that ilk" do not know the real meaning of "ilk." It does not properly mean kind, set, sort, class, family, race or name. "Ilk" is from Anglo-Saxon "ilc" and signifies identical or same. In Scotch "of that ilk" denotes that a person's surname is the same as the name of his estate. "Knockwinnock of that ilk" and "Keith of that ilk" mean simply "Knockwinnock of Knockwinnock" and "Keith of Keith," the names and the proprietors and their names being identical. The improper usage in which "ilk" is employed to mean kind or sort probably originated in carelessness or facetiousness and has been perpetuated through ignorance of the true meaning.

THROUGH THE DIAL SIGHT

A Weekly Column Devoted to the Activities of the Members of the Armed Services at Home and Abroad

By G. H. C.

They Were Close.

This incident happened in the last great war. Fifteen war correspondents on a tour of the front line trenches were assigned a guide by the colonel in charge of an infantry battalion on duty in the trenches near Ploegsteerte (Plug street to the Old Sweats).

In single file the war writers followed their guide up a communication trench. Suddenly the soldier stopped. "German machine gun on the right", he whispered to No. 1 correspondent. "Pass the word along". The word was passed and fifteen reportorial heads ducked twelve inches.

A few minutes later the soldier paused again. "Pillbox on the left", he whispered. Reportorial heads ducked another foot.

This went on for a half hour and by this time the press chins were nearly level with the duckboard walk in the bottom of the trench.

Then No. 1 Correspondent touched the soldier on the shoulder.

"How far are we from the Germans?" he whispered.

"About eight miles", came the whispered reply.

The correspondent straightened. "Then whatinell are you whispering for?" he demanded.

"I'm not whispering", replied the soldier. "I've got laryngitis".

He Got a Job.

One of the latest photographs to reach this desk is that of a group of ratings of the H.M.C.S. "Ottawa" doughty Canuck destroyer which assisted in the permanent dunking of a Nazi pigboat, and revenged the first destroyer bearing that name which was sunk by an unterseboten earlier in the war.

Sticking out like a sore thumb is the smiling countenance of Able Seaman Clarence Ramsey, who used to get his mail in this city and "hopped" at the Queens Hotel for some time prior to blessing the Navy with his services. Well we remember the night when a disappointed Clarence after several efforts to join the laddies in blue, finally blew up and put through a long distance call to the Minister of National Defence (Navy) and aired his troubles. A few days later Clarence was a naval rookie. Relatives of the dauntless sea-dog who looks hale, hearty and well-fed may have the picture if they contact the Dial Sight editor. No foolin'.

Vancouver, Oct. 20 (CP)—E. C. Thrupp of Vancouver, civil engineer whose hobby is predicting earthquakes, issued yesterday his estimate for 1945 showing only one brief period of possible major quakes—Dec. 10 to 20.

"The year 1945 has features tending to minimize the forces producing earthquakes," said the prepared statement.

Quebec Senior Hockey League Will Not Operate

Montreal, Oct. 20 (CP)—President George Slater of the Quebec Senior Hockey League said today the league will not operate this season.

Mr. Slater made the announcement when asked for comment on the formation here last night of an Inter-Provincial Hockey League which would include five teams, one of which was said to be the University of Montreal.

Yesterday, it was announced that the Q.S.H.L. would operate this year with teams from Hull, Que., Ottawa, Quebec and Montreal. The University of Montreal players being slated to represent this city in the loop.

Mr. Slater today declined to make further comment on the situation except that "a new senior league might be set up." Although he did not elaborate, he apparently was referring to the newly-formed inter-Provincial League organized last night and which includes Quebec Aces, last year Allan Cup winner.

The present entries in the new loop, besides Montreal, are from: Cornwall, Ont., Shawinigan Falls, Que., Lachine, Que., and Valleyfield, Que.

Officer Forced To Swim River

Ottawa, Oct. 21 —(CP)— Experiences of a Canadian officer with the famous British "Red Devils" parachute division which slugged it out for 10 days at Arnhem and then stole away were disclosed here Friday.

He was placed on a train heading for Frankfurt but managed to escape near the German-Dutch border. He wandered the countryside for five days before rejoining his unit but he gave no details and only said significantly: "The Dutch people I will never forget. They were magnificent."

WE DARE NOT REST UPON OUR OARS!

FIVE YEARS is a lot of war. It's been a long pull . . . but as we approach the shores of ultimate Victory, our fighting men have still to face the fury of the final storm.

Tired? Maybe. But Ontario workers will not lie down on the job. Now, if ever, as our fighting forces gather for the knockout blow, we of the home front must give them every last ounce of our support.

To rest is risky. We dare not let the boys down. Decide now to keep on pulling . . . seal that decision with the biggest Bond you've ever bought.

THE organized workers of Ontario have stood solidly back of our armed forces through five long years of mighty tough going. But it is not yet time for the fighting men to rest upon their laurels . . . and we must not "take it easy", either.

The Home Front cannot rest or relax one moment's vigilance before the Fighting Front's hour of final triumph. Even while the enemy runs in flight before our arms, his punishment is incomplete, our job unfinished.

This is no time to ease off. Let the boys know we're still with them. Buy as many Victory Bonds as you bought last time—and then buy still more.

First Aid Hints

Toronto, Oct. 21. —Urging adequate first aid for minor injuries, the Industrial Accident Prevention Associations have issued a card for factory workers to impress on them that "a cut or scratch neglected may mean a cut or scratch infected".

The card reads: "Practically every case of blood-poisoning is caused through neglect of small wounds. No matter how trifling a cut or scratch appears, immediate attention may save weeks of suffering for the injured person".

The following rules are given for handling minor injuries and must apply in the home as well as the plant:

1.—Remove grease from surrounding skin with benzine on sterile gauze or absorbent cotton, wiping away from, not towards, the wound.

2.—Wash wound thoroughly with mild soap and warm clear water, removing all grit or dust.

3.—Flush with warm, clear water or solution of common salt (one teaspoonful to a pint of water).

4.—Dry wound with sterile gauze pad and apply a dry gauze dressing and covering bandage.

There's nothing so graceful, so dashing, as a fur cape—when worn by the right type. A new and lovely cape is of black lamb, a very full cape, with the skins worked from neck to hemline in ribbonlike stripes.

Very exciting belts are ready to give emphasis to a simple or an elaborate dress. Satin-lined black suede is used for a belt richly trimmed with colored cut stones and gilt embroidery in an antique design.

Rednersville W.I. And Red Cross Ship 1088 lb. Jam

Diligent fingers of willing workers of the Rednersville Women's Institute and Red Cross branch have marked another fine record in their book of achievement.

Today 1,088 pounds of tasty peach, plum and raspberry jam were delivered to the Red Cross branch here as a gift from the Rednersville ladies.

For the past four years, these ladies, under the chairmanship of Miss Audrey Brickman, have annually made their "jam" contribution to the Red Cross for shipment overseas. They supply their own sugar and fruit is a contribution of themselves and neighbors.

Through their efforts tons of jam have found their way to the armed services overseas.

Women's Activities

HOLLOWAY STREET W.A.

The home of Mrs. J. Dilts was the meeting place for the Holloway Street Church ladies of the Woman's Society. Mrs. G. Dobbs, the president, presided and after a short business meeting, Mrs. P. Mott and her group took charge. The devotional program was given by Mrs. D. Hyde and Mrs. P. Mott. Mrs. F. Jeffreys sang "Let Jesus Come Into Your Heart".

Mrs. Wood, the guest speaker, took for her topic, "Our Inner Resources" and the "Awakening of Our Christian Women", which was a very sincere and inspiring talk.

Mrs. Hubbs favored with a piano solo.

Mrs. Mott and her group served refreshments.

HALLOWAY W.M.S.

The October meeting of the W.M.S., was held at Mrs. J. Townsend's with ten members in attendance. The catechism of the United Church of Canada, concerning our duty to our neighbor was read responsively. Our neighbor is, first, anyone who has some need that we can suppy, then, anyone who lives in the same community with us, and lastly, every man in the world; they all live within our Father's purpose and care. The Thank-offering envelopes given in revealed $6.46 and $3.05 from Baby Band Boxes for October. The new study book, "West of the Date Line", was introduced by the President. It is an interesting study of South Pacific Islands a part of the world which has fascinated everyone from childhood, where the Allied soldiers are fighting today and where heroic missionaries have planted the Church of Jesus Christ in countless islands.

In the business part of the meeting, it was decided to hold next Red Cross meeting on October 31. Mrs. Harry Townsend will be hostess to an afternoon meeting of the W.M.S. in November and everybody is asked to bring their Missionary Monthly subscription fees that day. Plans were also laid for a Harvest Home Supper. The meeting closed with prayer led by Mrs. J. Townsend.

Fashion Flashes

JUST PRETTY ,that's all, is the color scheme of black and pink. It is used for a handsome suit of black and pink checked woollen for three-quarter length topper and jacket, with skirt of black woollen. Collar and revers of both jacket and topper are edged with black wool braid.

It's easy to bring distinction to the simplest of frocks through the medium of a fine belt. Flat Bombay lamb, dyed a rich pink is used for a belt with back and binding of black suede. The belt is fashioned on cummerbund lines.

It's the season for pretty fur-trimmed suits. Delicate almond-green woollen makes a handsome tria buttoned onto the jacket, which has pointed lapels.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Husband Seems to be Jealous of his Own Baby

Dear Miss Fairfax:

We've been happily married for three years and our son is a little over a year old. My husband is very selfish although he wasn't the only child in his mother's family. When he comes home from the office, he wants the baby to be asleep so that I can spend all my time with him. Sometimes I believe he's jealous of the baby.

I like to be with my husband and do everything to make him happy. But he wants me to do only what he wishes, and when he says so. How can I keep my husband happy and also retain my individuality?

M. G. M.

It's amazing the number of letters along this line which come to this column. Husbands, usually the very young ones, are so possessive, they want that poor little rival—the baby—out of the way when they are around. Before long, the husband gets tired of the patient Griselda type of wife who gives in to him on every occasion, and he's apt to begin thinking how charming is Miss So and So who works in his office.

It's an excellent thing to try to please your husband, but it's too bad if a girl has to lose her individuality with marriage.

First Cousins Find Themselves in Love.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I'm 19 years old and have gone out with quite a few boys. For almost a year I've been going out with my first cousin, only because he is so far away from home and knows no one. He is stationed at a nearby camp. We have both fallen very much in love, and as he's soon leaving, we want to get married at once.

Both his and my parents object, but I know we could be very happy together. We've decided to leave it all up to you and have promised our parents we would do whatever you say. So please be sure it is the right answer. My cousin is 22.

A Soldier and a Girl.

This is a question for a physician to answer; frequently first cousins do marry, and their children are in every way normal. Again, certain mental and physical deficiencies have been ascribed to this near relationship, which is my reason for advising you to talk the matter out with the doctor rather than with one who has not studied medicine.

In ancient Egypt, the Pharoahs often married their sisters, and the near relationship seems not to have been responsible for abnormalities.

Soldier Wants to Meet Her in Distant Town.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I'm a girl of 18 and met a soldier about a month ago and he has been writing me every day and seems fond of me. He wants me to meet him in a city which is strange to us both. He is getting a furlough just so he can see me again. Shall I meet him, or forget him?

W. J. F.

It would have been much better if the soldier had agreed to meet you in your home town instead of in a "City which is strange to us both". You don't tell me in your letter how long you propose to stay, or what arrangements you have made for a lodging. Granting the independence young people assume in governing their lives today, this proposed meeting strikes me as in questionable taste.

Turned Down by Examining Physician for Army; Hesitates to Tell Fiancee

Dear Miss Fairfax:

The Medical Examiner at my draft board rejected me for the Army, giving a good and sufficient reason. But I haven't the courage to tell my girl friend about it, and she's beginning to wonder why I don't go into the service. I'm past 19, and we had talked of getting married after the war which meets with the approval of both our parents.

My fiance may lose faith in me if I tell her. At least I'm sure she won't be as nice as she has been. What excuse shall I give?

Bob.

Why not tell your girl the truth? It would be highly dishonorable to lie about the matter and give the girl a wrong excuse for being rejected. Tell her all about it, and then let her make the next move. You'll have to take it 'on the chin', the same as if you were facing the enemy. If she really loves you and you are curable, she may agree to marry you.

Feels Her Husband Stays With Her Just Because She's Having His Baby.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

After two years of marriage we're going to have a baby. But I'm so unhappy, all on account of my jealous and suspicious nature. I don't have any interest in life, feel so moody most of the time that sometimes I think I'm going insane. I imagine my husband stays with me just because I'm going to have his baby.

My husband is so popular that he is seldom at home, and of course I can't go with him. I'm afraid he will find another girl who will appeal to him, as he tells me I'm unreasonable.

My doctor says I'm to blame for all my troubles, and that I should remove the chip from my shoulder. How can I get rid of this inferiority complex?

(Mrs.) J. M.C.

Please give a little consideration to the baby you're expecting. Don't you realize that your moods are apt to affect the future life of this little one? Most of us have the urge to feel sorry for ourselves. But it must be out of the question for any woman expecting a baby, including you.

Why don't you get a few outside activities of your own? Offer your services to the Red Cross; they're always glad for anyone's help, and they have plenty to do. This is also a good way to make friends.

As your doctor says you must remove the chip from your shoulder, why not try to do it? You have a home, a husband, and are expecting a baby. Thousands of women would give a great deal for any one of these blessings. Stop thinking about yourself ,and help someone else. The best of luck to you.

The Marry Go Round

What Every Wife Knows

You can tell just how much a man's wife loves him, by his clothes—his sartorial effects. By his neatness and jauntiness. I think it was Gelett Burgess who said that.

And it is certainly true that you can tell just how much a woman's husband loves her, by the way she keeps her youthful looks and her style and smartness. For, while men and women may differ psychologically in some ways, there is one thing in which they are exactly alike. That is in their vanity—their ego—their amour propre.

The greatest beautifier, the most effective youthifier that any woman can have is a man's love and admiration. No surgeon can lift her face and no beauty treatment can make her eyes shine like the admiring light in a man's gaze when he looks at her.

He can make her feel young and attractive—or shop-worn and out of date. He can make her feel cute and frisky—or like an old horse that ought to be shot. It all depends on whether he always glances at her with warm admiration and approval, or regards her in the cold north light of indifference, disapproval, or criticism. Every normal woman knows this is true.

A woman sees herself in her husband's eyes as she would in a full-length mirror. She can feel his tender, proud, possessive look all the way across a room, even when he is dancing with another woman; or she can be painfully and acutely conscious of the fact that he is frigidly sizing her up and marking her down.

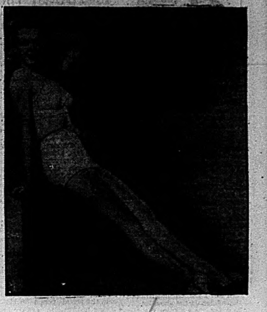
On the other hand, protecting a man's vanity and self-esteem is his wife's chief mission in life. She can fill him with pep self-confidence and self-complacency — or with doubt, fear and a bitter sense of inferiority.

It is pretty hard for anybody, especially a man's wife, to make him feel "old". Not even his arteries can do that! But a woman can make her husband feel young, courageous, ambitious and capable, so that he goes to his job with enthusiasm and tackles it with spirit and confidence in his own power.

That is why in these days, when both men and women are finding life a hard struggle and are facing such great problems, it is so necessary to chose the right sort of running-mate. The sort of mate who understands and admires you enough, to be a stimulant and a tonic to your self-confidence and self-esteem.

Every man needs a booster and a cheer-leader, whether he is in a fox-hole or a factory—and so does every woman. In fact, that is what we ALWAYS need most in marriage, although we seldom find it out, until afterward. It is the primary essential of a successful marriage.

Figuring Out Your Silhouette



Leslie Brooks is very well-proportioned.

By HELEN FOLLETT

THERE'S an old saying to the effect that a woman and a horse should be well harnessed. It flourished in the prehistoric period of the double turreted, steel riveted corset, but it is just as true today as it was then. A woman should have a trim, neat figure; if she hasn't, she should give it that appearance by wearing a correctly selected, carefully fitted foundation garment.

Designers of these garments have slick tricks up their sleeves. They know how to camouflage anatomical errors. Their models do wonders to disguise the pendulous abdomen, a common trouble with women who have never exercised, who have picked up figure defects that often come in middle life.

When bent on corset buying, go to a reliable establishment, seek the services of an expert fitter. There aren't as many or as varied offerings as we have had in the past; it sometimes happens that alterations are necessary. The woman who is well proportioned above the waist line but too spready below has special need of professional advice.

When the old time straight front corset was flung into the limbo of forgotten horrors, it was believed that, with the figure free, girls would grow corsets of strong muscles. But that has not happened. Many teen age girls have sloppy figures, mainly because they disregard correct posture and splendid carriage.

It won't do to lose interest in the matter of the silhouette. The smartest, costliest frock loses character if it is carried by the slouchy frame. A good figure is a big beauty asset. The woman who is so blessed needn't think it is going to stay that way. The musculature must be kept strong and resilient by means of exercise. Diet should be carefully watched so that expansion of the midsection will not rob it of youthful lines.

UNCONDITIONAL SURRENDER!

OUR BOYS OVERSEAS WON'T STOP SLUGGING UNTIL OUR ENEMIES HOIST THE WHITE FLAG

AND WE TOO, MUST SEE IT THROUGH UNTIL THE FINISH

● Into the last few weeks—or months—of the crusade against the Nazis, our Canadian boys overseas are pouring every ounce of their strength. We, at home, in our daily tasks, can do no less.

Gallant fighting men of every historic Canadian regiment are slugging it out to Victory—slugging, slugging, ever deeper into German strongholds. But—until the white flag droops over blasted Berlin itself—not for one moment will they relax or slacken their efforts.

We, too, at home must see it through—to the finish.

And so, proudly and thankfully, Canadians everywhere welcome the opportunity presented by the new Victory Loan. For this, more than ever, is indeed a VICTORY Loan. More than ever—every last one of us will want to play our part in the triumph—will want, in our humble way, to keep slugging it out to the end.

Victory, indeed, is "everywhere"—and today's call to us is clear and strong. "One more bond than last time" is a fighting challenge which none of us can ignore.

BILL EZINICKI WILL ADD PUNCH TO MAPLE LEAFS

Former Oshawa Junior Hails From Winnipeg and Fond of Golf

By FRASER MacDOUGALL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Owen Sound, Ont., Oct. 21—(CP)—A 20-year-old native of Winnipeg whose greatest ambition is to be able to play golf 365 days of the year, is expected to add scoring punch and fighting spirit to the current edition of the Toronto Maple Leafs in the National Hockey League.

The player is Bill Ezinicki, who began playing hockey and golf when he was nine years old and has a remarkable talent for both games. He has starred at junior hockey for three seasons and turned in a creditable performance in his one major golf tournament—The Canadian Open in which he played two years ago.

The quiet-spoken, 170-pound Ezinicki is best known for his hockey play with Oshawa Generals in the last two seasons, appearing in two Memorial Cup finals series, the club winning the Dominion junior title last spring. Previously he played with Winnipeg Rangers when that club was eliminated by Portage la Prairie, the year the Prairies went on to win the Memorial Cup.

Acquires Reputation.

During his career with the Generals he acquired somewhat of a "bad man" reputation because of the number of penalties he drew. But he doesn't know how it came about.

"I don't know what I got them for," the dark-haired youngster said. "I just got them, that's all."

In his two years at Oshawa, he was apprenticed as a toolmaker and he intends to put in the two years necessary to qualify in the trade. This year he spent four months in the R.C.A.F. and when he was discharged for medical reasons, he tried to join the army but was rejected.

Leafs obtained him from Buffalo Bisons in a deal which sent George Boothman and Don Webster to the American Hockey League club. He was Buffalo property because the astute Eddie Shore of Bisons had him placed on that club's list when he was a juvenile playing in Winnipeg.

He finds the N.H.L. brand of hockey as demonstrated in Leaf training session "much tougher than the amateur brand."

"You've got to be quicker and you've got to pass that puck faster or the other team will take it away from you."

London, Oct. 21 —(CP)— A small, elderly woman in a sombre black dress outbid several well-known trainers at the Newmarket Bloodstock sales to buy a promising yearling filly for $13,200.

Unaccompanied and almost hidden in the crush of male buyers, Mrs. C. B. Robinson quietly nodded her head to the auctioneer until the hammer fell to her final bid. The filly, by classic winner and outstanding sire Blue Peter, is a half sister to the 2,000 Guineas winner, Lambert Simnel.

Mrs. Robinson has a stud in southern England which she started after her horse, Pullover, won the Cambridgeshire classic in 1932. She has won other big races, including the Lincolnshire Handicap and the Chester Cup.

"I don't care if the filly wins a race or not," she said after the purchase. "She will be worth the money as a brood mare."

Training expenses of Freddie Mills for his losing British heavyweight championship fight with Giant Jack London a few weeks back were the most costly ever undertaken for a heavyweight bout in Britain. The exact amount hasn't been disclosed but Mills paid three sparring partners $45 each a day and in addition they had to be transported to an R.A.F. station in Wiltshire where Mills, an air force sergeant, could box with them in his off-duty time.

And just think—sparring partners could be had for anywhere from $4 to $6 a day before the war.

For nearly 30 years "Peter the Perisher," the mighty pike of Powder Mill Pond, Battle Abbey, Sussex, foiled all the wily anglers of the country. Now Peter has "had it."

He fell for a plug bait spun by a 16-year-old schoolboy, Alan Anscombe, who fought the pike for 30 minutes when his father helped haul it into the punt.

Peter weighed 33 pounds and was estimated to be 30 years old. He was 46½ inches long and had a girth of 21½ inches.

The pond, as a matter of fact, is quite famed locally for its "whoppers." The previous largest pike caught weighed 28½ pounds and was 20 years old.

Frank Furlong, Britain's great amateur rider who won the 1935 Grand National on his father's horse Reynoldstown, has been killed in a flying accident over England while serving as a lieutenant with the Fleet Air Arm. Before the war, he trained and rode his own horses. He was the son of Major Noel Furlong. During the sea hunt for the German battle cruiser Bismarck, Furlong was reported as missing but was picked up after 36 hours in a dinghy. His plane had run out of gasoline.

LONDON'S PIGEONS AGAIN

Canadian Sport Snapshots

Toronto, Oct. 21. (CP) — That westward trip of Toronto St. Michael's College apparently had excellent results in Winnipeg from a diplomatic point of view, although football followers outside the two cities still snort whenever the "East-West High School football play-off" is mentioned.

We see by the public prints that the Toronto "Irish" created a very good impression in the 'Peg, and performed some good spadework for eventual co-ordination of the rules in eastern and western Canada. The Westerners saw much good in many points of the eastern game, while Father Flanagan and his Toronto students were favorably impressed with the 10-yard blocking rule of the western game.

Let the youngsters get together more often, and they probably will effect the understanding their elders have been striving to reach for years.

Leaf Prep School:

The Ontario Minor Hockey Association is practically a training school for Toronto Maple Leafs, with no less than 11 former minor players trying out at the Owen Sound Camp. Besides the three Chin boys, there are 'Teeter' Kennedy of Port Colborne, Eric Prentice of the Ontario Juvenile champions in Timmins two years ago, Ken Schultz of Preston, Pat Boehmer and Don Bauer of Kitchener, via Toronto St. Mike's, Dean McBride and Eric Unger from St. Catharines' Lions, last year's Southern Ontario Juvenile "A" winners, and Ted Sloane of Copper Cliff, Northern Ontario Midget titlists.

Casual Clips .. ..

Here's a new name for N.H.L. hockey, at any rate. Al (Montreal Herald) Parsley, praising Bill Durnan's network for Montreal Canadiens, said Bill would rank with the best goalies of modern times because he was a standout "in the year of the Red line; when they first got that new hockey game set to swing time. It was boogie-woogie shinny last year". Well, that explains some things. . . In Vancouver they're talking about gathering together any stray civilian pucksters who have been refused permits to play hockey in the U.S. Names mentioned prominently are Doug Bentley of Chicago Black-Hawks, Brian Hextall of New York Rangers. They would be given gen-oo-wine war jobs in Vancouver and given a split of the gate receipts, it's said.

N.H.L. Training Camp Notes

(By The Canadian Press)

Toronto Maple Leafs return to their former training grounds of the last four seasons at St. Catharines next Tuesday for an exhibition game. The following night coach Hap Day takes his squad to Maple Leaf Gardens for their annual Kiwanis game.

Nick Metz, the hard wheat farmer from Wilcox, Sask., has arrived at Maple Leafs training camp at Owen Sound after an absence of two seasons from the N.H.L. Only Bob Davidson, Sweeney Schriner, Reg. Hamilton and Lorne Carr were qualified to shake hands as old teammates.

Montreal Canadiens will file their list of players with the N.H.L. today (Saturday) and it is expected the names will be available to the public Monday.

Canadiens will carry two goal keepers this season, five defencemen and 11 forwards. Coach Dick Irvin predicts his squad will be able to hold its own against any of the others, all of whom have said they are stronger this year than last.

Bill Durnan, Canadiens' sterling netminder, has been reported sufficiently improved from a shoulder injury to permit him to play in an exhibition game at Ottawa tonight.

Manager Lester Patrick is keeping mum about "doings" in the New York Ranger training camp at Winnipeg, and Art Ross, coach of Boston Bruins, hasn't divulged his 1944-45 team yet.

Detroit Red Wings are all set for the coming season with 11 members of last year's team on the roster. Wings' have some of the league's most gifted goalgetters on their lineup.

Tunney Throwing 'Mad Russian' At John Katan

Apparently Promoter Frank Tunney is out to give Ivan Rasputin, the mad Russian and exponent of the famed Russian bear-hug hold, the well known wrestling business Wednesday night local grappling fans manhandled the "Bearded Russian" before he lost a decision to Billie Watson. Next week Skipper Tunney is tossing the "hairy one" to the ravages of John Katan, the Palermo Panther.

Katan is the only wrestler to gain the decision over Frank Sexton in two years of the Ohio Powerhouse's stampeding American rings. Now Katan has been called upon to tame Rasputin and here Marse Tunney has a perfect bout — two ring villains tearing at each other. This bout also has the appearance of an "international situation". Katan is of Ukrainian-Canadian birth while Rasputin was born in Russia 32 years ago and today rates himself as the best wrestler in the world. Next week will answer that question as Katan entertains such egotistical ideas of his own.

Both are big and powerful wrestlers in their own right. Katan weighs something like 241 pounds, while Rasputin tips the beam at 253, so the only person to worry much will be the referee. After all 494 pounds of human flesh crashing over your head is nothing to flirt with.

Pierre DeGlane meets Babe Zaharias in the semi-final, Zaharias being a brother of the great George Zaharias of Salt Lake City. A guaranteed preliminary opens the show at the Hume Arena.

It may be their last chance to go home before they head for the fighting fronts . . . but blocking back Earl Bruhn decided to stick around on the advice of his brother Milt, Colgate line coach . . . When Milt was scouting the Nittany Lyons, he told Earl: "You owe that much to Penn State." . . . CASUAL COMMENT

by K.J.C.

Judge—Did you see the shot that was fired?

Witness—No, I only heard it.

Judge—That is not sufficient evidence. You may retire.

As the witness left the stand and while his back was turned to the judge he laughed out loud. At once the judge recalled him for contempt of court.

Witness—Did you see me laugh?

Judge—No, but I heard you.

Witness — Insufficient evidence, Your Honor.

Very Vicious, What?

The kindly and loveable Connie Mack is, by his own admission, a very vicious character. During the World Series someone happened to mention that Connie had never been ejected by an umpire in his long association with the game.

"I certainly was, by golly," he protested. "It was dreadful. Let's see. It was back in 1896 and I hollered at the umpire something terrible. He ordered me out of the park and I wouldn't leave. So he sent for a policeman and I wouldn't leave even then. Finally he sent for the sergeant and, goodness gracious, I just had to leave."

That disorderly person, Connie Mack, is a menace to baseball and it's high time Commissioner Landis did something about it.

Schulte the First.

Inaugurated in 1911 with the Chalmers Award, Frank Schulte of Chicago was first named as the most valuable player in the National League, followed by Larry Doyle, New York, 1912; Jake Daubert, Brooklyn, 1913; and Johnny Evers, Boston, 1914.

When the league resumed the selections in 1924, Dazzy Vance of Brooklyn was picked; then Rogers Hornsby, St. Louis, 1925; Bob O'Farrell, St. Louis, 1926; Paul Waner, Pittsburgh, 1927; Jim Bottomley, St. Louis, 1928; and Hornsby, then with Chicago, again in 1929.

Discontinued by the National, The St. Louis Sporting News took up the selections, the line beginning with Bill Terry, New York, 1930, and continuing with Chuck Klein, Philadelphia, 1931 and 1932; Carl Hubbell, New York, 1933 and 1936; Dizzy Dean, St. Louis, 1934; Floyd Vaughan, Pittsburgh, 1935; Joe Medwick, St. Louis, 1937; Ernie Lombardi, Cincinnati, 1938; Bucky Walters, Cincinnati, 1939; Frank McCormick, Cincinnati, 1940; Dolph Camilli, Brooklyn, 1941; Morton Cooper, St. Louis, 1942, and Stan Musial, St. Louis, 1943.

Looking Backwards

The other day James "Jim" G. Haggerty, toolmaker at the Corbin Lock Company, received a newspaper clipping from relatives in Glasgow, Scotland. The clipping was taken from the 32-year-ago column of the Scottish paper and related a story about a track and field meet held at Queens Park F. C. during which Jim won the big event of the day — the mile run. Mr. Haggerty lived at nearby Irvin, Scotland at the time and ran the mile in four minutes 20 seconds against a field of 135 starters. Over 100,000 spectators saw the day's events in Glasgow's great athletic centre. In his younger days Jim Haggerty was a middle distance runner of note and is still the proud possessor of numerous medals and trophies, the prize of which is his trophy when he won the Scottish mile run at Hampden Park in 1912. Jim says he thinks Gunder Haegg, the great Swedish runner will some day set the four-minute mile record.

The Reason Why

Wrestling fans were wondering why Phil Lawson and not Frank Tunney, appeared in the wrestling ring here Wednesday night to caution Ivan Rasputin and Referee Bert Maxwell about the old "tack racket" business the Russian Bon had been practicing previously. The answer is merely that Tunney had to make a flying trip to Montreal in an endeavor to protect his boxing rights at the Maple Leaf Gardens. Everyone knows Eddie Quinn, Montreal promoter, stole the return bout between Dave Castilloux and Joey Peralta away from Tunney and the Gardens. Of course Castilloux strenuously objected to Toronto officials, which gave Quinn his IN. Tunney had an ace up his sleeve, however, but had to be in Montreal to protect his trump play. He has Lulu Constantino and Carmen Patta, two top lightweights signed and wanted to match one of them with the winner of the Castilloux-Peralta go, which naturally was good promoting. In the meantime Tunney has signed John Katan to meet Ivan Rasputin here next week and this is another Tunney trump card—two arch villains of the ring together.

LESSON NO. 511

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Threebidphobia leads to fourbiditis. By the time you start running a temperature with three bids, you begin feeling four bids coming on.

When you speak of a three bid, you mean an opening of three in a major suit (spades or hearts). And three in spades or hearts is a one-less-than-game bid.

Another one-less-than-game bid is an opener of four in a minor suit (diamonds or clubs). And all these one-less-than-game bids in suit are similar in most respects.

Openings of three in a major and openings of four in a minor have the same aims, ambitions, desires, and hopes. They depend on exactly the same values and replies from partner.

Of course, one starts with three in a major and the other with four in a minor. But so much alike are they that when you mention a three bid you mean three in a major or four in a minor.

An opening of three in a major suit shows a quite solid spade or heart suit of seven cards or more. Also a sure outside trick. And such a hand expects to take eight tricks.

An opening of four in a minor suit shows a quite solid diamond or club suit of seven cards or more. Also a sure outside trick. And such a hand expects to take nine tricks.

We thus find that only one difference exists between an opening of three in a major and four in a minor. Three in a major expects to take eight tricks; four in a minor expects to take nine tricks.

Study this hand:

♠ None
♥ A
♦ A K J 10 8 4 3 2
♣ K 9 8 4

This hand contains a quite solid diamond suit of length and a sure outside trick. It contains nine tricks. Open with four diamonds.

Be ready to show what partner should know.

CAT-AND-MOUSE

It has been bolstered by promises of relief and broadcast exhortations to hold out as their resistance is vital to the battle for the fatherland.

Earlier the Nazi-minded garrison was told that on Oct. 15 a great secret weapon would be unleashed, which would drive the Allies from France, Belgium and Holland. At the same time Field Marshal Von Rundstedt would smash through Holland with a massive tank force and relieve the garrison. But it didn't happen.

Although outside supplies for the garrison are restricted to nightly flights by one or two Luftwaffe planes, the food situation is good. When civilians were evacuated from the port Oct. 4, the Germans allowed them to take cattle, sheep and poultry with them but everything else in the town—bakeries, meat stores and all that was left in the shops, was seized.

They have plenty of mortars and guns including two 280-mm. railway guns, but there are indications that their supply of shells is none too plentiful after the intense barrages they have been laying down on the Allied positions since the Allies encircled them during the first week of September.

With complete control of the floodgates, the Germans have flooded large areas around Dunkerque as the British did during their fighting retreat and each road above water is covered by 88-and 75-mm. batteries.

The commander of the garrison is a 50-year-old admiral whose specialty is port destruction.

In Manhattan

By MICHAEL O'MARA
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Oct. 21 —(CP)— Opening of two mystery plays marked activity along the Broadway front this week. One is better than average; the other—"Meet a Body"—dull in the extreme.

"The Visitor," by Kenneth White produced by Herman Shumlin at the Henry Miller Theatre, is a tight-knit psychological drama, reminiscent in some ways of "Angel Street," but with less emphasis on human interest.

Action concerns a long-lost son that returns to his mother and her household of slightly sinister relatives. Because the son is heir to a sizeable legacy, and because his mother and former friends have difficulty recognizing him, doubt is established as to whether he really is the wanderer returned or an imposter.

Suspenseful resolution of this question makes for three reasonably thrilling acts. It's a play worth seeing but not one to place high on one's "must" list.

Jean Thompson, St. Thomas, Ont., contralto, scored a hit with her Wednesday evening concert in the Town Hall. As in her two previous New York appearances, critics were generous with their praise, and tossed about such gladsome phrases as "invariably clean-cut," and "rich and velvety."

The Scottish-born Miss Thompson has a powerful voice which needs careful control to avoid what might appear an over-enthusiastic delivery. This she achieved with fine flexibility, particularly shining in a group of florid operatic aria.

Style Note: She wore a low-cut, bepearled, blue-velvet dress to go with the voice, and added to the ensemble a bustle and a dazzling pair of ear-rings. Without pretending to be an authority in these matters, one might suggest that Miss Thompson looks just about as luscious as she sounds.

By HYE BOSSIN

The rowdy Alan Hale is one of Hollywood's prize husbands, he and the Mrs. having celebrated their thirtieth anniversary recently. They were married in New York's famed Little Church Around the Corner, actors' haven, which is to be the subject of a movie. At the time they were being co-starred in "Cricket On The Hearth." Mrs. Hale was Gretchen Hartman then.

Hollywood has many a trick to make short persons seem taller—built-up heels, vertically-striped suits, cuffless trousers and so on. One executive really went all out along that line. The ceilings in his house are lower and furniture is proportionately smaller, so that his surroundings fit him physically.

• • •

An usher leading two persons down a theatre aisle had to tell them to quit talking audibly.

"What!" exclaimed one. "Don't tell me that the film has put everyone to sleep already?"

• • •

A headline in a Hollywood trade paper reads "Actors May Copyright Faces." It isn't as silly as it sounds. An actor's face is the main part of his fortune. Now that television is on the way screen actors want payment for any of their films that may be televised. This extra use of films will bring in more money and the actors want their share of it. Writers and musicians are making the same point.

Jackie Cooper was found not guilty of those charges . . . Laird Cregar plays the smooth killer again in "Hangover Square," this time composing concertos between murders . . . Strange that the late Aimee McPherson, Hollywood evangelist extraordinary, never entered pictures. Born on a farm near Ingersoll, Ontario, she had been an amateur actress and later, when her fame had spread, made several appearances in the USA's leading vaudeville houses. She had a great magnetism that would have found a perfect outlet in the movies.

Henry MacRae, the oldest active producer in Hollywood, has passed on at 68. He had been making films since 1909 and was known as the leading producer of serials.

Like so many of Hollywood's leading lights, he was born in Canada. He came from Stayner, Ontario, to the medical school at the University of Toronto but joined a stock company in the Queen City before graduation.

Some of the films he made were "The Beast of Berlin," "The Cat and Canary," "Charlie's Aunt" and "The Cohen and the Kellys."

Folks who thought they saw a pink elephant at a Hollywood party weren't mistaken. It was a grey one painted over as part of a birthday celebration . . . One film city book store was caught at a cheap racket. The owner was writing the names of stars on the flyleaves and people would snap them up . . . Van Johnson used to be a bookkeeper and clerk . . . A film star was asked what he was doing these days. "Moving pictures," he replied. "I'm in something like the same line," said the enquirer, "moving planes."

Largest Ocean Convoy in History Arrives Overseas

London, Oct. 21 (CP)—The largest ocean convoy in history—167 ships carrying more than 1,000,000 tons of food and war equipment and covering an area of nearly 26 square miles—recently arrived from North America without loss, A. V. Alexander, First Lord of the Admiralty said today.

Royal Canadian navy vessels commanded by Cmdr. G. H. Stephen in the frigate H.C.M.S. Dunver escorted the convoy which took 17 days to cross the Atlantic.

More than 35,000,000 tons of shipping have been convoyed since the war began across "that grey battleground," Mr. Alexander said.

Turning to the Pacific war the First Lord said: We hope to place in the Pacific a fleet capable in itself of fighting a general action with the Japanese navy.

"...the movement of at least a part of that vast fleet and its mighty attendant train is already under way."

8TH ARMY

On both sides of highway 65, between Florence and Bologna, British, American and South African troops nevertheless managed to capture more high ground.

British troops advanced into Cesena from the south. They captured about 150 Germans.

Set Up Bridgehead

British forces also drove out northwest of the town and set up a bridgehead across the Savio river at the southern road bridge which was blown up by the retreating Germans. Farther south Canadian patrols found the Germans holding the river bank in strength.

Polish troops, again fighting with the 8th Army after their part in the break-through of the Gothic Line, made considerable advances in the central mountain sector, capturing Civitella Di Romagno and Galeata.

The Mediterranean Allied Air Force flew more than 2,000 sorties yesterday in support of ground operations and lashed targets in Germany again.

Allied naval units bombarded shore installations on the French-Italian frontier, working in co-operation with ground troops.

Little Benny's Note Book

My cousin Artie stayed at my house all night last night on account of today being Saturday and no school, and this morning we got awake at the same time, Artie saying, Heck.

G, that's just what I was thinking heck about? I said, and Artie said, I was just having a peach of a swell dream and I woke up and found out it was nothing but a dream.

Gosh, that's funny, that's just why I was thinking heck, I said. What did you dream? I said, and Artie said, I dreamed some men were fixing the street and they dug a ditch all a ways the whole distance from my house to school, and it rained the hardest it ever rained and filled the ditch with water so I could swim all a ways to school and home again, and after I swam to school I changed from my bathing suit into regular clothes, but after I swam home I didn't even have to bother changing. Why, what did you dream? he said.

I dreamed I had panes in my insides, I said. They were just small panes and not enough to make it a bad dream, and my mother thought they were growing panes and she took me to the doctor, and the doctor said they weren't growing panes at all, they were shrinking panes, just the opposite, and he said I had to eat a whole box of chocklits every day whether I felt like it or not, and I was still feeling like it when I woke up. Heck, I said, and Artie said, Oh well, today's Saturday, anyways, and we might never of found that out if we'd stayed asleep.

G, that's right, 3 cheers for Saturday, I said.

The result being we both yelled 3 cheers so loud that ma came running up to see if anything was a matter, not being much surprised when she found out nothing was.

He paid tribute to Dean C. H. Mackenzie, honored by a Queen's degree, and his successor as President of the National Research Council.

Succession of Tasks.

He concluded: "Life is a succession of tasks to do to which you make what contribution you can and then move on in the process. It is inevitable that you will acquire a deep affection for the men and women with whom you work in common purpose day by day; that you will have an anxious concern for their continued welfare and opportunities and for the institution through which you serve.

"And when the time comes to go elsewhere, he who can hand over to a friend whom he can trust is very fortunate indeed. I count myself doubly fortunate, for twice in recent years this condition has been fulfilled for me, as I have handed over our army to Crerar (Lt.-Gen. H. D. G. Crerar) and our research council to MacKenzie (Dean MacKenzie); in both I have complete confidence; both I trust implicity."

CHAPTER 3

The boys of Alma Mater never had any trouble in the direction of the fair sex. Their partners were always the loveliest to be found anywhere, their affairs were always eagerly anticipated and invitations were sought and welcomed. And the only requirement necessary for admittance into the one Frat that really counted, the one that embraced nearly every member of the college classes who was worth his salt, was that the applicant be vouched for by two other members as being a capable 'wolf', a term that had practically originated in the Smoker of Alma Mater but which was to grow to North American dimensions.

And on a night such as the Football Dance, when the wolves howled, none howled louder than James Riley. He took Margaret Kelley as a matter of course and convenience, for he had been taking her out all that Summer and Fall. It was taken for granted that the stags would cut in, and in fact he was relying on it. Margaret was a good-looking girl, in her own way, he reflected as he pulled the flivver to a stop at her door, gave an imperious toot on the horn and then ran lightly up her stairs. Very nice in fact, but a fellow shouldn't get in a rut. Go steady too long and you were dated and missed out on a lot of the fun. 'A drip going steady is a drizzle' the Froshes had it, and this was 1939 when boys took pretty much for granted. They had yet to experience the hearthreak of leaving home, embarkation leaves Overseas, letters that were numbered that they scanned eagerly, trying to draw the last ounce of meaning and affection out of them, trying to assure themselves that she was still true, still loved them, was waiting for them.

Peg's mother opened the door, a lovely contented-looking woman, and ushered him proudly into the living room where Mr. Kelley, glasses, slippers, smoking jacket and pipe, was perusing the evening paper. It was so ordinary and typically middle-class and conventional and nice and reassuring that Jimmy took it quite for granted. It was the same as his home.

"Evening, Mr. Kelley," he said politely and settled down for the usual wait for Peggy.

"Evening Jimmy," Mr. Kelley said, laying down his paper. He switched the radio on and an announcer said, "We interrupt this program to bring you the latest news bulletins..." and Mr. Kelley listened intently like all the older people were doing in 1939 while Jimmy slumped on the chesterfield and looked at his hands and smoked a cigarette, bored and resigned, like all the younger people were when their elders listened to the news in 1939. When the newscast was over Mr. Kelley switched the radio off and Jimmy groaned inwardly for Glenn Miller's music had resumed and he wanted to hear it very much. Mr. Kelley didn't seem aware of dance music. Instead he puffed for a few minutes and then remarked, "Well, Jimmy, looks like we've got another war on our hands." Jimmy winced again. That was in 1939 when the war was very far away and was just a nuisance that had to be put up with. It was certainly none of his business.

"Yes sir," he answered dutifully, praying for the sound of Margaret's little slippers dancing down the stairs. Mr. Kelley regarded him intently. "It's tough on you fellows. You haven't had a chance at life yet, and now it looks very much as if you're going to have to get into uniform pretty soon."

Jimmy hardly heard him. Things like that were best taken lightly, he assured himself. "I hardly think it'll come to that, sir," he said, and just then Margaret started down the stairs.

"I sincerely hope not," Mr. Kelley was saying, but Jimmy hardly heard him. He had risen and stood facing the doorway. It was getting so every time he saw Margaret he felt this way, excited and somehow as if he were seeing something sacred, for although an accepted member of the Wolf Frat, he was eighteen and Margaret was a very lovely girl. She danced into the room, excited, vivacious, her fair complexion flushed a little, her eyes merry, her blonde hair swirled up but loose and Jimmy's breath caught for an instant. He forgot momentarily that he should be breaking off with Margaret, if not completely then at least dating other girls, and he stood staring at her, awed. She had never seemed so lovely as she did then in a swirling fluffy pink dress, the outer skirt full and flaring tulle over diaphanous silk, his six yellow roses over her breast, slanting up towards her shouder, her wide generous mouth, cherry red and moist, smiling at her father and at him shyly. Had Jimmy glanced at Mr. Kelley he would have seen more than fatherly pride. He would have noticed a mistiness behind the spectacles as Mr. Kelley looked at his daughter, small and lovely and innocent, and at her escort, straight, slim, and dark, both very young.

"Gosh you sure knock a fellow's eyes out," Jimmy said.

Margaret laughed gaily. "You're a very handsome escort too, James," she said, and walked over and kissed her father on the cheek.

"Good night father," Mr. Kelley pretended to glower.

"Don't stay out late," he said as solemnly as he could and then smiled as Margaret kissed him again.

"Don't be old-fashioned, father," Margaret laughed, and then turned to say goodnight to her mother who had just come in from the kitchen.

"Night mums."

Mrs. Kelley smiled contentedly. "Good night dear,— have a good time." Margaret and Jimmy both laughed and promised they would and then with Jimmy leading her by the hand they left.

After they had gone, Mr. Kelley sat silent, puffing his pipe slowly while Mrs. Kelley busied herself around the room, straightening things, doing the innumerable small repairs that always have to be done in a house that has children, is lived in. Finally she stopped and came over and sat on the arm of his chair. She ran her fingers through his hair.

"Little thin on top, Mr. Kelley," she said, laughing. He chuckled, too, and pulled her down onto his lap.

"Small wonder, Kate," he said then, seriously. "It's a wonder I've got any left. Raising a family is just about the toughest proposition a man can tackle." They talked briefly then about the children, Bobby's marks at school, Johnny's trip to the dentist, Catherine's sudden growing up and boy-craziness. Then Mrs. Kelley smiled at him and kissed him lightly, stared into his eyes. "It's worthwhile though, isn't it, Frank? I mean you've got something to show for your work and you are satisfied, aren't you?"

"Couldn't be happier," he told her gravely. He put his pipe on the little half table that stood against the chair and took her face, still lovely and peaceful with the beauty that had captured his heart when he had returned from overseas after the last war, in his hands. "But I worry lately a lot." A shadow crossed her face.

"You mean the war?"

"Uh huh."

"Oh, it's not going to be like the last time, is it Frank? I mean they're so young..."

"Yes, they're young — and I'm wondering what we've let them in for. I'm beginning to be afraid we didn't make such a very good job of it after all."

"Oh, Frank, you did your best at any rate. But what's going to become of them?" He stared into space and said slowly, "I don't know, Kate. They're just youngsters, but I'm hoping they will do all right. I'm practically certain they will. They're a pretty flighty bunch right now, but I'm quite sure they've got the stuff underneath, I don't think we'll have any lost generation this time."

The dance was in full swing when Jimmy and Margaret arrived and they ran up the stairs of Big Hall, greeting friends at the door. It was in Big Hall, one of the most hallowed buildings on the Campus, the one in which old Cyrus had delivered his Commencement address in 1901, when after twenty-three years of struggling, debating, shrewd business and downright hand-shaking he had persuaded the City Fathers, the big dozen St. James and McGill streeters, the bigger half dozen Fortunes that our town needed a University and had got it. It was also in Big Hall in 1915 that old Cyrus, on his last legs as a Frosh at the time had remarked, had told the assembled student body that classes would cease in all save Engineering and Med for the duration. In it in the Fall of 1939 was held the last Football Dance for the second duration, but hearts were light, there was really something to celebrate, and very little to be sad about.

A subscription would take care of Circle Lunch with very little trouble and with less than a dollar out of the students' pockets... it was well worth it. The war? That was just about the last thing in the world any of them were worrying about as the crowd began to assemble around eight-thirty. More battered jalopies pulled up in the driveway to Big Hall with '29 Fords in the majority, which were easy on the pocketbook both as regards initial cost and upkeep, giving something like thirty miles to the gallon as Gus McDermott was fond of pointing out, but with a goodly scattering of borrowed and shiny family automobiles in evidence too. Laughing boys and girls descended, walked into the light of the big stained glass and wrought iron lanterns that flanked Big Hall's entrance. It was Fall but still warm and the students had dressed Summer Formal. The girls wore flowing dresses with bright corsages, the boys in white coats, black trousers dark splashes of deep red carnations on their white lapels, sleek dark heads.

Inside the hallowed rafters of time-darkened oak were hung with the traditional drapes of Alma Mater, maroon and gold, the stag line of Froshes and Sophs started forming near the bandstand and music started. The dance was on. Couples wove patterns across the floor, the girls in their colorful dresses of red and fluffy pink, of tulle, and organdie, and jersey silk that swirled and swung to the latest steps of their stalwart and gleaming partners, for dancing received as much attention as did football at that time, and close shorn male heads leaned closer to loosely curled, long bobbed, or swinging pageboyed blonde or brunette or redhead to catch the latest gag, whisper a not-so-shy compliment, angle for an invitation to pursue the matter further.

They had hardly started dancing when Gus McDermott, always the MC, climbed onto the bandstand at the the conclusion of a number and held up his hands for silence.

"Fellows and girls," he cried. There were yells of 'Yeah Gus and a spordic attempt to break out in a cheer, for feelings were still running high and that afternoon's victory combined with a dance that was going well, beautiful girls, and the exhilaration produced by more than one flask in the glove compartments of the cars parked outside made the crowd enthusiastic to the extreme. Gus' voice, husky from his efforts as cheerleader, rose above the clamor, calling for silence.

"Please men," he called. "Hold it a second. You can cheer after I've given you a few reasons." A few desultory catcalls followed his remarks and then practical quiet ensued.

"Fellows and girls," Gus continued. We're here tonight to celebrate the victory of old Alma Mater in securing the Dominion Championship after six long years of trying." More cheers. "Inasmuch as this will probably be the last Football season for the duration..." he was interrupted by loud Groans, "All right men, I'm sorry I can appreciate your feelings, but there's a war on..." and there were more catcalls. That was in 1939 before the thing that had put a stop to football at Alma Mater had also reduced her male student body from six hundred to a mere handful of hardworking Med students and Engineers.

"Seeing as how we just got the Championship in time," Gus continued when peace had been restored. "I think a special vote of thanks is owed to this year's team, every member of it, even Sutton." There were laughs at that, for Spike Sutton, big handsome, easy-going, had been on the bench for all but five minutes of the season's play. He had come to be known as Domecko's Dark Horse. But following the laughs, under Gus' direction and the timing of his flailing arms there burst forth the loudest and most heartfelt cheers that had ever resounded under the venerable rafters of Big Hall. The team, with shouts of encouragement and hilarious cheers from the floor were made to mount the bandstand. Big Punchy Kidd, Eddy McDonald, Ronnie Hyland, Ray Curran, Cuz et al, all of them with markedly similar characteristics, big, easy moving, some of them with the slightly pigeon-toed walk that marks the footballer, big of shoulder, hair short, they all walked up and stood grinning bashfully while Gus continued, And an extra great big hand for the guy that really saved our University... Jimmy Riley... come on kids, a tence was unnecessary and ungreat big hand." But his last senheard for bedlam broke loose as Jimmy, slim, his face lean and aquiline and dark from where Margaret was standing with some of the other players' girls... waved briefly and then ducked his head quickly when the storm of cheering broke out.

Only then did the crowd let them go and resume dancing. And from then on gaiety was unconfined. Jimmy pushed through the crowd and grabbed Margaret's elbow finally, swung her out onto the floor.

"More fun," he said. Margaret smiled at him.

"Some ovation you got." Jimmy laughed, and tried to stop the pounding of his heart that came with the sudden awareness of this girl. It had never struck him as it had tonight.

"Gosh, you sure are lovely tonight, Peg." He swung her so the pink gown flared out and her silver slippers twinkled as she followed his steps, her arm along the shoulder of his white coat, her fingers at his neck. She gasped as he swung her again and clung to him more tightly. He looked at her face again and at her lips and she saw he was serious, saw it quickly as was her fashion or the fashion of a girl in love.

"You're the hero tonight, Jimmy," she remarked then, quickly. "And certainly a nice-looking one too," she added, and then lowered her eyelids shyly. Gosh, she is in love with me, I'll bet, Jimmy thought and he tightened his arm around her waist and found himself wishing it was so, fervently. He wanted her to. He could feel her come closer to him, feel her fingers caressing the hairs at the nape of his neck, feel her breathing quickly against his cheek. He contemplated telling her there and then that he loved her, thought better of it as he saw big Sutton weaving his way across the floor to cut in.

"The wolf pack is closing in," he said lightly, though he was chagrined. Margaret looked into his eyes, timidly. "How about turning this lone wolf down," Jimmy muttered, suddenly not wanting any cut-ins.

"Oh, Jimmy, I couldn't."

He frowned as Spikes's hand descended on his shoulder.

"I'll be right back, Jimmy," Margaret whispered, her eyes showing her hurt as herwords went unheard in the rush of his own feelings, at one moment full of love for her now rudely interrupted. And simultaneously, hurt a little at the way Margaret graciously accepted Spike's cut-in was the desire, like a small boy, from whom he was not so far removed that Fall of 1939, to show his independence his nonchalance. And smarting in the jealousy of first love unintentionally slighted, he was obsessed with the predominating desire to get moving, show her he wasn't at loose ends — and then he saw the redhead. He had never seen her before and she must therefore be new and worth investigating. Nor did she seem to be one of the crop being introduced continually by the Froshes. This was different. He watched her dancing with Punchy Kidd, who that afternoon had made the hole for Jimmy to start his memorable run through; and he noted the tall body, the lovely long legs outlined through the soft clinging gown as she followed Punchy's confusing steps without missing a beat. And he saw her red hair, not carroty but burnished copper under the dull orange lights from the high chandeliers of Big Hall. When the next of the pack cut in, Jimmy had Punchy by the elbow before he had cleared the floor.

"Who's the glamor?" he asked, for that was the year smart sayings were on the upswing and before it had been discovered there was a difference between smartness and corn and that the line was thinly drawn. Punchy had an honest open face, the nose slightly bent and flattened from football, crinkly fair hair that was almost white on the top where it was always in a tight series of waves that looked as if they were artificially marcelled. One of the favorite gags in the Smoker, up until it was discovered just how tough Punchy was, was to remark that his sisters, of whom he had five, certainly must have spent a lot of time on his hair last night. He always laughed. In fact he was laughing most of the time, even when there was no joke in the air, and he was always vague. That was the opening for calling him Punchy and it had stuck.

Now, lighting a cigarette at the sidelines, with his eyes still on the redhad he grinned vaguely, his shoulders hunched, big inside a somewhat battered white jacket.

"Why, surely you're not interested in that, Jimmy. I thought you liked 'em blonde and plump."

"I like 'em female," Jimmy replied. "What's her name?"

Punchy grinned. "I dont want you to say I didn't warn you, Jimmy. She's strictly from the North Pole. Iceburg type. And besides she's tooken. She's in Arts. Enrolled late." Jimmy shrugged impatiently.

"Don't give me that. They're all taken for that matter. It's up to us to untake 'em and give 'em new experiences." Because that was in 1939 when boy-meets-girl was smart and frequent and was never very serious, because the war was still very far away.

Punchy grinned vaguely again and trickled more smoke through the nostrils of his flattened nose and kneaded the knuckles of his his big hands. "Name's Verna Foster, very nice, and very inaccessible."

Toronto Livestock Interests Want Embargo Lifted

Toronto, Oct. 21 (CP)—Livestock interests represented by the Toronto Livestock Exchange are again appealing to the government at Ottawa to lift the embargo against shipments to the United States as the only course by which the accumulation in the country can be cleared out without the producers suffering heavy loss.

Following a meeting of the exchange committee today the exchange sent the following telegram to Agriculture Minister Gardner: "Ontario farmers greatly incensed over present conditions. Cannot immediate steps be taken quickly to permit Canadian cattle exports to United States? Over 2,000 cattle unsold on Toronto market and hundreds of farmers now pressed between congested markets and immediate winter weather forcing movement of cattle. Only quick action will avert heavy loss to Canadian farmers. Would also assist our war ally."

It is disclosed at the market that the better quality of cattle have moved out to packers and butchers at a normal tempo but in recent weeks cows and stockers have accumulated. This weekend there are about 800 cows of the canners and cutters type held over at the market and some of them are said to have come in three weeks ago. This accumulation is being bed hay which costs $35 a ton and therefore the loss to owners is steadily increasing. Farmers, it follows, cannot take up stockers until they get rid of the herds they now have for the butchers.

Fewer Cattle Bought.

Figures given out at the stock yards indicate that packers purchased fewer cattle on the Toronto Market in September than in September, 1943 and the explanation given was that the packers were doing more buying direct from the farmers than usual. Commenting on this suggestion, J. S. McLean, President of Canada Packers said it was incorrect to assume that they were doing more buying direct from the farmers. "If we are going into the country to buy it is because the right type of cattle is not coming to the yards," said Mr. McLean He added that good cattle are not plentiful in the farming districts.

Dealers point out that the quota of 200,000 head of cattle which Canada may ship to United States markets this year is available if the Federal Government will give its consent. Priories in the United States markets are three to four cents a pound higher than on Canadian markets with only two cents of a duty and costs of about three-quarters of a cent to surmount. Along with the extra price the shipper would received the benefit of the exchange premium. Altogether, dealers point out, the shipper would get an average of $15 per head over the Canadian Market for good beef cattle. So far the argument against removing the embargo is said to be the fear that prices would advance here to something like parity with U. S. prices and thus disturb the Canadian price ceiling.

CHASED BY RUGBY SQUAD

Chicago, Oct. 21 (AP) — A gunman in flight after an attempted robbery ran through a lot where school boys were practicing football. As their coach blew his whistle, and shouted: "Let's get him!" the squad started in pursuit. But before they could get close enough to tackle the man he ducked into a store—and into the arms of a city fireman who held him for police.

Young Veterans To Launch Loan At the Capital

Ottawa, Oct. 21 — (CP) — The great green plaza before the House of Parliament is today focal point of inauguration ceremonies of Canada's $1,300,000,000 Seventh Victory Loan.

Young veterans, back from the battlefronts and using telephones, will assign relatives or sweethearts to launch nine war and supply ships on ways across Canada—ships possibly destined for service in the Pacific.

This conclusion might be drawn from Finance Minister Ilsley's recent speech at Sault St. Marie, Ont., when he said:

"We shall require large sums of money for the Japanese stage of the war. The end of German hostilities will not reduce our war expenditures very much until after several months. We cannot stop the huge war machine and turn it in a new direction overnight."

Shirley Temple to Appear.

The veterans, representing all three services and the nine provinces, will be welcomed back to Canada by the pretty, young, movie miss, Shirley Temple, speaking on behalf of the Dominion's school boys and girls.

The main address will be given by Prime Minister Mackenzie King who will be introduced by Ottawa's Mayor Stanley Lewis. Mr. Ilsley and Navy Minister Macdonald will also speak briefly.

The loan itself has already been launched among the members of the armed forces overseas and civilians will start subscribing in a three-week campaign, beginning Monday, for a minimum objective $300,000,000 above that of the last loan when a total of more than $1,407,576,650 was collected.

Long-distance Launching.

The long-distance launching ceremony will see a veteran from each province instruct a member of his family or his sweetheart to send ships down the ways from Pictou, N. S. to Vancouver. The crowd will listen in to the telephone conversations through a public address system.

The lineup includes:

Seaman Anthony Kalichak, Dauphin, Man., will tell his sister Mrs. Elizabeth Astle, in a Port Arthur, Ont., yard to launch the Royal Navy minesweeper Pluto.

FO. Paul Jean Roy, D. F. C., Moncton, N. B., will tell his mother in a Midland, Ont., yard to launch the sea-going tug Rockwing.

Pte. Louis d'Orsonnens, Montreal, will tell his sister, C. W. A. C. Lieut. Henriette d'Orsonnens, in a Montreal yard, to launch the 10,000-ton cargo ship Portland Park.

Lieut. William Howe, Ottawa, will tell his mother Mrs. C. D. Howe —wife of the Munitions Minister — in a Toronto yard to launch the Royal Navy minesweeper Myrmidon.

A 10th ship also will be launched. It is the 126-foot Canadian Navy Minesweeper Pine Lake which will slide down the ways at Honey Harbor, Ont.

Death Toll Mounts As Fire Rages Into Second Day

Cleveland, Oct. 21 — (AP) — Wreaking the greatest devastation in Cleveland's history, a multi-million dollar fire burned into its second day today in a 50-block east side area, its death toll undetermined.

Resulting from a series of thunderous explosions yesterday afternoon in the East Ohio Gas Co.'s $6,000,000 liquid gas storage plant, the holocaust's toll in 12 hours soared to at least 36 dead and 30 missing.

An estimated 3,600 persons were made homeless by flames cascading on the heels of blasts which sent tongues of fire towering to a height of 2,800 feet. Possibly 10,000 others were evacuated from yet-undamaged homes because of utilities disruption and the danger of further blasts.

The identified dead were all of Cleveland or nearby towns.

Fire Chief James E. Granger estimated damage at "between $3,000,000 and $5,000,000," but added the estimate probably would be revised upwards. He said the blaze might continue most of the day.

Choke Nearby Streets

Families from the stricken section choked nearby streets, most of them carrying children or what few possessions they could grab.

Adj.-Gen. Donald F. Pancoast of Ohio ordered 500 Cleveland State Guards and naval militiamen mobilized to patrol the burned area and protect property from looters.

The first blast at 2:50 p.m. C.D.T. (3:50 p.m., E.D.T.) yesterday was believed to have occurred in one of three spherical liquid gas storage tanks, part of East Ohio Gas Co.'s property at E.61st St. and the New York Central railroad tracks. The plant was built to store gas for peak period use and was the first of its kind in the United States.

3 Gas Tanks Blown

The three gas tanks were the centre of a Roman candle display as balls of fire shot into the air. Manhole covers and debris hurtled to the height of four-storey buildings when nearby gas mains added their explosions to the inferno.

More than 50 private and service ambulances sped between the disaster scene and Cleveland hospitals which had been placed on an emergency basis. Red Cross refugee centres were set up in nearby schools, the Army supplied cots and thousands of homeless slept in gymnasiums and recreation halls or wandered from one centre to another, seeking missing relatives and friends.

"TIRED" ALL THE TIME

She felt miserable—draggy—low in vitality—lower in spirits. She hadn't thought of her kidneys, until a friend suggested Dodd's Kidney Pills. At once she took Dodd's. The "washed out" feeling was soon replaced by clear headed energy and restful sleep. Headache, backache, lassitude and other signs of faulty kidneys disappeared. 112

100,000000TH SHELL AVENGES DUNKERQUE

A few weeks ago Munitions Minister C. D. Howe was presented with a replica of the 100,000,000th shell produced in Canada. At the same time the 100 millionth projectile itself, together with 99 other shells, were being fired at the Nazi garrison defending historic Dunkerque. Each 25-pounder shell was stuffed with 100 leaflets, describing Canada's achievements in the production of weapons of war and its huge reserves of food, which will help feed Europe's hungry mouths following Hitler's defeat. The above photographs, just received from overseas, show Private R. J. Travis, of Listowel, Ontario, stuffing the 100 millionth shell with the leaflets (left) and displaying (right) the inscription chalked on the shell, which reads: "To Adolf—The 100,000,000th shell from Canada! ."—(Canadian Army Photo.)

The War Today—

Cracking of Siegfried Line Seen, New Problems Now Face Hitler

By LOUIS P. LOCHNER
Substituting for Dewitt Mackenzie
Associated Press War Analyst

The cracking of the Siegfried Line, which now seems a certainty, poses the problem for Adolf Hitler whether to declare industrial and historical centres like Cologne, Coblenz, Mainz, Duisburg, and Dusseldorf open cities, or whether to doom them to inevitable destruction in the pattern of Aachen.

These cities, as far as I could ascertain before I left Germany in May, 1942, are not fortified in the sense in which Aachen was a veritable citadel. The vaunted Atlantic Wall was intended to be the first line of defence; the westwall or Siegfried Line the second. Both were considered impregnable. It was a rude shock to the German people to see the Atlantic Wall pierced so rapidly.

Siegfried Line Outmoded.

They have had a little more time to accustom themselves to the fact that even the Siegfried Line is outmoded in view of the stupendous development of Allied fire-power.

It is at least doubtful whether Hitler and his general staff have prepared really effectively beyond these two fortifications systems. When I last visited Cologne, Coblenz, Mainz, Duisburg and Dusseldorf, the only visible defences were the garrisons and numerous anti-aircraft positions. There were none of those pill-boxes, dug-outs, "panzerwerke," or major fortresses such as we saw on the Rhine from Karlsruhe to Switzerland.

Along the upper Rhine, the Maginot and Siegfried Line were opposite each other. From Lauterburg on, the Rhine becomes a purely German river.

Doubt as to Tertiary Line Along Rhine.

There have been stories about a Tertiary Line of defence along the Rhine. Going by what I saw in 1941 I doubt whether a formidable system has been constructed on the right bank in the region beginning, roughly, at Mainz and extending to Wesel or Cleve. Besides, that would not help Mainz, Coblenz, Bonn, or Cologne, all of which are on the left bank.

Capital Closeups

By JAMES McCOOK
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Oct. 21 — (CP) — Government spokesmen are talking more about price and salary controls than they have for a year. They say the successes of Allied arms has caused considerable pressure for the easing or regulations which hold prices and wages down to the level of 1941, but that if they are relaxed inflation is sure.

Authorities said that early this year there had been something of a lull in protests against price and wage control, with general public acceptance of the regulations. Since 1941 and early 1942 the public had become accustomed to them.

But soon after D-day public restlessness became evident, with suggestions that controls might be relaxed, even before final victory.

"A government booklet issued the other day said that pressures tending to force up the cost of living continue to threaten the soundness of the Dominion's wartime effort.

"It is perhaps not unnatural, however, in the sixth year of war, that a sense of the individual responsibility for maintaining a stable economy should need re-stressing," the booklet said.

If concessions were granted manufacturers and distributors, farmers, wage earners and salaried people the whole stabilization structure would collapse.

"We must shoulder our burden and fight on until complete victory is safely within our grasp."

Thorough: In the army they tell the story of a group of research workers who spent 154 days testing five varieties of shoelace in every type of footgear before making a final choice, having in mind such essential problems as the efficient tying of shoelaces in sub-zero weather.

Cool: Accustomed as they are to airplanes, Ottawa officials tell with relish the story of the Arctic ice collected at Aklavik, near the shores of the Arctic Sea, one morning and used for cocktails in Edmonton that night. A 1,100-mile ice delivery.

Drumhead: The R.C.A.F. Lachine, Que., band often plays for returning airmen arriving at the Ottawa station from overseas. LAC. Bill Sharpe of Toronto beats the big drum and as he thumps steady time keeps an eye open for celebrities. On the white hide surface of the drum he has nearly 100 signatures of famous people like Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt, Sir Thomas Beecham and many a famous airman besides.

H.M.C.S. 'BELLEVILLE' OFFICIALLY ADOPTED

E. Prussia Highway Centre of Goldap Captured

Lieut. J. E. Korning, R.C.N.R., twenty-six-year-old commanding officer of the corvette "Belleville" who officially "accepted" the sponsorship of the vessel at the adoption ceremonies held on Sunday.

Above is pictured Navigation Officer, Lieut. J. L. Barrett-Leonard, of British Columbia. Lieut. Barrett-Leonard is a naval veteran of this war and a popular officer with the crew.

Here is junior officer and anti-submarine executive of the "Belleville," Sub-Lieutenant G. Garner, the only Ontario officer aboard. He comes from Stratford, Ont., and has served in the navy for the past three years.

Impressive Ceremony Marks Acceptance of Comforts Supplied by Our Citizens

Her battle flags flying, the Blue Ensign of her service and country fluttering from her forepeak; the White Ensign of her famous parent navy proudly staffed aft, the H.M.C.S. Belleville, latest corvette addition to the Royal Canadian Navy, was officially adopted by this city at an impressive ceremony in Kingston on Sunday.

Her traditional grey merged into the white of her North Atlantic camouflage formed a nautical background for the gay colors of her ceremonial flags and bunting. The trim "hornet" of the sea was dressed for her official "coming out" party.

Thousands of people crammed the jetty of the Canada Steamship Lines dock off Ontario Street to get a first hand view of the trim little warship. Yet more thousands took advantage of the opportunity to inspect the corvette during the "open house" hours of 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. A large number of Belleville residents, late in arriving, were disappointed. The navy was true to its traditions. No sooner had the ship's bell rung six bells, (three o'clock) than all visitors with the exception of the Belleville Corvette Committee and other representatives were ordered ashore.

Last Word in Corvettes

Her ship's company standing smartly at attention on her decks, a brilliant October sun shining down on a colorful assembly and with the crack naval band of the St. Hyacinthe training centre playing the famous nautical "Anchors Aweigh," the "last word" in corvettes was adopted by this city and "accepted" by her youthful commander Lieutenant J. E. Korning.

Efficiency marks the ship and her crew. Officers, immaculate in the famous blue and gold of the senior service, turned individual hosts for the occasion. Up "for'ard" the muzzle of a four-inch gun poked itself seaward. Oerlikons, and other armament were in position. Gun crews eyed their "babies" with pride.

Deadly looking depth charges lay in their racks aft. The afternoon sun glinted from the bayonets of naval guards. The "gangway" was bedecked with bunting. "Below" on the jetty milled a curious crowd, pushing, crowding in their efforts to get aboard.

The Navy was not fooling. A few minutes past three the ship's decks were clear. On the bridge set up on the "port quarter", broadcasting officials readied themselves for the official ceremonies. Lady guests crammed the bridge proper. A public address system carried the ceremonies to a packed jetty. On the air hundreds of residents of this city received a first-hand word picture of the adoption of their naval protege.

Official Party on Scene

On the bridge and the deck was the official representation of the City of Belleville. The Corvette Committee headed by Chairman J. B. Boyce were special guests of the ship's personnel. With them were municipal, civic, political and other high ranking residents of Belleville. Veterans' organizations, I. O. D. E. chapters, and other prominent war organizations were represented.

High ranking naval officials were present. Minister of National Defence for Naval Services, the Hon. Angus MacDonald in a personal letter to Mayor Harry Rollins, expressed his regret at being unable to attend. "I have heard with great pride" the Minister wrote, "of the splendid efforts of the citizens of Belleville as shown in their interest in this corvette. I should like to express to you and your committee and your citizens, my personal thanks for the kindness and generosity which you have shown to the ship and its men."

A tense silence fell over the assembled crowd as the voice of the radio announcer opened the official broadcast. Somewhere a baby whimpered. A low-flying bomber roared low in salute. Below, the ship's company stood rigidly at attention.

Address by Committee Chairman

Following a brief description of what had already occurred, the announcer introduced Mr. J. B. Boyce, chairman of the Corvette Committee. Mr. Boyce's address follows.

"Before presenting the first citizen of the City of Belleville to this audience there are a few things I should like to make known in connection with the HMCS Belleville Fund, which as you all know was and is a fund of money or its equivalent, established by the citizens of Belleville and the surrounding district to provide comforts, entertainments, relaxation and conveniences for the men who man the ship bearing the illustrious name of Belleville, and so, Lieut. Korning, my remarks are chiefly addressed to you, the Commanding Officer, and to the members of your crew.

From the very outset the members of the HMCS Belleville committee were of the unanimous opinion that no ship in the Royal Canadian Navy, nor in any other Navy, should be quite so well

The above picture was taken on Saturday, June 17th., on the occasion of the launching of the corvette "Belleville." Mrs. Harry Rollins, wife of Mayor Harry Rollins, officially named the proud corvette when she crashed the traditional bottle of champagne on the ship's bow. Present are Mayor and Mrs. Rollins, and Mr. T. G. Bishop, general manager of the Kingston Shipbuilding yards, and friend.

ARMY OVERSEAS NEAR MINIMUM LOAN OBJECTIVE

Officials Looking for the Individual Canadian to Guarantee Success

Ottawa, Oct 23 (CP)—First reports on Canada's big $1,300,000,000 Seventh Victory Loan drive started coming in early on this first day of the three week campaign and showed an insurance company had subscribed $15,000,000 and the army overseas was already nearing its minimum objective.

With an objective of $100,000,000 greater than any previous loan, the National War Finance Committee said they were looking "for the individual Canadian to guarantee the success of the loan."

The 150,000 workers canvassing individuals are aiming at a total greater than the 3,077,000 applications which brought $1,407,000,000 in the Sixth Victory Loan.

The seventh loan seeks $60,000,000 from individuals and $700,000,000 from special names, the latter category including business and industrial organizations, insurance companies, pension funds, unions, railway and other brotherhoods, provincial and municipal governments and wealthy individuals.

Statement Given.

The biggest single subscription today came from the Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada. W. H. Somerville, Vice President and General Manager of the company, announced the purchase and declared:-

"While the subscription is a large one, it is no greater than might reasonably be expected, since the Dominion has such urgent need for all the money every company and every individual can spare in order to meet war expenditures. The purchase will bring the company's holdings in war loan and Victory Bonds to a total of over $100,000,000."

Other large purchases announced today were the Cockshutt Plow Company, Limited and subsidiaries, Brantford, Ont., $1,000,000 and the Robin Hood Flour Mills Ltd., of Montreal, and Moose Jaw, Sask, $1,100,000.

First subscription from a fraternal organization was that of the Canadian Order of Foresters at Brantford, which signed an application for $800,000.

Many Applications.

First official and comprehensive report from the Canadian Army overseas showed a nine-day total of $6,726,350 posted against a total objective of $8,000,000. This included

Report U.S. Orders Copies Hun Bombs 'For Defence Study'

New York, Oct. 23 — (AP) — The Herald Tribune says in a Washington dispatch that the War Department has contracted for the production of from 1,000 to 2,000 copies of the German V-1 robot bombs with the indication the U. S. is preparing to use the "buzz bombs" against the Japanese homeland.

War Department sources emphasized that the V-1 robots are being produced solely for "defence study and experimentation," the paper added.

Dayton, O., Oct. 23 — (AP)— Germany's robot weapon — the flying bomb was duplicated at Wright Field 60 days after parts collected from duds which fell in England arrived here, the Air Technical Service Command reported yesterday.

Maj.-Gen. Bennett E. Meyers, A.T.S.C.' Deputy Director, said, however, the weapon "is not a copying job because we have no interest in a weapon which destroys at random."

6 ALLIED ARMIES POUND TIGHTLY-DRAWN DEFENCES

Aimed at Opening the Eventual Cracks That Will Permit Smash To Berlin

By WILLIAM FRYE
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Oct. 23—(AP)—Six Allied armies pounded the tight-drawn German defence band from Holland to Switzerland's border today with an unceasing pressure aimed at opening the eventual cracks that will permit a smash to Berlin.

The rain of blows was not yet a grand co-ordinated offensive, but it was intended to hammer the enemy line ever thinner and to mask the timing and place of the main attack.

The assault was on against the shrinking south Schelde pocket 40 miles west of Antwerp, the Breda box north of Antwerp, the hard-held doorway from Aachen, the upper entrance of the Saar valley, and the sharp-cloven Vosges passes.

The British 2nd Army, striking in three columns on a 12-mile front from the western side of its Holland salient, drove to within three to five miles of the prize communications hub of 's-Hertogen-Bosch.

The Canadian army swept on from Esschen on the Netherlands-Belgian border, 19 miles north of Antwerp, after an 11-mile advance in two days, and hammered methodically toward Roosendaal, four miles ahead.

West of Antwerp in the Schelde pocket Canadian forces captured Breskens and Fort Frederik-Hendrik, a mile farther west, an old fortress modernized by the Germans. On the south side of the pocket, the Canadans took Schoondijke, pinching the Germans into a canal-sliced area of only five by eight miles.

Mile East of Duren

The U.S. 1st. Army pushed a mile east toward Duren after its capture of its first major German city, Aachen, and was clearing the enemy from the area around the village of Wurselen, three miles northeast of Aachen.

A Berlin broadcast said the 1st. Army seemed to have completed its regrouping, brought up "vast" tank reinforcements and could be expected to attack at any moment somewhere along a 16-mile front between Geilenkirchen and Stolberg.

The front from Aachen to the Vosges was a rain-soaked mire, and clouds at tree-top height also made an immediate offensive seem unlikely.

The American 3rd. Army restlessly poked an attack at the Germans toward the Upper Saar Valley, capturing Bezange La Petite, 19 miles east of Nancy, and fighting in Moncourt, 19 miles from the Saar.

Fight Under Difficulties.

The Germans fought under difficulties, caught in the rear by a bombing which broke an old 800-foot earthen dam two miles southeast of Dieuze and flooded the Seille Valley for ten miles.

The American 7th. Army also wedged deeper into the approaches to the Vosges passes northeast of Epinal beyond capture Brouvelieux-es and Bruyeres.

The British drive was reinforced by the jump-off of a third column at midnight from the south side of the Zuid Willemsvaart Canal, southeast of S'Hertogenbosch.

Gain 4,000 Yards.

This attack gained 4,000 yards by daylight, reached the outskirts of Schijndel and cut the Schijndel-Boxtel road about five miles south of S-Hertogenbosch.

The other two columns, striking out yesterday east and northeast of 'S-Hertogenbosch, were about three miles from that hub at the nearest points.

The chief German stronghold in the Schelde pocket was now at Cadzand on the coast. Demolitions in the Oostkerke area farther south indicated the Germans were about to withdraw from that area.

In the centre of the long west front, troops of the U.S. 3rd. Army were in action in the Metz sector, with fighters and fighter-bombers supporting the ground operations by attacking enemy transportation. A bitter struggle still was raging for the town of Maizieres Lesmetz.

DOUBLE TRIUMPH RACKED UP BY CANADIAN TROOPS

Carry Breskens In Schelde Pocket By Storm and Seize Esschen on Border

By ROSS MUNRO
(CP War Correspondent)

With the 1st Canadian Army, Oct. 23 — (CP Cable) — Canadian troops fought today in the streets of Schoondijke, German strongpoint in the fast-diminishing Schelde pocket, and there was an unconfirmed report that this town three miles south of captured Breskens has been captured.

(A London dispatch said Schoondijke has been captured.)

Fort Frederik Hendrik, a mile northwest of Breskens, has been isolated by other Canadian infantry and fighting was going on today inside the ancient fort which was modernized by the Germans as one of the defences guarding the mouth of the Schelde Estuary which is the key to the port of Antwerp.

These developments followed a double triumph racked up Sunday by powerful forces of the 1st Canadian Army, during which Eastern Ontario troops carried Breskens by storm and other Ontario troops on the front north of Antwerp seized Esschen on the Belgian-Netherlands border, 19 miles north of Antwerp.

Numerous Fires

In the western side of the pocket there were numerous fires and explosions, indicating the Germans are blowing up stores and installations before withdrawing nearer to the North Sea coast.

Across the Schelde Estuary from Breskens, one enemy gun battery still was active at Vlissingen (Flushing) on Walcheren Island. The other two batteries in the area were silent and may have been knocked out by attacks by R.A.F. bomber command aircraft.

On the sector north of Antwerp, the Canadian forces have strengthened their positions around Esschen. The Germans have launched no strong counter-attacks, although one force did hit out against British formations on the right flank. In this action, the British forces knocked out three tanks and believed they got two more.

No Sorties Sunday

The Tactical Air Force did not fly a single sortie Sunday in support of the Canadian Army because of a heavy fog that clung to the ground in that area near the Holland-Belgium border.

With the elimination of Breskens as a strongpoint, Cadzand, seven miles to the west and about two miles inland, now is the principal enemy holding in the pocket. The pocket has been reduced still more by Canadian forces which crossed the Leopold Canal at Oostkerke, six miles north and slightly east of Brugge (Bruges).

Eastern Ontario Infantry smashed the concrete and steel hinge of the Germans' second defence line in the Schelde estuary Sunday by capturing Breskens and then swept on half a mile into the ancient fort of Frederik-Hendrik from which enemy guns had been blasting the Canadians by day and night.

Forty miles to the east, other Canadian armor and infantry rapped a brilliant 11-mile advance which began when the offensive opened Friday morning, by a surprise night drive of four miles which took them clear into the bomb-shattered town of Esschen, four miles south of Roosendaal, on the Antwerp road.

Large Bag of Prisoners.

The superb night attack in inky darkness at Esschen caught the Germans unawares and brought a bag of several hundred more prisoners. Five hundred enemy troops were taken in the first 24 hours of the offensive.

The Canadian general commanding the force which drove on Esschen up the main Antwerp-Roosendaal highway praised the infantry for a "really magnificent job."

"It was the good old reliable infantry that did the trick again," he said. "Our sappers worked with them in the pitch darkness clearing mines and booby traps on the roads . . . The enemy mined and booby-trapped trees and the sappers did a wonderful job in cleaning them."

Deep Penetrations In German Lines Are Acknowledged

Russians On Arctic Sea Near Border of Norway

London, Oct. 23 — (CP)—Russian troops have captured the East Prussian highway centre of Goldap, 12 miles inside Germany, and have broadened their offensive along the entire eastern boundary of the province, the German communique said today.

"Deep penetrations" in German lines between Goldap and Suwalki were acknowledged.

The Germans said the front now was 150 airline miles long from besieged Memel, northernmost German claimed city, and Augustow in the Suwalki sector at the southeast corner of East Prussia.

Near Norwegian Border

At the extreme tip of the eastern front, the Russians on the Arctic Sea pulled up to the border of Norway on a wide front within striking distance of the Norwegian iron export harbor of Kirkenes, a German submarine and air base posing a constant threat to the Murmansk and Archangel convoy routes to Russia.

Far to the south, where the Russians were less than 130 miles from Austria and 180 from Vienna, Moscow announced victories both in Hungary and Yugoslavia. Sombor in Yugoslavia, a place of 32,000 and a communications centre 95 miles northwest of liberated Belgrade, was toppled. So was Nyiregyhaza, Hungarian city of 56,000, close to the Czechoslovak border. At captured Baja on the Danube, the Russians were nearest to Austria and Vienna.

Penetrations Acknowledged

Wide penetrations of East Prussia were acknowledged by Berlin, but Moscow remained silent on the campaign which the enemy has reported for a week. German broadcasts said the Russians had pulled up on both sides of the rail centre of Tilsit, a city of 50,000 on the Niemen river where Napoleon and Czar Alexander humbled Prussian pride in 1807 by signing a treaty taking away Prussia's provinces west of the Elbe.

German broadcasts said Russian attacks were general along the entire eastern boundary of East Prussia, extending "beyond Suwalki southward as far as Augustow."

Euboea Island North of Athens Cleared of Nazis

Rome, Oct. 23 (AP)—The large Aegean Island of Evvoia ((Euboea), adjacent to the Greek mainland north of Athens, has been cleared completely of Germans, Allied headquarters announced today.

The island is a mountainous stretch of 115 miles and 33 miles at its greatest breadth. It is separated from the mainland by a narrow channel, the northern part of which is known as the channel of Atalant.

Dispatches from Athens said the island's chief city, Khalkis, surrendered to a combined force of British and Greek Patriots and that a small number of troops left behind in a German evacuation were taken prisoner.

The Germans pulled out of the island leaving 250 men holding Fort Gouves on the northeast coast, the Athens advices said.

The strategic North Aegean island of Lemnos has been occupied by the British and all of the Cyclades group was reported freed today as German forces on the mainland continued their flight through northern Greece.

Setizure of the port of Mudros on the south coast of Lemnos, which guards the entrance to the Dardenelles, was announced yesterday in a Royal Navy communique.

Allied headquarters announced that six months emergency civilian supplies for Greece, amounting to about 780,000 tons valued at $120,000,000 had been provided for partly by the United States and the remainder by Britain.

Heroic Dogged Fight and Good Transmission Facilities Reasons for Newsplay

Toronto, Oct. 23 —(CP) —Canadian operations in Belgium and Holland are being prominently reported in British newspapers, Gillis Purcell, Assistant General Manager of The Canadian Press, said yesterday on his return from a two week visit to Britain and the Canadian front.

Although Canadian troops comprised only about one-half the 1st Canadian Army, whose task was to open up the valuable port of Antwerp and to liberate Southern Holland, the British Press was giving the Dominion almost full credit for the job.

Aside from the Canadians' heroically dogged fight for the Schelde estuary, Mr. Purcell cited three reasons for the news-play. First was excellent transmission facilities from Canadian Army headquarters to London. The others were the number of British and American war correspondents covering the Canadian and the fact that dispatches of The Canadian War correspondents in the area were distributed in Britain by both Reuters and The Associated Press.

New York —(CP)— The exploits of Canada's fighting men in Holland took front-page play today in New York's morning papers.

The New York Times gave the Canadian drive in Holland a six-column flare headline: "Canadians seize port in Schelde drive" over a two-column story largely devoted to the Canadian and British action. The New York Daily News, a tabloid, shouted: "Canadians win key port." The New York Herald Tribune subheadlined the Canadians on Page 1, with the tabloid Daily Mirror featuring the Philippines invasion.

Kinsmen Prepare For Hallowe'en

Something new in the line of Hallowe'en entertainment was introduced to the children of Belleville last year when they combined their conventional fun with the principles of helping others. It was the Kinsmen "Shell Out" Hallowe'en that gave the kiddies an opportunity of enjoying themselves and also practising that greatest of all virtues—charity.

Again this year the Kinsmen Hallowe'en "Shell Out" party will be held at the armouries prior to which householders will be asked to purchase "Shell Out" tickets at one cent each. These tickets will be sold by the school children prior to the big night. There is really something of interest for the kiddies this year as two bicycles will be given away to the boy and girl selling the greatest number of "Shell Out" tickets. Scores of other minor prizes are also to be given away to the sellers by the Kinsmen.

The entire net proceeds will be given to the Kinsmen "Milk For Britain" fund and remember—"a Dime buys a quart of milk."

Arthur Fleming Shoots Wolf

On Thursday of last week, Arthur Fleming of Madoc township shot a large timber wolf about a half-mile south of No. 7 highway and a few miles east of Madoc village.

Some time ago due to heavy losses among sheep owners and considerable monetary loss to ratepayers resultant from sheep killed by dogs which led to much discussion among the members of the Township council a bounty of $25.00 was placed on wolves. This was in addition to the existing bounty paid by the government. One wolf was shot in the northeast quarter of the township but the one Mr. Fleming got recently was the first in the south quarter.

At the present time they are full-furred and the specimen Mr. Fleming displayed was one of the best. He says there are more where it came from as he and his family hear them howling any night and he hopes to get them as he has been one of the losers.

The members of the council as well as the ratepayers of the township wish him good hunting.

Motor Car Makes Complete Turn To Hit Parked Car

One of those unique motor accidents, bordering on the "believe it or not" type, occurred on Highway No. 2 in front of St. Mary's Church at Marysville at noon Sunday when a motor car made a complete circle over the highway before crashing into a second parked vehicle in front of the church.

Frederick Dryden, Shannonville, had his automobile parked in front of the church while attending divine service. Several other autos were parked in line behind Mr. Dryden's car. When he started off Mr. Dryden started to turn his car around in order to return home. In some manner the steering gear either locked or the driver lost control with the result the car made a perfect arc returning to the south side of the highway, where it crashed into the side of the vehicle, that had been originally parked directly behind Mr. Dryden. This car is owned by Frank Walsh, also of Shannonville.

The force of the impact was so great the Walsh car was pushed sideways off the boulevard and over the adjoining sidewalk before Mr. Dryden finally got his vehicle under control. The doors and windows on the left side of Mr. Walsh's car were reduced to wreckage, while the frame was bent and other extensive damage. The entire front part of Mr. Dryden's car was reduced to a damaged wreck also. Traffic Officer Harry Caldwell investigated and estimated the property damage as quite high.

Speakers at Victory Parade Stress Importance of Full Support of Seventh Loan

With thousands of Saturday afternoon shoppers crowding the curb-side to watch the spectacle and to the accompanying roar of twin-motored bombing planes as they skimmed tree-tops, the Seventh Victory Loan was officially opened in Hastings County on Saturday as bereted veterans of the last war, Air Force personnel and school children marched through the city in a special opening parade.

Following the parade a brief opening ceremony was held on the Collegiate campus during which chairman of the County Victory Loan Committee, Mr. J. J. Trudeau, appealed to the residents of the county for their support of the Victory Loan.

Adding color to the picture was the appearance of Lieut. J. E. Korning, recently appointed commander of the H.M.C.S. Belleville, who personally expressed his appreciation to the citizens of Belleville and immediate district for the splendid support shown the corvette committee in the supply of comforts for his crew members aboard his ship.

Headed by a special Victory Loan car and the Trenton R.C.A.F. Band, the parade left the Collegiate campus promptly at 2.30 and going north to Station Street, proceeded the full length of Front Street, where it was viewed by a thronging shopping crowd. Included in the parade was a flight of Trim WD's and two flights of airmen from the Trenton main station; members of the local Army and Navy Veterans, the Canadian Legion and the C.N.R. Veterans, school children, the local Air Cadet band, motorized units of the two reserve battalions, the Argyll Light Infantry and the 34th. Battery, R.C.A., and the St. John Ambulance.

Still Much Fighting

Officially opening the Victory Loan Campaign in Hastings County Mr. Trudeau stressed that this time, more than ever before, the campaign may be called a Victory Loan. For victory in Europe now definitely seemed to be in sight, he said.

Mr. Trudeau warned against undue optimism, however, and reminded that there was still much fighting still to be done even after the war in Europe is concluded. Following conclusion of hostilities there would be problems of rehabilitation program in which the Canadian government is pledged to contribute its fair share.

The county loan chairman referred to Hastings' objective of $3,730,000 and stressed that out of gratitude for their deliverance from the dark days during the early years of the war, residents should respond to their country's call.

Mr. J. B. Boyce, chairman of the corvette committee, introduced Lt. J. E. Korning, and congratulated the Victory Loan committee on its opening parade. He prophesied that success again would crown the efforts of the county Victory Loan organization and that the residents of Hastings would again subscribe to the loan to surpass any previous records established.

Captain H. S. Roome, Ottawa, urged the residents of the county to support the Seventh Victory Loan. "We have been fighting this war for a long time," he said, "and we have lost the first four rounds. We may now be leading on points but the only way to defeat the enemy is by scoring a knockout. That knockout can be given by over-subscribing the Seventh Victory Loan."

Pays Tribute to Belleville

In speaking to his Belleville audience, Lieut. Korning indicated his one regret that he had arrived in the city on four rubber tires instead of aboard his ship, the H.M.C.S. Belleville.

He paid special tribute to the people of Belleville in their support of the fund affording comforts for crew members aboard his ship. Such comfort equipment meant more to crew members than was realized. "Clothing and other comforts helps to increase morale and the higher the morale the better men can fight," he said.

In closing he promised Belleville residents that the H.M.C.S. Belleville would live up to the traditions of its sponsors. "She will never strike her colors and will fight to the last man and will prove herself worthy of the name "Belleville," he said.

Mayor Harry Rollins termed the Seventh Victory Loan as a duty and a challenge to the people of Hastings County. Success was being realized in the fighting fronts because of unified efforts, and the same unified effort was needed on the home front to assure men in the front lines of needed equipment.

With the Trenton R.C.A.F. Band playing the accompaniment, assembled school children were heard in three patriotic members as part of the ceremony, their final number being "Land of Hope and Glory." Vocal numbers were conducted by Mr. George Maybee, Collegiate music instructor.

The entire ceremony at the Collegiate campus was conducted amid a crescendo of roaring motors as training planes from the Trenton Air Station flashed low overhead. An exhibition by a station-based Mitchell bomber completed the aerial display.

IMPRESSIVE

equipped to provide those things which I have mentioned, as the HMCS Belleville, the ship of our adoption.

To this end and in this spirit the citizens in our community gave freely of what they had. Once the idea of our intentions became publicized; they poured in their treasure with a generosity that surpassed the expectations of even us, who knew them.

They came so to speak bearing gifts and doing homage to those whose great and fine spirit impelled them to offer and give, if necessary, life itself, that others might have life and have it more abundantly, and so, the fund grew and grew until it reached a point where the committee deemed it prudent to close the subscription lists. In other words we were overwhelmed with the generosity of the response to our appeal. And even yet, months afterwards, appeals to accept contributions come to our treasurer from those who desire the privilege and honor of participating in this undertaking.

We the people of Belleville and of Hastings County are a proud people. Proud of our traditions. Proud of the regiment which shares our name, whose records of accomplishments have never been excelled in all military history. We are proud of the fact that in this struggle for the recognition of human dignity and decency our City and County stands second, if not first, in all Canada in Naval enlistments per head of population. We are proud of our young men in various and numerous regiments and divisions of infantry and artillery and in the Royal Canadian Air Force. Of what they have done and what they will do for us at home and for freedom loving peoples everywhere.

And, Lt. Korning, we are proud of you. Our sense of pride in you and in those under your command on the HMCS Belleville like our hopes for and faith in you goes far deeper than anything I am able to say could possibly convey to you.

We believe you have a date with destiny. We believe you will fulfill it, on the long, lonely watches of convoy duty or in the shock of battle and fulfill it in a manner that will add lustre to the name Belleville, in a manner that will uphold the highest traditions of find young Canadian manhood; and so from the warm and grateful hearts of the people of Belleville I say to you, Lt. Korning, and to the members of your crew, good hunting — God bless you — and may you all return to us soon.

Mr. Boyce in turn introduced Mayor Harry Rollins who spoke briefly. In his address the Mayor said:-

Mayor Rollins Speaks

My fellow citizens of Belleville, as I speak to you at this time, I feel that this event will be written in the pages of the history of our city, as one of the most memorable tributes to our gallant sons, some of whom have already paid the supreme sacrifice, and a great many more, at this very moment fighting on the fields of battle ready to do likewise.

At this time on your behalf, I would like to express our sincere and deepest sympathy to all those who have lost their loved ones in this present struggle. May it comfort them to know that they died, hoping that you and I might have a more peaceful world in which to live. Greater love hath no man than this that he lay down his life for his friend.

As we stand here today and view this stately ship, christened a few months ago and bearing the name "Belleville," we see in her the handiwork of consecrated effort and a determination of our Canadian workmen backing these gallant heroes, of whom we have already spoken and assuring them that we on the home front want them to go into battle with the best protection which they so rightfully deserve.

It ain't the guns nor armament.
Nor funds that they can pay.
But the close co-operation,
That makes them win the day.

It's ain't the individual,
Nor the army as a whole,
But the everlasting team-work
Of every bloomin' soul.

It is eminently fitting that one of these fighting ships, now making up an essential and effective division of the Canadian battle fleet, should bear the name Belleville, because our city has 600 or more of this youth who have volunteered for service in the Canadian War Fleet and have been accepted. I am proud to say that our city stands either first or second for naval enlistments per population in the Dominion of Canada. Also we have a creditable record for enlistments both in the Army and the Royal Canadian Air Force, and on your behalf, fellow citizens, I adopt the corvette Belleville today and it will be our responsibility to see that the comforts for the boys who guide her destiny are always complete.

We pray that God's guidance will be with her at all times, that when the peace bells ring, she will return to our shores again with your sons unharmed

In closing I would like to quote a few verses from the poem "Reconsecration" by Dorothy Dumbrille:

To Sailors on the mighty deep,
Who guard our shores and keep us free,
I thankfully this pledge renew
With all my heart's sincerity.

For all the soldiers of our King
Who serve at home or overseas,
I fall, with heartfelt gratitude
And fervent prayer, upon my knees.

To all the young and valiant hearts
Who go to meet death in the skies,
I dedicate, in memory,
My never-failing sacrifice.

That right may triumph over wrong,
That Nazi tyranny may cease,
That in Thine own good time, O Lord,
Shall come the day of lasting Peace.

Speech of Acceptance.

Tall, debonair in the famous blue and gold of the senior service, Lt. J. E. Korning, commanding officer of the corvette and incidentally one of the proudest men aboard, expressed his appreciation in an "acceptance" address. He said,

"On behalf of the officers and men of this ship, I accept with pleasure and gratitude, this adoption of H.M.C.S. Belleville.

The plaque, with which we have been presented this afternoon in this ceremony, will keep before us the good wishes and friendly spirit of the people of the city of Belleville. It will serve as a symbol, denoting the tie that exists between us from now on.

As Commanding Officer of this ship, I thank you all, each and every one of you, in Belleville and vicinity, for your most generous and kind hearted contributions, which have afforded us additional comforts. May I particularly thank the Chairman and the other members of the H.M.C.S. Belleville Fund Committee for the extraordinary effort they have put forward in this drive.

Two separate and distinct benefits are derived from these comforts by the ship's company. First, the actual physical comfort, afforded by these exceptionally fine gifts. On long and hazardous sea duty, these extra comforts, provided by you, the good people of Belleville will assist in maintaining a high morale. A man fights better when he is warm and well equipped.

Secondly, the kindly spirit with which these gifts were made possible will add its warmth to the physical properties, for the feeling of true friendship and complete backing of and by Belleville folk will be ever present and merit our undying gratitude.

It is this very spirit, this tie and bond, which exists between the civilian population and the fighting forces that can never be beaten by any enemy. It has been a potent factor in our success to date, and as it continues it most certainly guarantees our eventual complete victory.

I'm sure you can understand how important that feeling can be. When we are thousands of miles from home, from our Canada, especially when the going gets a little hard, when its cold, wet and miserable on deck, when the winter gale with its snow and ice beset us, then we have but to look around us in this our ship, and we can see the backing and support that comes from home, I can tell you it is most cheering, it boosts the morale, and a high morale is an absolute necessity. So you can see that in more than one way you have increased our fighting efficiency.

One more thing comes to my mind in closing. It is this. Having the name Belleville attached to this ship, entails more than just a way of identifying her from other craft. It is a challenge to us, we who man her, to prove our worth of that name, and I can assure you, right now, that no matter what opposition we shall meet we shall fight her to the last maintaining the highest naval traditions and give a good and commendable account of ourselves in "this fight for right" in which we are presently engaged. You, the people of Belleville have done your part nobly, to see that we have the finest and best equipped ship with which to fight, now it is our turn, and we will take it up from here. You can rest assured that the proud name this ship bears will be headed for the thick of the fight.

We accept with keen aggressiveness this challenge inspired by your good name, our course is already charted. . . For Victory".

"Best Equipped Ship"

Veteran of the Royal Canadian Navy and a lineal descendant of the signals sailor who hoisted aloft Lord Nelson's famous order "England expects that every man this day will do his duty" at the Battle of Trafalgar, Captain G. L. Roome, supervisor of contract-built shipping program for the Government, stated that the "Belleville" was the most complete ship of her type that he had seen.

"This ship is number 365 insofar as my 'taking over' duties are concerned, and I might add," he said, "that the people of Belleville should be proud of this corvette. It was with the greatest regret that we discovered it was impossible to bring the ship to its 'parent' city. Please thank the residents of Belleville, the navy appreciates what they have done for this ship."

Captain Roome spoke briefly over the air and reiterated the appreciation of the Navy for what residents of Belleville had done for their corvette.

Outlines Day's Routine

Lieutenant Korning and Chairman J. B. Boyce were interviewed by the announcer. Mr. Boyce outlined, in his replies to queries, what the people of Belleville had done and given in their response to the appeal for funds to furnish comforts for the ship's company. Lieut. Korning, outlined the day's routine of the ratings and officers aboard ship and humorously replied when asked as to the "brig" and its purposes, "We never use it on this ship. My men are too well behaved."

The ship's officers and ratings were loud in their verbal appreciation of the comforts supplied by the people of this city. In the wardroom, officers pointed out with pride the various items supplied them. Typically an engineer, Warrant Officer J. Brodie who, to use his own expression was both "Scottish and fat" waxed eloquent over comforts supplied his department. A well-built "cook" gazed with pride at a washing machine. In the recreation room, all ranks, especially the ratings glowed with satisfaction at the splendid radio supplied by the Stewart-Warner-Alemite Corporation through the courtesy of Mr. Arthur Young.

Crowds Line Wharf

House," a few seconds after ten House,' a few seconds after ten o'clock Sunday morning, crowds that had lined the Canada Steamship Lines jetty surged aboard. Up a bunting-lined gangplank they went. Canadian Bluejackets, smart in their "round rig" met them and escorted them on a tour of the ship. Belleville residents were given "priority" but hundreds of residents of other centres enjoyed the hospitality of the ship.

From the "skipper's" cabin, down sharply-slanted companionways, to the "innards" where gleaming engines awaited the signal to go; from there to the tiny but compact officers' quarters and to the messrooms and recreation cabins, to the bridge and "aft" the visitors were taken. While it is impossible to accurately estimate the number of people who took advantage of the opportunity to inspect the corvette, ship's officers estimated the crowd to be well over two thousand.

A highlight of the ceremonies was the Royal Canadian Naval Band from St. Hyacinthe, under the baton of Sub. Lieut. A. Amsley, the naval musicians, reputed to be one of the best naval bands in Canada, played stirring nautical tunes during the time of inspection.

Officially, the city of Belleville was well represented. The Corvette Committee present included, besides Chairman J. B. Boyce, Mr. Harold Bateman, Jack McVeigh, and others. Lieut.-Cols. B. O. Sisler and B. C. Donnan represented the army; Mr. G. H. Stokes, M.P.; Mr. O. Duff, Canadian National Railways, members of the Belleville City Council and Hastings County Council were present, as were heads of numerous city organizations.

At the conclusion of the ceremonies, Lieut. Korning held an informal reception for his guests. Later they visited the forecastle and met personally the ratings of the ship.

ASSEMBLY, OCTOBER 13

Glee Club Sings:

First the first time this school year, the Glee Club appeared in the Assembly to serenade their listeners with two fine numbers. They sang "Where'er You Walk" and "The Bells of St. Mary's". Each of these numbers is a popular choral selection, and the short program was performed so professionally that return appearances are certainly in order.

War Film Presented:

The new movie projector, under the guiding hands of Mr. Robinson, whirred into action again this week to present an authentic film story of the fighting in the South Pacific, entitled "The Battle for New Britain".

This show was very well constructed, and showed all the preparation and training that precedes a full-scale operation as well as scenes from the actual battle.

Here, on the screen Japs were exterminated before the eyes of the youth of Belleville. But American boys fell too. All the difficulties of fighting in such terrain were depicted and we are sure that the students of B.C.I.V.S. at least, realize that this is no time for complacency concerning the war. There is a long way to go yet.

More Letters

Pat Thurston was on hand to read two letters written to the school by Jack Cousins and J. E. Muir. The correspondence from ex-students seem to be increasing daily which fact shows that memories of school live on in the minds of our graduates.

XIID NEWS: CHITTER CHATTER OR WHAT HAVE YOU?

Eight tiny (?) pairs of feet answered to the call for Special Commercial applicants and so here we are, still surviving the steady downpour of shorthand, typing, and bookkeeping. No doubt you have all heard of giggling girls. Well, I think that Mr. Archibald or Miss Gibson might confess that we are just that. It all started Tuesday when "Our Hazel" had a birthday and to the tune of Happy Birthday (sung by our golden-voiced septette") "Our Hazel" blushed, and to the sound of our laughter she still blushed. Well, we thought we ought to do the celebration up right; so shortly before 1.30 p.m., we (the remaing septette) strut into the class-room to present "Our Hazel" with some "crafty" gifts we had "happened to pick up" in the noon hour. Hazel blushed some more, but took it all in fun. Should I say she was the proud recipient of a thimble, a glass globular bank which contained the total sum of two cents, a picture of one of our members when she was at that "Gawky Age", one Kleenex containing a five-cent piece, another Keenex containing 6 cents (that will do for a coke, says Hazel), and a paper doll cut out of a book. Then she gracefully thanked her little friends and stumbled off to typing.

Well, by this time you can see how 12D lives. We're just a bunch of wild flowers growing more beautiful (???) every hour, and I believe we could be classed as the Commercial Department's problem children of '44, who are just trying to make their teachers' teaching hours pleasant (?!). V. P.

Caff Notes:

This is a slightly belated report dating back to the final assembly of last term in which Miss Wallen was presented with a handsome silver tray as a going-away present on behalf of the school by our President Vera Flindall. Miss Wallen is now living in Markham.

By now you have all noticed our glorified goal posts and wondered who had the latent artistic talent. Their names are Bob Vaughen, Bruce Philp and Jack Dawson.

The play is bounding along at great rate against almost insurmountable odds. The name of the play is "Junior Miss" and it is quite a wild comedy of life in New York. There are many new faces in the cast this year. Sylvia Youdale, Mary Lo Wishart, Margaret Williams, Cam Cameron, Bob Stebbings and the last but not least 'Beazer' Watkins.

Down at the bottom of the last column of Collegiate News is a little heading 'Sylvester says!'. This is something new and has been well received by the students with the exception of one—Bud Cavanagh. Tsk! Tsk! Bud.

Speaking of being down at the bottom of things; the backstage boys have been shoved down into the cellars of old B.C.I. No complications will set in however because everything is padlocked

And now—to leave you with a kindly thought, there are only 58 more shopping days till Christmas.

BOYS' SPORTS

XIC vs. XIG:

Another in the challenge rugby series played on Friday after school resulted in a win for XIC over XIG, 27-0. Despite the score, XIG put up a very game fight, with the experience of their opponents counting when it was needed. In the first quarter IG surpised all and sundry by holding for three plays on their five yard line. Then, in the second quarter, on a pass from Locke to Stebbings, XIC jumped into the lead with a touchdown, Locke converting by a drop-kick. In this quarter McGowan made a nice thirty yard run for XIG but no score resulted. In the third quarter "Zeke" Philp began to run wild in a return to his old form. The quarter was still young when he intercepted a pass and ran fifty yards for a touchdown, which was not converted. Then, a few plays later, Philp went ten yards off an end run for another touchdown, which was not converted. In the final quarter McCarthy went ten yards on an extension play for a major score, converted by a pass, McCarthy to Locke. Finally, with a few minutes to play, "Snuffy" Locke pitched a perfect pass to Strahan, who raced forty yards for the final touchdown of the game.

For XIG Percy Marcus turned in the best game he has ever played on our campus. He bucked well and did the lion's share of the tackling. McGowan, Rose, Welch, Newman and Lazenby also turned in a good game. For XIC Philp was outstanding, with McCarthy and Locke giving strong support, although the team did not look their best in this game.

Lineups:

XIC—Snap, Stebbings; R.O.W., Strahan; L.O.W., Wood; quarter, Locke; halves, McCarthy, Philp; alternates, Thrasher, Campbell, Scott.

XIG—Snap, Rose; R.O.W., Welch; L.O.W., Marcus; quarter, Newman; halves, McGowan, Lazenby; alternates, Hubble, Neal, Goodfellow.

HOUSE LEAGUE BASKETBALL

Bankier vs. Spafford

On Tuesday, Oct. 17, Bankier's team clashed with Spafford's in a League contest. The game was very closely contested with no score being registered in the first half. Then Pappas sank a basket for Spafford's team, which was equalised by Buchanan's shot for the opposing team. Pappas again scored in the third quarter, but Lockyer tied the game up with a basket from the ten second line. The score remained deadlocked till the closing minutes of the last quarter when Bill Thompson scored the winning basket. The final score was 6-4 for Spafford's team.

Lineups—Bankier: Buchanan 2, Lockyer 2, Baldwin, Graham, Ethier, Burke, Allison, Drumm, Maxwell, Summers, McBride. Spafford:—Thompson 2, Pappas 4, Smale, Clare, Watson, Hitchon.

Rollins vs Wood

On Wednesday, Oct. 18, Rollins' team met Wood's undefeated team with the game ending in a protest. Wood's team jumped into an early lead and were leading 8-4 at quarter time, but Rollins' team took the offensive to tie the game at 10-10 at half time. When the final whistle blew the score was tied at 19-19. In overtime, Bridger, of Rollins' team, was put off on four fouls, and Wood's team finally won, 23-19. However one of Bridger's fouls was a technical, and he should not really have been put off. This game has been protested and will be played over.

Lineups — Rollins: Bridger 9, Bongard 9, Massey 1, Barlow, Thompson, White, Donaldson, Best.

Wood: Barlow 3, Cameron 7, Gibson 8, Ward, Edwards, Pigden 1, Galbraith 4.

Rollins vs Spafford

On Friday Oct. 20, Rollins' team met up with Spafford's in another league fixture. The play was very close, with the half-time score being 7-5 for Rollins' team. In the third quarter Spafford's team took the initiative and tied the game up at 7-7. Rollins' team again took a commanding lead on baskets by Massey and Bridger, only to have Pappas and Clare come within one point of tying up the game again, as the final whistle blew with Rollins' team the winners, 11-10.

Lineups—Rollins: Bongard, Massey 6, Best, A. Thompson, White, Bridges 4, Barlow 1, Marsh.

Spafford — Clare 3, B. Thompson, Watson 5, Pappas 2, Smale, Hitchon

This game was very well handled by Jim Watson.

ST. MIKE'S 22—B.C.I. 7.

On Thursday, St. Mike's defeated our Seniors 22-7, but the score was not indicative of the play. Two tainted touchdowns in the first few minutes of play were what really defeated our boys, though they fought back gamely despite a noticeable lack of condition. When the general play became a little smoother, B.C.I. will yet have to be reckoned with in this League. Stew Wood was outstanding for B.C.I. with all the team turning in a strong effort. On Wednesday, our Seniors meet Albert College in another home game, and this time the result should be different.

GIRLS' SPORTS

Last Tuesday, Oct. 10, there was an exhibition game of volleyball staged by the squad leaders of grades X, XI, XII, and XIII. A team composed of Grades XI and XIII defeated a teams composed of Grades X and XII by a narrow margin. Agnes Hinchcliffe and Jean Meyers stood out for the winning team while Shirley Bunnett was superb for the losers.

GIRLS' VOLLEYBALL TOURNAMENT

On Wednesday Oct. 11 at four-fifteen, the first game of the girls' interform volleyball was played by XIA and XIB. XIB emerged as winners with a score of 20-17. Marjorie Hewson and Barbara Theobald played a very good game.

The second game on Wednesday was between XIIA and XIIB. XIIA defeated XIIB by a score of 12-7. Doris Kennedy and Faye Campbell helped their team's cause tremendously while for the losers Yvonne Keeler and Muriel Rollins were excellent.

The referee for both games was Barbara Rutherford, XIIIA.

COMING EVENTS

Week of Monday October 23rd to Friday October 27th.

Tuesday, October 24th. — Junior House League basketball — Wood vs Bankier. With every appearance these boys are improving as is amply illustrated by last Wednesday's Wood vs Rollins game which went two full overtime periods and still was not decided. Prospects for this year's Junior Basketball team look very bright indeed.

Wednesday, October 25th. — The arch rivals are at it again when B.C.I. Seniors meet Albert on the campus in their first encounter of the season. Our seniors have plenty of power and fight and a battle royal is to be expected.

Thursday, October 26th. — It's Rollins vs Bankier in the Junior House League. This is the second toss-up between these two teams. The last time Bankier was lucky to win by a 13-11 count, but Rollins is a much improved team and should put up a terrific struggle.

Friday, October 27th — This time Wood's meet Spafford's in their second of the season. As in the case of Rollins and Bankier, Spafford defeated Wood by a mere two points in the first game. Spafford, short of substitutes will have a tough time on his hands to hold back Wood's taller and fresher team. In these games not only the IXth and Xth grades are getting practice, but also the Seniors, as they are doing all the coaching and refereeing in this league. By the time Senior practice is called, B.C.I. will have a senior U.C.M.

Chas. E. Anderson Shot in Hip, Hand While Hunting

Belleville's first hunting accident of the current season occurred Saturday, when Charles E. Anderson, 17 Dunbar St., received serious gunshot wounds in the left hip and left hand when his shotgun accidentally discharged while duck hunting in the Massassaga marsh. He was accompanied by Robert Chesher, Pine St., who applied first aid until he could summon help. Fortunately Flt.-Lieut. Dr. J. H. Forrester of this city was hunting nearby and was hailed by Mr. Chesher as he was returning home. The first aid received at the scene doubtlessly saved Mr. Anderson's life, as the flow of blood was reduced to a minimum before he was removed to hospital by ambulance.

Shooting with Friend

Mr. Anderson and Mr. Chesher proceeded to the Massassaga marsh by motor and had placed their shotguns in their hunting boat with the barrels pointing backwards out of the rear of the craft. However, it became difficult to launch the skiff in the marshy bog. Mr. Anderson decided to walk around to the rear of the craft and assist in the launching by pulling the boat into the water. At this point a large flock of ducks was seen approaching from the north, which prompted the men to hasten their launching. As Mr. Anderson exerted more strength, suddenly one of the shotguns in the back of the boat exploded with the full force of the discharge striking Mr. Anderson in the left side. It is believed that a wooden decoy duck had rolled over striking the trigger of Mr. Anderson's gun, causing it to go off. The victim was knocked into the bog as the result of the discharge.

Treated at Scene

After being treated by Dr. Forrester at the scene and rushed to the hospital, Dr. G. H. Stobie attended the wounded man where the shotgun pellets were removed from the various wounds. The more serious wounds are of a muscle nature, as the discharge struck Mr. Anderson fully to the rear of his left hip, while his left hand also was badly mutilated as the result of the discharge. Fellow hunters asserted today that Mr. Anderson is noted for being an unusually careful hunter, which was borne out when both he and Mr. Chesher placed their guns in the bow of the skiff with the barrels pointing outwards. It was when Mr. Anderson walked to the rear of the craft that the accident occurred.

Mr. Chesher tried in vain to bring the wounded man to shore, but it was not until he summoned Dr. Forrester, that the wounded man could be placed in a comfortable resting position. His condition was reported as favorable at the Belleville General Hospital today.

FAITH IN TIME OF CRISIS THEME AT ANNIVERSARY

Tabernacle U. C. Marks Another Year. Rev. Dr. C. A. Myers of Toronto is Special Preacher

Tabernacle United Church had most successful anniversary services on Sunday. The church was well filled both morning and evening. The Rev. Dr. C. A. Myers, who is executive secretary of the United Church Board of Christian Education, Toronto, was the preacher both morning and evening.

Rev. Dr. A. J. William Myers, minister in charge at Tabernacle, assisted his brother in both services.

In the morning, Dr. C. A. Myers gave a stirring sermon on the value of faith in the time of crisis. With wide sweeps of his brush, he vividly painted the contribution of religion set out in sharp contrast on the background of materialistic Nazi life. This message challenged men and women and youth to rally wholeheartedly to the cause of God in the community and world.

Church and Home.

Asserting that the foundation of true national glory lay in homes and in churches, the value of these two institutions was stressed by Dr. C. A. Myers to a combined audience of congregational members from Tabernacle, Holloway and Bridge Street United Churches as he spoke at the anniversary services in the evening.

From out of a multitude of things which people of the world are prone to surround themselves with, the guest minister held that only family life and religion were essential toward great nationhood. People of many nations have gone forward to greater destinies and better ideals from a foundation laid on these two principles, he said.

He pictured the home and the open hearth as standing for love and affection—a place where the world is shut out and love and affection enclosed. Religion, Rev. Myers stated, meant life and immortality, peace, truth, salvation and redemption. "These are the things which men live by and die by."

With the spirit of loyalty to country brought forward through association with war, the speaker asked why this same loyalty could not now be shown toward the church which stands for liberation and truth. The church was likened to a definition given of science which was termed as creating little islands of order in a world of confusion.

In closing he urged the people of Belleville to consider the words of the ancient Greek Socrates, who 5,000 years ago advised that for people to live for the highest and best they should "seek only the things that make for enlargement of the soul—that make for virtue."

Special Music.

The work of Mrs. O. Duff and the choir was greatly appreciated. The anthems were "Daughter of Zion" by Clark and "List to the Lark" by Dickenson for the morning service and "Holy City" by Adams and "He Shall Feed His Flock" by Dett in the evening.

Miss Marion Dudley was soloist. Dr. A. C. Locke contributed two violin solos at night "Handel's Largo" and "Air From Jocyln." The male quartet sang an appropriate number. The special offering for the day amounted to slightly over $1500.

Children Killed By Mortar Bomb

(By The Canadian Press)

Seven persons died in accidents in Eastern Canada over the weekend, two of them victims of the explosion of a mortar bomb with which they were playing in the kitchen of their home.

Arnold and Roy McCallum, 12 and 10 years old respectively, were instantly killed Saturday when a mortar bomb exploded in their home near Meaford, Ont., and their mother, Mrs. Charles McCallum, suffered multiple injuries. She was given a good chance for recovery by attendants at Owen Sound General Hospital.

Police said the two-inch mortar bomb had been brought home from the Canadian Army Tank range near their home, the boys believing it to be a dud.

Shirley Hurtubise, 10, of Hull, Que., was killed and six other persons were injured when the cars in which they were riding collided Sunday on a highway near Hawkesbury, Ont.

When a small truck left the road near Fredericton, P. J. Kerwin of Ottawa, son of Mr. Justice Patrick Kerwin, was instantly killed Saturday. He was production assistant of a National Film Board unit engaged in Victory Loan work.

The body of Thomas Court, 52, was found Sunday underneath the Canadian National Railways bridge at Twelve Mile Creek, near Milton, Ont. Police said he fell 85 feet off the structure Saturday night.

Two members of the R.A.F. were killed Sunday when an Avro Anson bomber from No. 31 Navigation Training School at Port Albert, Ont., crashed on a farm five miles northeast of Dungannon, Ont.

CANADA'S VETERANS

Their Post-War Opportunities

This is the fourth of a series of advertisements to inform the people of Canada of plans to re-establish men and women of the armed forces. To get the full details save and read every advertisement.

For complete information write for the booklet, "Back to Civil Life."

Training and Education— Doorways to Opportunity

BOTH ARE AVAILABLE AFTER DISCHARGE

In planning Canada's re-establishment program, its makers worked with one principal idea in mind. This was that the only answer to the problem of permanent re-establishment is a job—and that the surest way to get and hold that job is by the skill and ability necessary for it. In Canada's armed services there are many who enlisted so young they have no peacetime skill. There are many who have been away from their peacetime occupation so long they will need brush-up courses. There are others whose outlook has changed in the months and years they have worn the uniform. They, too, will want assistance. Recognizing this, Canada has given wide opportunity for training to all who have served. The test is the desire to help themselves and the ability to benefit.

THE VOCATIONAL TRAINING PROGRAM

Every ex-service man or woman, who will be assisted in re-establishment by a course in training is eligible for it. To help choose the training most likely to result in security, occupational counsellors will be available while there will be guidance in the services before discharge. Skills learned while in uniform may be found a valuable foundation for a peace-time career.

If being trained in a school or technical institute, fees will be paid, and in addition the ex-service man or woman may receive up to:

$60 monthly if single;
$80 monthly for a man and his wife.

In addition, there are allowances for children and other dependents.

Many, however, will be trained right on the job, in industry. In these cases, the Government, if necessary, will add to the wages earned while training.

Training is available for the period of service, to a maximum of one year, but it can be extended beyond that time if necessary, and if service is more than a year. Disability pensioners get special consideration, their right to training is continuous.

EDUCATIONAL TRAINING

This is available to all who are admitted to university within fifteen months of discharge, although this period of time may be extended under certain exceptional circumstances.

As in the case of vocational training, fees are paid, and there are maintenance allowances up to $60.00 monthly for a single man or single woman, and $80.00 monthly for a man and his wife, together with allowances for dependent children.

These allowances will be continued on a month for month basis of the veteran's time in the services, providing no year is failed and providing no supplementals are carried from one year into the next.

In the case of outstanding students, the assistance may be continued to completion of the course, and in exceptional cases, where it is in the national interest, on into post-graduate studies.

POST-GRADUATE STUDIES

Opportunity is available to all who had started post-graduate work, or were about to start it at the time of their enlistment. These studies must be commenced within one year of discharge.

VETERANS' WELFARE OFFICERS ARE STATIONED IN KEY CENTRES THROUGHOUT CANADA. THEY ARE THE FRIENDS OF EX-SERVICE MEN AND WOMEN. IT IS THEIR DUTY TO ADVISE AND ASSIST ALL EX-SERVICE PERSONNEL WITH THEIR RE-ESTABLISHMENT PROBLEMS. IF THERE IS ANYTHING ABOUT THE REHABILITATION PROGRAMME WHICH YOU DO NOT UNDERSTAND CONSULT YOUR NEAREST WELFARE OFFICER.

A Job for All

One horse can move a wagon. Two horses will move a dray. A million horses can move a mountain.

One Canadian soldier can wipe out an enemy machine gun nest. Ten Canadian soldiers may capture an enemy outpost. Two hundred thousand Canadian troops can press back a German army.

But the mountainous task of beating Germany completely and finally requires the help of at least three million Canadians here on the home front. The support which our soldiers, sailors and airmen require for the last punishing blow comes primarily through the sale of Victory Bonds. And to make that support adequate Canada needs at least three million purchasers during the Seventh Victory Loan campaign who will make their individual purchases larger than before.

Canada's Wealth

Canada's wealth invested in the Victory Loans is what has been earned through the labor of the Canadian people and the development of her material resources. What Canadians have and are is due to the heritage they have in being in a land blessed by geographical position and the nature of the soil and rocks, the riches of the forests and rivers and lakes and in being a part of the British race which has been in the advance guard of freedom in her long history of service to mankind.

When Canadians invest their money therefore in this country's Victory Loan it is being put to the proper service to guard the liberty without which no people can develop.

So Canadians rightly feel that when Canada asks her people to lend the Government money which has been made through Canadian effort so that the great principles in which the freedom-loving nations live and on which they place their trust, the money is going to serve the nation best as well as serve the other peoples in the United Nations ranks who will be a powerful asset to liberty in the post-war years.

Artistic Heritage Suffers

Britain's artistic heritage has suffered more damage on the whole from the war than has that of France or Italy, Francis H. Taylor, director of the New York Metropolitan Museum of Art, has reported. Mr. Taylor is a member of the American Commission for the Protection and Salvage of Artistic and Historic Monuments in War Areas and Chairman of its subcommittee on the restitution of looted works of art.

In England, 4,000 historic churches have been damaged; 2,800 have been destroyed. Damage to other public monuments has been widespread.

Of Britain's famed cathedrals, Exeter, one of the finest examples of Middle Gothic architecture, was the most badly damaged, Mr. Taylor reported. Reports indicate, he added, that only at Rouen and Benevento have any of the great cathedrals of France and Italy been damaged to such an extent. Three high explosives dropped nearby rocked Canterbury Cathedral, but did not damage it too severely. However, British historians are concerned lest blast damage has threatened its life expectancy. Wells Cathedral received a direct hit, but damage was not as great as might be expected.

All the great Christopher Wren churches in London have been seriously damaged—St. Brides, St. Giles Cripple Gate, St. Mary le Bow among them—and many have been destroyed. St. James Piccadilly was virtually destroyed by a bomb and nearly all of the Grinling Gibbons Seventeenth Century woodcarvings were lost. Most of the London Museum buildings have been hit at some time or another during the last four years, although there has been no loss of the collections.

While collections of rare editions from London's libraries were stored safely away against enemy attack, some working libraries are a total loss. Serious damage was done to the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Century newspaper files and the working libraries of art and archeology. With the almost total destruction of Holland House, many great collections were ruined, including invaluable manuscripts.

Late Autumn

Those who drive the countryside during October have had the privilege of witnessing the annual autumnal glory of the woods in gold and red hues of the changing leaves. In the years of restrictions on gasoline and rubber many have not enjoyed as freely as in the past tours of the country at this season when trees are aflame with the tints which nature's hand has flung so bounteously about in the woodlands. Roadsides have recently been arches of great beauty.

Most of the leaves have fallen and Sunday after a touch of frost the trees dropped their mantles of yellow and gold to carpet city streets and roadsides with the richest tapestry of colors.

With the war's end drawing nearer in Europe and the prospect that it will at no very far distant date close and with the whole weight of the United Nations turned upon the enemy in the Far East, and Japanese elimination to follow that of Germany, the time will come when there will be less restraint upon the use of rubber and gasoline and oil and motor drives in the countryside will be more popular than ever.

Britain's Rocket Craft

One of Britain's "secret weapons," which was used with devastating effect in the invasion of the Continent, is the Landing Craft Tank (Rocket). The rocket craft was developed by Combined Headquarters to give close support to our troops as they approached the beach.

One Landing Craft Tank was fitted with a large number of rocket projectors and was ready for its first trial in April, 1943. Then six craft were hurriedly adapted to take part in the landing on Sicily, where it was reported that their impact so shook the Italian garrisons in certain positions that they surrendered.

Many more craft were ordered for the invasion of northwest Europe designed to carry an even greater number of rockets, all of which could be fired in a period of some 30 seconds at a considerable range. The effect of these rockets falling in a small area is such that the fire from one craft is roughly equivalent to that of 30 regiments of artillery or 30 cruisers each mounted with 12 6in. guns when related to the time over which the bombardment takes place.

Europe's Weather

What does the weatherman have in store for the Western Front? Rain, mud and cold mean handicaps for fighting men and fighting machines. Bad weather hinders ground and air opeprations, can affect the fortunes of war by disrupting military schedules.

On the side of the Allies is the important fact that much of Germany's weather is not "made in Germany." In large part it is ruled by the winds blowing westward over the Atlantic, and it can be known before it reaches the Reich, says a bulletin of the National Georgraphic Society. Weather stations in the United States and in Greenland and Iceland keep the Allies informed of what's brewing in the weather caldron; the Germans have had to look to their dwindling numbers of submarines for reports.

Temperatures and rainfall take their cue from topography. The lowlands of the northwest offer no barrier to the warm, moist winds from the ocean, allow them to penetrate far inland. Thermometer readings in the northern plains of the Rhine basin average through the summer about 60 to 62 degrees Fahrenheit; in the southern reaches, about 66 degrees.

As autumn merges into winter occasional chill winds from Russia dispute the sway of the mild sea breezes, bringing cold and snow and shivers. From an average of about 58 degrees for September and 50 degrees for October, the temperature moves downward to around 35 degrees in January—a fall of 31 degrees from the July mean. In winter the Rhine usually freezes over. At Cologne it is icebound for 21 days or so.

AUTUMN THOUGHT

Year after year the woodlands wear
Their purple robes and gold,
As if the joy of peaceful care
In splendor should be told.

Year after year man stops to gaze,
From dawn to setting sun
On glory in its final phase
And wonders how 'tis won.

Time was the rains came beating down
And winds were harsh and cold,
With thirst the hills and fields were brown.
Now all things cry: "Behold!

"See now on every bush and tree
The glory of the Lord
And learn how noble man could be
If sheathed were every sword."

ARMY OVERSEAS

14,269 applications from troops in the United Kingdom for $1,246,400 against an objective of $1,500,000; 25,383 applications from Canadians with the Allied army in Italy for $2,379,950, of an objective of $3,000,000; and approximately $3,000,000 from the 1st Canadian army in France, whose objective is $3,500,000.

The R.C.A.F. overseas which opened its campaign Oct. 16 and which had already announced its bomber group was over the top, reported today that as of Oct. 20 a total of 14,159 applications had been received. The bond purchases covered by these applications amounted to $2,169,700. This figure is well beyond the quota assigned to the entire R.C.A.F. overseas in the sixth Victory Loan.

An indication of the spirit in which the armed forces are backing the loan is the fact that they have raised their combined objectives by 47 per cent over the last loan.

ARMY OF

By EDDY GILMORE
Associated Press War Correspondent

Moscow, Oct. 23 (AP)—Russian forces introduced a great new threat to the entire German position in southeastern Europe today by swiftly developing an attack through northeastern Hungary which, unless checked shortly, can cut the enemy lifeline between Budapest and Vienna.

An army of Cossacks and tanks drove northwest of the fallen Magyar keypoint of Debrechen in the direction of Kaas, which controls the pass into Slovakia and a way through Moravia and Bohemia to Prague, Czechoslovakian capital.

To the north of this attacking group Gen. Ivan Petrov's 4th Ukrainian army appeared ready to join in the assault, exploiting his newly-won positions south of the Carpathian mountain passes.

Strong Partisan forces in Czechoslovakia awaited the onrushing Soviet armies which today were reported already attacking German communications leading back onto the Bohemian plateau. A junction of the Czechoslovak and Russian fighting groups appeared imminent.

Seek to Hold Vienna.

Capture of positions in central Slovakia by the Russians would represent a probable disaster for Hitler's high command, which is seeking desperately to hold on to Budapest and Vienna. It would endanger not only Vienna and Budapest but Bratislava and all the German-held territory to the south.

With yesterday's announcement of the capture of Nyireghaza, north of Debrechen, and the slaughter of 2,000 Germans, less than 90 miles remained between Petrov's most westward troops in Czechoslovakia and other big Red army units moving northward in southern Hungary. Farther to the east the distance is even smaller.

180 Miles Long.

The Red army's Hungarian front was about 180 miles long, extending from the Yugoslav border to the place of the new break-through along the shoulder of the Tisza, south of the Slovak frontier.

Meanwhile, the arrival of the Red army at the frontier of Norway west of captured Petsamo and only 17 miles from the German naval base at Kirkenes poised the Russians on the threshold of liberating still another nation of Europe from the Nazi yoke.

It is expected here the Russians will continue pursuit of the Germans through the northern tip of Norway in an effort to clean up the entire north cape and liquidate its use by Nazi aircraft for convoy raids.

Although the Red army High Command has remained silent on the Berlin-reported break-through into East Prussia, all Moscow awaits confidently for an official Soviet announcement of Russian entry into German territory there.

Menace Tilsit.

A week-old Soviet two-prong drive into East Prussia was reported menacing the strategic rail city of Tilsit after carrying 21 miles on German soil.

Berlin announced that Red army units attacking from the north reached the Niemen river opposite Tilsit in a new 15-mile advance and were subjecting that city to a withering artillery assault. Farther south Berlin acknowledged that another Russian column, in a 21-mile penetration from the east, overran the Rominter Forest and was pushing on toward the towns of Gumbinnen and Goldap.

From German accounts it appeared the Red armies were developing a huge pincers aimed at the strategic city of Insterburg, 50 miles east of Konigsberg, east Prussian capital.

Capture Junction.

Moscow said Soviet troops had captured the big eastern Hungarian junction of Nyireghaza, and other points near the south Czechoslovakian border, advancing 12 miles closer to strife-torn Budapest. A Soviet communique also said the north Yugoslav communications town of Sambor had been taken and Red army units had forced the Sava river beyond Belgrade in a pursuit of the Germans.

In the Arctic advance, Moscow said the Soviet Karelian army under Gen. K. A. Meretskov, supported by the Red Arctic Fleet, hurled the Germans back on the Norwegian frontier in northern Finland on a front from Vuoremi on the Barents Sea inland to Lake Kuotsjarvis. Prize nickel mines in the Petsamo area which had been ceded to Russia by Finland were torn from the enemy's grasp.

DOUBLE TRIUMPH

The engineers eventually built a bridge over a waterway during the night completing it half an hour before the scheduled time. Ten minutes later Canadian tanks were rolling over it to bolster the offensive.

One infantry regiment, led by an Edmonton lieutenant colonel, veteran of Italy and Sicily, advanced in Indian file right through enemy positions by night and at daybreak stormed ahead the last few hundred yards in Eschen. Another column passed through a German-held woods without arousing the enemy from his trenches under the trees.

By daybreak the Canadians were right behind the Germans and the battle was virtually won.

At Breskens, bloody street fighting raged from daybreak until noon as Eastern Ontario infantrymen, with some Maritimers, slashed through the German strongpoint against fanatically resisting enemy troops.

Breskens in Ruins.

Breskens itself was in ruins from the relentless hammering of hundreds of Allied heavy and medium bombers and the thousands of artillery shells which had been poured on to German defences there.

But in the sea of rubble there were formidable concrete fortresses, unharmed by the Allied air and ground attacks and bristling with guns.

After a night of patrol clashes in the streets of this old ferry port, hard-bitten veteran Canadians who for two weeks had been fighting in the rain and mud, slashed their way into the centre of the town under a rain of steel from guns still firing from the German-held section.

Bitter close-range fighting went on all morning as the Germans fought and died in houses, pillboxes, forts and in the streets until the relentless pressure of the Canadians forced the survivors to flee.

Decided to Pull Out

The Canadians had, in effect, fought the Battle of the Atlantic Wall again — but this time attacking in the rear the great rows of apparently bomb-proof fortresses studded through the town.

The general in charge of the Breskens assault said he was at a loss to understand why the Germans had let this vital hinge of the "short" defence line go as they did. "The only thing I can think of is that we gave the enemy such a pounding yesterday that he decided to pull in his horns," he said.

Fierce as the battle for Breskens was, it had been easier than anticipated and the German line had been turned.

The Canadian triumph at the other end of the Schelde pocket front also spelt disaster for the Germans. The capture of Eschen greatly strengthened the Canucks' grip on the neck of the causeway leading from the mainland to the German-held "watchdog" islands of South Beveland and Walcheren.

Must be Cleared

Both these estuary islands must be cleared before the port of Antwerp can be opened, but the position has been greatly improved.

Between 100,000 and 150,000 German troops — remnants of the 15th Army which was driven from the channel coast into Holland — are believed to be scattered between the front north of Antwerp and the Zuider Zee.

Though most of these divisions have been badly battered, their fighting forces have been collected into battle-groups which can make effective local actions sufficient to slow down the Canadians from now on.

In the open country of northeast France they could be rapidly annihilated, but in the flat lowlands of woods and canals in northern Belgium and Holland it will be a much tougher proposition to dispose of them.

EXPOSURE TO DAYLIGHT

This is the time of year to consider the health value of sunbathing. For the next six months, in the northern hemisphere not one person in a thousand will enjoy as much exposure to daylight as he or she should have for the good of health.

When I say sunbathing I mean exposure of as much of the surface of the body as possible to direct or indirect (diffuse) sunlight or daylight, no matter whether it is New Year or the Fourth of July or whether you live in Montreal or Los Angeles, Saskatoon or Miami. In other words, from the health viewpoint, the less clothing or cover one wears in any circumstance the better, of course, with due regard for comfort and convention.

Although the mid-day sun in mid-summer has the highest proportion of ultraviolet rays, even the diffuse daylight of mid-winter contains some ultraviolet—enough to keep any one in good health if he or she does not avoid or neglect adequate exposure of the skin to daylight.

Old fossils who read this may save themselves the time and me the bother of reading screeds if they will refrain from telling me I should know better. Young people who read this will, I hope, be assured it is my advice and it applies in all kinds of weather, in all seasons of the year, in all variations of climate. No man, woman or child should ever wear one stitch more than he or she finds comfortable in the circumstances, so far as health is concerned — provided the individual has sufficient intelligence to know whether he is comfortable.

In many towns what little ultraviolet there is in the winter daylight is largely shut out by smoke, dust, fog. Nevertheless enough gets through even the darkest screen to supply the requirement of health if the body is sufficiently exposed.

As I explained in the talk published October 8th., this question of sufficient exposure to daylight is particularly important in the prevention of rheumatic fever and chronic rheumatism.

So I urge all intelligent parents, grandparents, uncles, aunts, guardians, teachers, and doctors who are not obsessed by superstition and phobias, to leave it to the children to wear or go without any and all clothing in any and all circumstances, as the children may prefer. I mean so far as health is concerned. And of course I assume the children are not idiots—they know when they are comfortable, and they know it better than you or I possibly can.

This teaching and advice seemed radical and dangerous to the "authorities" or the doctors who purported to be authorities a generation ago. But the trend of popular and even medical opinion has been slowly towards good hygiene and good sense and away from red flannel in the past thirty years.

QUESTIONS and ANSWERS

What's the Matter With You Girls?

I am in my early twenties, five feet two and weigh one hundred eighteen. I would like to lose about eight pounds.

(Miss P. L. W.)

Answer—A girl in her early 20's, five feet two inches tall, should weigh not less than 130 pounds. What in tarnation makes you girls want to look holy frights, anyway? I suspect it is because your physical education has been neglected. You are flabby, lack vite, need, not reduction, but development of your muscles so they will support you in good form, good posture. Send 25c and stamped self addressed envelope for booklet "The Seven Keys to Vite."

Premature Aging

From an allusion to premature aging and premature graying of hair, in your column, I gather that you have a pamphlet on the subject. If so, how may one obtain a copy? (Mrs. B. L.)

Answer—Send stamped envelope bearing your address, and ask for pamphlet "Old Folks and Young Folks" and also "Anti-Gray Hair Vitamins."

Courage

A reader kindly sends in a recent copy of the magazine "Courage" for the correspondent who inquired about the magazine. The magazine is published by Paul J. Campbell, 348 Arcade Bldg., East St. Louis, Ill. It offers much help to members of the Fraternity of the Wooden Leg. This is not the issue from which I quoted, but I'll be glad to mail it to the correspondent if he or she will give me the address again.

MARRIED UNDER FIRE

London (CP) — An R.A.F. pilot and a British nursing sister were married at Nijmegen, Holland, at the height of the Arnhem battle. Their wedding, accompanied by the whine of shells and the scream of bombs, was solemnized at a time when the Germans had cut the lifeline road behind them, leaving them temporarily encircled by the enemy.

YOU'D BE SURPRISED

By GEORGE W. STIMPSON

THE ROCK OF GIBRALTAR

It looks as if Great Britain will come through another major war with her claim to the Rock of Gibraltar undisputed.

Gibraltar has become the symbol of any impregnable stronghold or institution of unchallenged strength.

The name is a corruption of Arabic "Jabal-al-Tariq," which literally means "Mount of Tariq."

In 1711 a one-eyed Saracen general named Tariq with an army of Arabs and Berbers invaded Spain, defeated the Goths and built a castle on the limestone rock to which he gave his own name.

Spain took Gibraltar from the Moors in 1492, the year Columbus discovered America, and held it until it was taken July 24 1704, during the War of the Spanish Succession, by a combined British and Dutch fleet commanded by Admiral George Rooke. The Spanish formally ceded Gibraltar to the English by the Treaty of Utrecht, signed April 11, 1713.

Several attempts were made by Spain and France to wrest the stronghold from the English, the last great siege being from 1779 to 1782, during the American Revolution, when Gibraltar was successfully defended by Sir George Eliott.

Since the Peace of Versailles in 1783, when the independence of the United States was formally recognized, Great Britain's claim to Gibraltar has not been seriously challenged.

For two centuries Gibraltar has been regarded as one of the chief strategic strongholds of Britain, and since the construction of the Suez Canal it has been an essential guardian of the shortest route to the British possessions in the East.

The Rock of Gibraltar is 1,439 feet high at the summit, comprises two square miles of area and is connected with the Spanish mainland only by a low, narrow and sandy isthmus. It is honeycombed with natural caverns and artificial tunnels.

In ancient times Gibraltar was known as one of the two Pillars of Hercules, the other being the promontory of Abila (Jabal Musa) on the African side of the Strait of Gibraltar. According to one fable, Hercules, the strong man of Greek mythology, set up these two pillars during his travels to find the oxen of Geryon, and according to another the two promontories were united as a single mountain range until Hercules broke it asunder to make a passage from the Mediterranean to the Atlantic.

Contrary to a common impression Gibraltar is not located at the narrowest stretch of the Strait, which is some thirteen miles to the west.

Gadgets in Homes Of Pioneers Were Simple

By H. P. A.
(In Windsor Star)

While I was at that period of development I have since come to realize as the nuisance stage, thru' which all small boys must pass, I used to think my Grandma Allen was extra nice because she would let me rummage around her house and play with most anything that struck my fancy. One day I found a most unusual treasure tucked away in Grandma's spacious kitchen. It was made of tin, consisting of 12 half-inch tubes, with cones tapering to a very small opening at one end and fastened at both ends with rectangular plates, in which the open ends of the tubes terminated. The plates were like very shallow baking dishes, both facing so that the tube openings were in their bottoms.

I immediately saw possibilities of making the thing into a multitude cannon and asked Grandma for it. To my astonishment, she declined.

"That's my candle mold," she told me. "Your grandfather and I took that with us when we pioneered it in Nebraska Territory before the Civil War, and I wouldn't part with it for anything."

To assuage my disappointment, Grandma offered to make me some candles if I would get her some mutton tallow and candle wicking. The tallow was a bit hard to get as both our local butchers confined their business mostly to killing beef cattle and pigs. So I had to wait until they killed a sheep at Billy Murfitt's market, when he saved me several pounds of tallow. The candle wicking, I found, had survived as a commodity because it was useful as packing to plumbers and the operators of the steam engines which gave us all the mechanical power we had in those days.

When I got these materials together, Grandma asked me to get six little sticks about six inches long and about the size of lead pencils. This was not hard, for it was shortly after Christmas and I had not yet lost the jackknife she had given me then, as she always did at Christmas time. I found a shingle or so in the woodshed and soon split and whittled the sticks from the butt end.

Pouring Candles

Meanwhile Grandma melted down the tallow over the kitchen fire, strained out the small amount of fibrous material and heated it up again. Taking the candle wicking she threaded it double through the tubes in the mold, fastening it at both ends over the sticks, which were drawn firmly into place against the mold. Enough wicking was used to plug the small end of the tubes and at the other end, Grandma was careful that the wicking was in the exact centre of each tube. The mold was then ready for the pouring, which Grandma let me do, cautioning me not to spill the stuff and to fill each tube exactly full and no more. Then, she said, "let them set for a day or two and you can come and get your candles."

When I did, Grandma gave me one of the prettiest glass candlesticks I had ever seen. It had been their best candlestick out in Nebraska, she said, and I must treasure it carefully. This I did. It was an ornament in my room at home until I grew up and left it, and when I used to go there on visits, it would always be in the old room.

But not with a tallow candle in it. Mother soon put a stop to the burning of these, which I insisted on for quite a while after Grandma had made me the candles. A burning tallow candle doesn't give a great deal of light and always smells of departed sheep. After the novelty wore off, I agreed with mother that kerosene lamps were much better.

Coffee Mill

Another very useful implement in Grandma's kitchen was the coffee mill and she would let me use it to grind up wheat and corn when I was trying to raise chickens without a great deal of success. Nearly everybody had a coffee mill in those days, as coffee would lose flavor, they said, if you got it ground at the store, especially if you bought a couple of pounds at a time. Coffee in those days came to our stores in paper-lined cloth bags or small wooden drums for the better grades and it was generally roasted. But some of the older women who had learned to cook in pioneer days preferred to buy green coffee and roast it themselves. Grandma could do this to perfection, but said it was a great deal of trouble and worry, so she mostly bought roasted coffee.

For the scouring of pots and pans there was a bundle of rushes. These grew in abundance in the light, sandy soil of our Southern Michigan country and it used to be one of my jobs to go along the L.S. and M.S. Railway tracks where they grew in abundance, and gather the rushes for Grandma. Mother also condescended to use them, although she preferred a wire dishcloth, made of small interlocked steel rings. This is the lineal ancestor of the wire choreboys and fine steel wool, whose wartime absence from modern kitchens has been causing a great deal of distress since Pearl Harbor.

The rushes were surprisingly efficient and would last for about as long as fine steel wool will today. These strange plants, hollow and jointed and about the same size as a small lead pencil, seemed to have an affinity for silica. Their surface was in fine parallel ridges and you could fairly feel the grit in them when you gathered them.

The Chopping Bowl

Another kitchen institution that meant a great deal of work in those days was the chopping bowl, replaced in modern kitchens by meat grinders, a good many of them electrically driven. But a wooden chopping bowl, turned from a single piece of hard maple, with a semi-circular chopping knife, gives you much better results. They found many uses in the old kitchens, especially for the making of mince-meat, for which small boys had to pay the price of blissful eating and subsequent indigestion by working for hours in Grandma's kitchen chopping away at boiled beef brisket, suet, raisins, and a bushel or so of apples.

But, the work you did at chopping was as nothing to what Grandma did in peeling the apples and seeding the raisins (I never saw any seedless raisins in those days and they had to be seeded with a small paring knife.) And when the pies were ready, they were well worth it. Best of all, you could always have two or more pieces at Grandma's. Also the taste of those pies was well worth any amount of indigestion and even a dose of castor oil to follow.

Not even our meat market had a meat grinder in those days. If mother ordered hamburger steak, I would watch with delight as Billy Murfitt would weigh the steak, cut it in pieces and then reduce it to hamburger by plying two cleavers against his butcher's block. Bill was an expert at this and could actually play such tunes as "Turkey in the Straw" and "Yankee Doodle." Had there been such things as microphones in those days and had one been attached to the chopping block, Billy's expert work with the cleavers would have passed muster for tap dancing over anybody's radio.

Murfitt's Sausage

In the back room of the market there was a very remarkable sausage engine, which worked on the same principle as Billy Murfitt and his cleavers on the other side of the market's big ice box. There was a revolving steel tub, lined with end-grain hardwood on the bottom, against which a number of cleavers were made to chop up and down by cranks. It was run by a small steam engine, and there was a hand crank sausage stuffer besides. The thing made a great deal of noise, and I suppose it was very inefficient as compared to the rotary principle employed today.

But Billy Murfitt did make good sausage. No flour or oatmeal went into it and they had never heard of soybean meal in those days as a sausage meat stretcher. There was only one fault with that sausage, Mother ruled that it wasn't good for me and limited my consumption. I had to eat at Grandma's to get all I wanted.

Japanese Shipping Set Afire In Diversionary Raids

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Oct. 21 — (AP)—Diversionary raids on southern and central targets in the Philippines by American aircraft in which Japanese shipping was set afire and grounded planes destroyed, were reported in a communique by General Douglas MacArthur today.

Fighter planes Friday harassed shipping in the Sulu Islands and Zamboanga in the southern Philippines, damaging one medium and three small freighters and three coastal ships.

In the Cebu area of the central Philippines the same day three American fighter-bombers were lost to Japanese anti-aircraft fire in a raid on the airdromes in which an undetermined number of grounded Jap planes were destroyed. In addition a freighter and two luggers were set afire. A patrol plane destroyed a float plane at West Samar Island.

R.A.F. Dance Triumph

The first of a series of dances organized by the R.A.F. of Mountain View, was held on Friday evening in the Belleville Armouries to the sweet rhythm of the Serenaders. It was acknowledged by all present as a big success and although it left room for a few improvements, a good time was enjoyed by all. The highlight of the evening was the singing of Miss Ethel Smith, who sang with deep feeling and who was afterwards presented with a bouquet of flowers. Catering was capably done by the ladies of the C.W.S.F.

Thanks are extended to the committee under the able direction of Sgt. Ed. Thackeray, to LAC. (Nipper) White, who acted as M.C. and last but not least to Mr. H. "Never mind, Elmer, we're saving enough for an extra Victory Bond"

"Confound this old sink, anyhow!" complained Elmer. "Why don't we get a new one?"

"That would be nice," answered Elsie, the Borden Cow. "But we can get along with this one if you'll just be patient. Besides, we can use the money to buy a Victory Bond."

"I've already planned for our Victory Bond purchases," announced Elmer.

"Silly!" laughed Elsie. "We can always buy an extra one, can't we? In fact, now is the time when we should give our fighting forces greatest support!"

"But Mamma," said Beulah, "isn't the war nearly over?"

"Things do look bright," replied Elsie. "But we mustn't let down our effort on the home front one little bit!"

CANADIAN
Y·M·C·A WAR SERVICES

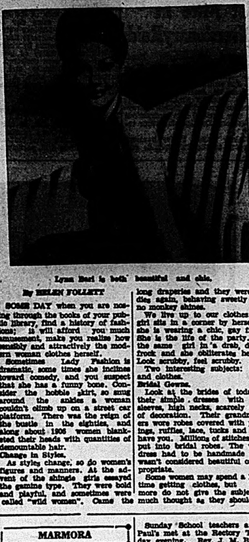
If one was to have dropped into the Y.M.C.A. last Tuesday evening, he or she would have seen the regular weekly bridge game well under way, conducted on that particular night by the Red Group of the Red Triangle Hostess Club under the direction of Cecilia Rolland. There were eight tables for the tournament and one table for beginners. The winning girls were Joyce Bonter, Jean Vickers and May Thomson. The airmen holding the highest scores were Al Reid, Art Neal, both of 6 R.D., and Bill Shaver from Mountain View. Refreshments were served after the game by the hostess club girls.

On Wednesday night, the Red Group had arranged a hard time party, and the girls and boys all decked out in rags and tatters had a gala time dancing to the music of Margaret Truman at the piano, Mr. Charlie Thorne on the fiddle with Mr. Daniel Dorden calling for the square numbers. Liberal servings of doughnuts and cider were enjoyed by everyone.

Thursday evening was Open House to all service personnel. Friday night starred Music Appreciation with the program under the supervision of Margaret Houston. Refreshments topped off a very fine party during which pleasant interludes of request music were enjoyed.

Styles and Feminine Types



Lynn Bari is both beautiful and chic.

By HELEN FOLLETT

SOME DAY when you are nosing through the books of your public library, find a history of fashions; it will afford you much amusement, make you realize how sensibly and attractively the modern woman clothes herself.

Sometimes Lady Fashion is dramatic, some times she inclines toward comedy, and you suspect that she has a funny bone. Consider the hobble skirt, so snug around the ankles a woman couldn't climb up on a street car platform. There was the reign of the bustle in the eighties, and along about 1906 women blanketed their heads with quantities of demountable hair.

Change in Styles.

As styles change, so do women's figures and manners. At the advent of the shingle girls essayed the gamine type. They were bold and playful, and sometimes were called "wild women". Came the long draperies and they were ladies again, behaving sweetly and no monkey shines.

We live up to our clothes. No girl sits in a corner by herself if she is wearing a chic, gay frock. She is the life of the party. Put the same girl in a drab, dowdy frock and she obliterates herself. Look scrubby, feel scrubby.

Two interesting subjects: girls and clothes.

Bridal Gowns.

Look at the brides of today in their simple dresses with long sleeves, high necks, scarcely a bit of decoration. Their grandmothers wore robes covered with plaitings, ruffles, lace, tucks and what have you. Millions of stitches were put into bridal robes. The whole dress had to be handmade or it wasn't considered beautiful or appropriate.

Some women may spend a lot of time getting clothes, but many more do not give the subject as much thought as they should.

I.O.D.E. Chapter Meets

The regular meeting of Marmora Chapter I.O.D.E., was held on October 17th., at the home of Mrs. Maurice Barlow, with the regent, Mrs. Don Marett, presiding. WEDDINGS

DOYLE—MEAGHER

The Church of St. Michael the Archangel was the setting for a lovely Autumn wedding on Saturday morning, October 21st., at eight-thirty o'clock, when Miss Mary Margaret Meagher, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Meagher, became the bride of Lieut. John Douglas Doyle, R.C.O.C., stationed at the east coast, and son of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Doyle. Monsignor J. P. Nicholson united them in marriage and Rev. Father A. L. O'Donnell celebrated the Nuptial Mass.

An impressive floral array of Winter White 'mums formed a charming background for the occasion. Mrs. James Grant presided at the console of the organ, and played softly throughout the ceremony and at the signing of the register.

The bride was wearing a particularly striking ensemble in pastel blue wool accented with matching hat, black accessories and corsage of Briarcliff roses and white baby 'mums.

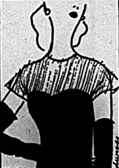
Mrs. John M. Sharland as her sister's attendant, was attired in an attractive afternoon dress of fuchsia crepe complemented with black accessories and corsage of Johanna Hill roses and bronze baby 'mums.

Ronald Doyle was groomsman for his brother and Bruce Doyle was usher.

Following a wedding breakfast at the Hotel Quinte, Lieut. and Mrs. Doyle left for a honeymoon to points east.

On their return they will take up residence at the east coast.

It's About Time



IT'S ABOUT TIME to rejuvenate a short or long crepe dinner dress which has outmoded shoulder and neck lines. Use chiffon the color of dress, to make a bodice yoke with cap sleeves. Makes the dress almost good as new.

DESPITE THE TALK about color, gray—gracious gray— continues to hold the smart spotlight. A lovely coat is in dawn gray woolen with a waist-deep shawl collar and border tabs of sparkling silver fox. A coat that is easily dressed down with simple black accessories and just as easily dressed up with bright colors.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Mother's Middle-Aged Fledglings.

The tragedy of the girl, not growing any younger, withering on the parent stalk, as Shakespeare sums it up, is familiar to all of us.

The possessive mother who does not want her daughter to marry because the girl is a convenient household pet and may be depended upon to do all the chores around the house, seems to be one of those tragic figures we take for granted. I've known scores of them and so have you.

In my early girlhood I knew a family with three aging spinsters—Miss Ginny, Miss Lutie, Miss Molly—all of whom had been pretty girls. But the suitors who dared ring the doorbell had been well snubbed by their mother, a regular top sergeant of a woman. After a while the girls accepted their fate, somewhat tearfully but all in the line of presupposed duty.

This family was well-to-do, so the girls had no office jobs. Miss Lutie went to market, Miss Molly saw to the dusting, Miss Ginny bossed the "hired girl", as we used to call them in those days. Mother lay in bed half the day and lived the life of Riley. She advised her daughters which dress to wear. She had most of her meals in bed served on Spode china with exquisite delicacy. And Mother had a gorgeous time on the wreck of the lives of her three spinster daughters.

The girls were over 50 when she died, and they were like a group sheep without a shepherd. They didn't know what dresses to wear, as Mother always decided these questions for them. They didn't know what decisions to make about their property, as the grim old figure, propped up in her bed, had an uncanny knowledge of finance.

When she died, naturally the "girls" lost half their money. I'd forgotten about these mummified fledglings until a letter came to my column the other day telling of a similar situation.

The mother I'm recalling would never allow the daughter to go to parties or mix with boys and girls of her own age. And now that the writer of the letter, which recalls the tragedy of Miss Lutie, Miss Molly, Miss Ginny, is on in years, her mother derisively calls her an "old maid", and makes fun of her before friends. It seems there's an elderly bachelor in the offing.

I've advised this girl to take the bit in her teeth and elope with him, even as Elizabeth Barrett, over 40 years of age, eloped with Robert Browning, and lived happily forever afterwards.

As the late Charlotte Perkins Gilman once said in one of her books, it's a pretty low order of hen that eats her own eggs; some hens do, however.

Fashion Flashes

IT'S IMPOSSIBLE to continue with cluttered handbags now that those crystal clear plastic bags are becoming popular. Looking like a giant ice-cube, and carried by velvet ribbon handles, lucite bags come in box-like and carry-all designs.

EVERY DAY new and clever novelties show up in the costume jewelry field. We like the earrings in the form of a tiny enamel bird carrying a still tinier letter in his microscopic beak.

NANCY MARTIN JACK OWENS MARION MANN

Three are featured vocalists on Swift's "Breakfast Club" which comes to Canada next week

Beginning next Monday, Oct. 30, listen every morning for Swift's "Call to Breakfast." See panel for the stations and times when you can tune in "The Breakfast Club." You'll find you just have to perk up early in the day when you hear the voices of "The Breakfast Club's" three radio singers raised in song.

The male vocalist is handsome Jack Owens, the talented baritone who has written some of our most popular tunes: "Hut Sut Song," "Hi Neighbor," and "By-U, By-O." The two girls are both attractive brunettes of medium height, who have been singing regularly during the morning shenanigans for several years now. Marion Mann is a double career gal, running both a home and radio career; Nancy Martin, who comes from Virginia, left the blackboard and ruler of a small country schoolhouse for the microphone and "The Breakfast Club."

Do meet this grand trio at "The Breakfast Club," where master of ceremonies Don McNeill guides his "family" through their scriptless spontaneous show . . . a show, which in the past 11 years has risen to receive year after year the greatest popularity poll of all daytime radio shows on this continent.

I'll be on hand from time to time to greet you, personally, but until then, remember we still must conserve food. Buy it wisely; cook it properly; eat it up!

Holding an investiture on the field, King George bestows the Knighthood of the British Empire upon Maj.-Gen. F. W. deGuingand during His Majesty's tour of battlefront sectors on the continent of Europe. The King recently made Lt.-Gen. Omar Bradley a Knight of the Bath.

ONLY CANUCK SURVIVORS OF ARNHEM

Two Canadians who fought with the heroic airborne troops in the Arnhem operations, among the few to return safely to England, are shown as they looked over a French map and discussed the situation as they saw it. Left to right: Lieut. W. A. Harvey, Regina, Sask., and Lieut. Phillip Turner, Peterborough, Ont. Now with the South Staffordshire Regiment, they were attached to the British airborne troops as glidermen. Among the first to land at Arnhem, they are the only two Canadians to survive uncaptured the heroic action which will pass down in history.

Small Towns Have Edge Over Big Neighbors

By HOWARD VINCENT O'BRIEN
(In the Chicago Daily Mail)

The idea is pretty generally accepted—especially by city folk —that life in a small town is "narrower" than it is in the city.

I thought of this notion as I made a mental record of an hour spent in a village of 1,100 population.

Within a radius of one block from the post office, I met and had words with a banker, a barber, an undertaker, an editor, a Franciscan friar, an Indian chief, two druggists, a drayman, a carpenter, a painter (artist), another painter, (artisan), a poet, assorted merchants, several farmers and a number of other individuals who escape my memory.

• •

In a short space of time and in a small area, I made a wide variety of human contacts. This is the normal life of a small-town person.

Compare it, for example, with the life of my friend Squidge. Every morning he takes the 8 o'clock train, riding in a club car with men of identical interests and background. He went to school with most of them.

Arrived at his office, he does business with clerks and stenographers, of whose backgrounds and extra-official personalities he knows nothing. His more intimate contacts are with people at the same social and financial level as those with whom he rode to town.

At midday he goes to his club and lunches with more of the same. Rarely does he emerge from the polished groove of habit; and a map of his physical movement during the day would reveal him oscillating in an even smaller orbit than does his small-town cousin.

The city man tends to become a stereotype—his individual personality lost in his vocation. Quite literally, he becomes a machine. It is significant that the city does not reproduce itself. Were it not for constant replenishment from the farm, the city would shrivel and die.

The city is organized routine. It squeezes personality into moulds, destroying independence of thought as it does independence of action. It mechanizes both work and play and depreciates personal initiative. The small-town person is likely to be more self-reliant than is his urban opposite, less dependent on authority. And, as Lewis Mumford says in his book, "The Condition of Man": the task before our age is to "decentralize power in all its manifestations."

• •

In the economic sense, the small-town man is less productive than the city man. He spends less time in gainful occupation. But his output of satisfaction, as distinguished from tangible wealth, is probably greater than the city man's.

He is less busy at bench or counter—more occupied with gun and fishing rod.

The trouble with most plans for a regenerated world is their assumption that increased production of goods and services will end the woes of man. They aim at a condition of man which will be stable, static and secure; and (so it seems to me) they ignore some of the fundamentals of human nature. We have enough robots as it is. We don't need more. To quote Lewis Mumford again, what we need is "a new race of pioneers—of deliberate amateurs."

Experts Expect A Close Race On November 7

Washington, Oct. 23 — (AP) — President Roosevelt, as candidate Roosevelt, will hit the vote-strewn campaign trails of the east again this week with what has been advertised as a speech on business Friday night in Philadelphia.

He also may speak in Chicago Saturday night, but this awaits official announcement. Another address is set for Boston, probably Nov. 4. Cleveland, last stop on his 1940 schedule, may see him before Election Day Nov. 7.

In deciding on an aggressive finish of a campaign that started late, the President is following much the same groove—geographically and otherwise—of his third-term spin around the industrial east and midwest in an effort to nail what he then called "falsification" and what he has termed this time "fraud" and "falsehood."

This year he said he would not campaign in the usual political sense unless forced to discuss what he termed misrepresentations. Except for fewer "inspection trips" this time, the fourth term speaking effort is fitting into the footsteps of the third. He has made three campaign addresses to date — two in Washington and his foreign policy speech Saturday night in New York City.

See Close Race.

Election experts generally say they see a close race in the Nov. 7 voting, with most looking on New York and Pennsylvania to decide the issue with their big bloc of 82 electoral votes. A few figure that "as the border states go, so will the election." These states are Maryland, West Virginia, Kentucky, Oklahoma and Missouri. Still others foresee such a close finish that the people may have to wait for late-counting of soldier votes for a decision.

The size of the vote — it was close to 50,000,000 in 1940 — enters into the speculation over who's going to win. Heavy registrations in recent weeks in pivotal states have prompted the experts to raise their earlier sights on the prospective total vote. Democrats say this is a good sign for them. Republicans retort it could mean a big vote for the opposition.

Gov. Dewey frequently has expressed confidence of victory in speeches. Mr. Roosevelt has not made an open prediction, but he is described by aides as expecting to win.

WORLD AUTHORITY TO COMPEL PEACE BY FORCE IF NEED

Roosevelt Says That U. S. Representative Must Have Congressional Authority

New York, Oct. 23 — (CP) — A world organization with power to compel peace—by force, if necessary —was called for by President Roosevelt in a campaign address before the Foreign Policy Association here Saturday night. The President declared the United States' representative in such an organization must be given congressional "authority to act."

"We either work with the other great nations, or we might some day have to fight them," he said.

The flags of United Nations at his back Mr. Roosevelt surveyed some 2,000 diners overflowing balconies and foyers and said:

"The people of the nation want their government to act, and not merely to talk, whenever and wherever there is a threat to world peace."

Stern Punishment for Criminals.

There was applause when Mr. Roosevelt declared there would be "stern punishment for all these in Germany directly responsible" for the war and also when he said that "we bring no charge against the German race, as such."

"The German people are not going to be enslaved — because the United Nations do not traffic in human slavery," he said. "But it will be necessary for them to earn their way back into fellowship of peace-loving and law-abiding nations."

The president got a big hand when he listed stepping stones in the development of his foreign program and mentioned the good neighbor policy, independence for the Philippines and recognition of the Russian government.

Praise for Stimson.

His hearers broke into applause and many of them stood when the President lauded Secretary of War Stimson as a republican who had rendered "magnificent services" to America in wartime as a member of the administration.

Boos and hisses were heard when he declared that Senator Gerald Nye (Rep-N. D.) and Rep. Hamilton Fish (Rep-N. Y.) were "isolationists."

More boos filled the ornate room when he said the "McCormick-Patterson-Hearst-Gannett press" was isolationists, too, and he was proud that the administraton did not receive its support.

Mr. Roosevelt said a projected council of the United Nations, proposed to the Dumbarton Oaks agreement, must have the power to act quickly and decisively to keep peace by force it need be.

Reality in World Organization.

"It is clear," he asserted, "that, if the world organization is to have any reality at all, our representative must be endowed in advance by the people themselves, by constitutional means through their representatives in the congress, with authority to act."

Mr. Roosevelt said "a question of the men who will formulate and carry out a foreign policy of this country is in issue in this election —very much in issues. It is in issue not in terms of partisan application but in terms of sober solemn facts —the facts that are on the record.

"If the republicans were to win control of the congress in this election inveterate isolations would occupy positions of commanding influence and power."

Cape Town (CP) — Prime Minister J. S. Smuts recently congratulated a Port Elizabeth firm on the production of its millionth pair of army boots. South Africa's factories have so far provided nearly 11,000,000 pairs of boots for the fighting services.

Expect Churchill Will Make Report On Conference

London, Oct. 23 — (CP)—Prime Minister Churchill, back in Britain after 10 days in Moscow, is expected to report to the House of Commons this week on his conferences with Premier Stalin and other Soviet officials.

Mr. Churchill returned to London by air yesterday.

It was announced today that Mr. Churchill spent a night in Italy en route home and also halted in Cairo for 24 hours.

The stop at Cairo was for conferences with British Army and Navy leaders believed connected with the prosecution of the war in the Far East.

While details of the conferences were not disclosed, they were described officially as purely military in character.

In Italy Mr. Churchill, accompanied by Sir Alan Brooke, Chief of the British General Staff, conferred with Gen. Sir Henry Maitland Wilson, Allied commander in the Mediterranean.

In Cairo, he conferred with Britain's Army and Navy commanders. Britain's participation in the Pacific War was believed a likely topic of the discussions.

Among those with whom Mr. Churchill talked were Gen. Sir Bernard Paget, British Commander-in-Chief in the Middle East, and Air Vice Marshal Sir Keith Rodney Park, Air Commander in that theatre.

The Prime Minister's entire stay at Cairo was devoted to official business. Those who saw Mr. Churchill said he was in excellent spirits and seemed entirely satisfied with the results of his talks with Premier Stalin.

Balmy Beachers Stop Krol Of Hamilton Wildcats And Remain Undefeated in Loop

16,000 Fans, Biggest Attendance of Year, Watch Balmies Win 10-4

By The Canadian Press

Toronto Balmy Beach football team offered proof in Toronto Saturday that the way to defeat the seemingly invincible Hamilton Wildcats was to stop Joe Krol.

In the first Ontario Rugby Football Union clash between the two teams this season, Beaches hammered the starry Hamilton back incessantly, stopped him from breaking away on any of his long, dodging runs and came up with their fourth straight victory of the season by a 10-4 margin in a bitterly-contested game which was attended by 16,000 fans, largest crowd of the season.

The victory left Beaches the only undefeated team in Ontario and gave them a first-place tie in the Ontario Union standing with the Wildcats who had won their first four starts of the year from Ottawa Trojans and Toronto Indians. The Toronto team has played one less game.

In Saturday's other O.R.F.U. game at Ottawa, the Trojans won their last home stand of the season 21-0 over Indians for whom it was the sixth defeat in as many games. Trojans, who have one game to play with Beaches, lost their last mathematical chance of reaching the second-place playoff spot through the Toronto team's win over Hamilton. It was the last game of the season for Indians who wind up in the cellar.

Navy Out in Front

Toronto Navy Bulldogs moved out in front in the Ontario Armed Services League race again with a 14-5 conquest of St. Thomas R. C. A. F. Hornets at London while Hagersville R.C.A.F. Bombers and Camp Borden R.C.A.F. Hurricanes played in the first tie game of the season at Hamilton, the score being 6-6 Bombers are in second place, one point behind Navy, while the third-place Hurricanes are two points behind Hagersville. It was the fifth straight loss for St. Thomas.

Krol was both a goat and a hero for Hamilton. He fumbled the ball, when tackled viciously by four Beach players early in the game to enable Harry Sonshine to pounce on the loose ball for a touchdown and he also tallied all four of his team's points on a field goal and a single. The other five Beach points went to Earl Selkirk who got three with a field goal and to Sam Sward who kicked two singles.

George Fraser, Ottawa's veteran inside wing and placement kicking artist led the scoring parade at the capital. He had six points, kicking one field goal and converting touchdowns by Tommy Daley, Arnie McWatters and Jack Mowatt. Only 500 fans braved the cold weather.

Porter Leads Hurricanes

Quarterback L.A.C. Bobby Porter led the Hurricanes to their tie with Bombers. Hagersville forged to the front in the first quarter on a touchdown by L.A.C. Reg Boviard, which was converted by L.A.C. Doug Smylie. Porter scored a single in the 2nd quarter, two more in the third and wound up his one-man scoring act with a field goal for three points in the fourth.

LS. Annis Stukus headed a Navy scoring drive in the London game, kicking two field goals, a single and a convert for eight points. OS. Byron Karrys scored a touchdown and OS. Royal Copeland kicked a single. L.A.C. Pat (Moon) Mullins was the St. Thomas point-getter with a field goal and two singles. Navy didn't take the lead until the last quarter. St. Thomas led 2-1 at the end of the first quarter, 5-1 after the second and 5-4 after the third but they were unable to beat off the persistent attacks of the Toronto team.

What's Doing in Sport

By The Canadian Press

Ridley College of St. Catharines, defending champions, defeated Upper Canada College 25-16 at Toronto Saturday in the opening game of the Little Big Four Football League. Ridley led 13-8 at the half on the strength of two converted touchdowns and a kick to a converted touch for Upper Canada.

Hamilton Beavers won the Ontario senior "A" football title Saturday, defeating Peoples, 7-1 in the seventh game of the O.S.A. final series. The game was decided in the second inning when two costly infield errors paved the way for five Hamilton runs. Russ Johnson kept Peoples' six hits well scattered to turn in his fourth victory of the series.

Scottish defeated John Inglis 2-1 Saturday to win the Toronto senior soccer league championship in one of the roughest games seen at the Queen City.

Robert (Scotty) Rankine, Sergeant in the R.C.A.F. at Toronto, Saturday won the annual Army and Navy Veterans 19-mile road race at Hamilton for the sixth time in 7 attempts. His time was 1 hour 52 minutes 40 seconds. L.Cpl. Alistair Cameron of Newmarket, N.B., competing in the event for the first time, finished second. Walter Fedorick, Hamilton, placed third and Walter (Whitey) Sheridan, also of this city was fourth. L.A.C. Ab Morton of Galt, Ont., was fifth.

Mrs. K. Bibby, secretary of the Ontario Women's Basketball Association, announced last night that the annual meeting of the organization will be held in Toronto next Saturday night, Oct. 28.

The mysterious Lady in Red who has been getting in the hair of New England horse tracks by plunging on favorites to show, returned to Rickingham Park Saturday and added to her earnings by wagering $7,000 that Pete's Bet would show in the second race. She picked up a quick profit of $700 when Pete's Bet finished second.

St. Johns, Que., captured the Senior Eastern Canada baseball championship Sunday, taking two games from Hull Volants in a best-of-three series by scores of 7-0 and 3-1. Volants won the first game of the series 6-5 in Hull, Que., last Sunday.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR.
Associated Press Sport Writer

New York, Oct. 23 —(AP)— It's beginning to look as if V-day in the war should be M-day in the battle of pro football . . . Although the all America (Arch Ward) League served notice from the start that it wouldn't recognize National League "draft" lists, some national leaguers are showing signs of annoyance because of the signing of Bill Daley, Paul Governall and Glenn Dobbs, whom they had regarded as their own property . . . There have been other rumblings, which may come partly from personal feuds, but the other day one of the A. A. franchise owners remarked that his league would come through because its backers were "men of established reputation and financially able to weather four or five losing seasons." . . . That, with a few other pointed remarks tossed in, sounds as if he was looking for a scrap with the old league as well as the other new ones.

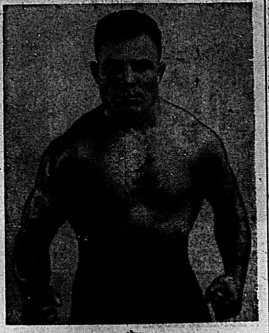
TACKLES THE MAD RUSSIAN HERE!



To "Honest John" Katan, the Palermo Panther, has been given the task of endeavouring to beat Ivan Rasputin, the mad Russian and exponent deluxe of the bear-hug hold. "Belleville wrestling fans seemingly want to see Rasputin well beaten and I knew of no better man to attempt the job than John Katan," remarked Promoter Tunney after securing the Palermo Panther's signature to a contract. In his own ring right Katan is one of the strongest wrestlers in the world, while Rasputin may challenge this right, the proof will be seen at the Hume Arena next Wednesday night when these two arch ring villains clash in what Tunney refers to as "the perfect bout." Supporting this outstanding battle of the ring ruffians sees Babe Zaharias, of Salt Lake City, tangle with Pierre DeGlane, the popular Montreal grappler. The show will open with LaVerne Baxter meeting Don Evans. Reserve seats are now on sale at Cook's Cigar Store, Phone 74.

(Has Good Reason)

Jones was exceptionally cheerful. All day long he had been whistling and humming at his work, until at last Brown asked him what was the matter.

"Well, you see," explained Jones, "my wife has lost her diamond engagement ring."

"Well, what's there to be so cheerful about in that?" asked Brown.

"I'm waiting for her to tell me. You see, I found it in my trousers pocket."

Presents Puzzle.

From Leo MacDonnell in Detroit comes word that Bill Daley, former Minnesota and Michigan star who is on the Philadelphia National League's draft list, reportedly received a bonus of $4,000 and a contract of $$8,000 a year to run two years after the war from the promoters of the New York club in the All-American Football Conference—new pro grid loop.

Bert Bell, owner of the Eagles said he offered to meet the new club's salary but all he got was a wire from Daley saying "after talking to Mr. Ward (Arch Ward of Chicago) I have signed with Mr. Ryan (Ray Ryan of the New York club)."

Since Ward for many years was the "patron saint" for the National League and as such picked out Elmer Layden as commissioner for the older loop, the pro football picture seems confusing to say the least.

Asked if Ward was "mad at the National League," Owner Fred L. Mandel Jr. of the Lions, replied: "Not that I know of."

Football Follies.

It was just 20 years ago last Saturday that Red Grange his greatest in of his colorful gridiron career. That day Grange ran for five touchdowns, one for 95 yards, as Illinois beat Michigan 39 to 14 . . . It was an inspired Georgia Teck eleven that dug in and beat the vaunted Navy squad 17 to 15 for Saturday's biggest Yankee gridiron upset . . . Illinois' speedy backs helped to trample the Pitt Panthers 39 to 5, as the winners' backfielders ran razzle dazzle around the Panthers . . . The Army, from West Point, kept their slate clean in the rain to roll up eleven touchdowns and beat the Coast Guard Academy 76 to 0 for their most impressive win in 15 years . . . Notre Dame kept rolling along and beat Wisconsin 28 to 13, while the "Boilermakers" from Purdue downed Iowa 26 to 7 . . . In th east Penn State beat Colgate 6-0 in a strong grid go, while Holy Cross and Brown went all the way to a 24-24 draw . . .

Remember When.

Jack Dunn, owner-manager of the Baltimore Orioles in the International Baseball League, died from a heart attack at Baltimore 16 years ago today. Dunn's Orioles won the Int. loop pennant seven times in a row from 1919 to 1925 — a record that still stands. And while accomplishing this great diamond feat Dunn also developed and sold more players to the major than the average run-of-the-mill minor league managers.

Public Demand.

Wrestling fans know what they want. The grunt and groan patrons will stand for just so much shannanigans before they blow their top, but once the steam valve pops, look out. That was well exemplified here last week when the patrons forcibly showed Promoter Tunney what they wanted from Ivan Rasputin—namely his scalp. Of course Marse Tunney catches on, but quick. Up jumps Frankie with just the dish the fans would have ordered themselves—a bout between the Mad Russian and John "Fingers" Katan, the Palermo Panther. The only trouble here will be Katan's reaction when he finds himself the favourite. It should be interesting.

Baseball Banterings.

Commenting on major league baseball problems to come, Doug Vaughan, in the Windsor Star, had the following interesting comment: "It is no secret that the Chicago Cubs are ready to make a trade involving Outfielder Lou Novikoff. The Mad Russian was unable to satisfy Windy City fans and Manager Charley Grimm has such an abundant supply of good flychasers—which Novikoff isn't—that he can well afford to swap the colorful Lou for a player who would bolster his team at one of the several positions at which it is weak.

In the American League the Washington Senators and Cleveland Indians are the clubs deemed most anxious to make trades.

Clark Griffith, owner of the Nats is scouting for infielders. George Myatt, the club's second baseman, is slated to be inducted into the Army very shortly and the team is also badly in need of a good third baseman.

From Cleveland comes the word that Manager Lou Boudreau is ready to listen to offer for Outfielder Jeff Heath and Pitcher Jim Bagby.

Both Heath and Bagby have reputations of being hard-to-handle guys, but it is a cinch that if they are put up for sale or trade that there will be plenty of interested American League clubs.

Heath, when he wants to be, is a powerful hitting outfielder. By the same token Bagby is a mighty good pitcher. Kept satisfied—if that is possible—they can be valuable additions to any team."

It Burned Him Up

A new (to us) bowling alibi was offered recently by Connie Constance of Seattle, Wash. — he got "too hot" . . . trying to convert a spare on the last frame, Connie bumped his leg as he delivered the ball, ignited some matches in his pocket and dropped the ball . . . As a result, he missed the spare, a 200 game and a 600 series and his team lost by a single pin.

BUFFALO BISONS DOWN THE BEARS

By The Canadian Press

Buffalo Bisons, champions of the American Hockey League, downed Hershey Bears 5-2 last night in their home opener game. League President Maurice Podoloff presented the Bisons with the Calader Memorial Cup, league championship trophy before the game.

The Bears, Saturday, had outscored Providence Reds 5-3 in the opening game of the A. H. L. League season on Hershey ice before 7,200 fans.

At Providence last night, Pittsburgh Hornets easily overwhelmed their younger and less experienced opponents to pin an 8-4 victory over the Reds. It was Pittsburgh's third straight victory of the A. H. L. season, having downed Buffalo Bisons 5-2 on their home ice Saturday.

Saturday's Indianapolis Capitals went down 3-1 before the Cleveland's Barons who tied Pittsburgh Hornets for the Western Division leads.

N.H.L. Training Camp Notes

(By The Canadian Press)

The daily grind at the training camps is gradually coming to a close and with only five more days until the N.H.L. gets under way, rosters of the teams are being whittled as coaches watch their aspirants perform in exhibition contests.

Whether candidates for regular berths will get the "axe" in a body or one at a time is problematical, but amateurs and a number of others brought in for trial from the American Hockey League are showing their way in the goal-scoring column.

Fred Thurier and Fred Hunt, taken from the A.H.L. into training sessions by Lester Patrick, sparked Rangers to a 6-4 victory over an air force team at Winnipeg Saturday. Thurier netted two and Hunt one. Bob Dill and Ab. Demarco also a former A.H.L. marksman, each counted once.

Ace centre Bill Cowley of Boston Bruins may be headed for another big season. The classy stickhandler who won the Hart trophy in 1940-41, was on the injured list most of last season. He tallied twice as Bruins defeated H.M.C.S. Montcalm at Quebec Saturday night.

Norm Calladine, another former A.H.L. winger, rammed home two goals for Bruins in their first exhibition game.

Dick Irvin isn't saying much about his Canadiens, although the 1943-44 champions scored a 5-4 victory over an all-star squad made up of Canadien and Quebec senior league players in their first exhibition game. Toe Blake, Elmer Lach and Maurice Richard, the "big line" proved effective in the pinches.

Canadiens' officials announced that Bill Durnan will be eligible for their net-minding job this season and that Paul Bibeault also will be retained by the club.

Jack Adams took a very grave view of Carl Liscombe, top scorer of last season, going pheasant hunting last Saturday instead of showing up for training. Result: Carl warmed the bench for 40 minutes of Sunday's exhibition game with Cleveland Barons and then watched the third period from the stands—dressed in street attire. Jud McAtee of Stratford, Ont., was playing in Carl's position. Note: The Wings won 8-2.

You are declarer in the south at a grand slam in diamonds. Six tricks have been taken. Your south hand is still in the lead. How do you take the remaining seven tricks?

I don't know how you go about deciding the plays in any deal. But it seems easier for me to follow the rule I have invented for the choice of plays.

There are 635,013,599,600 different hands in a pack. All of them can be made only with one or more of seven existing principles of play.

In any deal, choose the plays from the order listed as follows: Trumping, establishing suit, unblocking, strip - and - endplay, squeeze, infrequent coups, finessing.

Is there a trumping play here? Yes. Spades may be trumped. But not yet. Is there a suit that may be established? Yes. The spades. But not yet.

Is there an unblocking play? Yes. On the dummy heart king. But not yet. Is there a strip-and-endplay? No. Because a strip-and-endplay always requires giving up a trick. And you cannot afford that.

Is there a squeeze? Not that can be seen at the moment. Because it requires a solid suit. Is there an infrequent coup in evidence? Not yet. Is there a finesse to take? Yes. At once.

Thus, you have determined there are several principles of play to employ. But none of the earlier ones are ready. The only one ready is the finesse. So you must take that first.

Lead a south spade and finesse the queen. Then lead the dummy heart king and sluff a spade to unblock that suit for south to trump. Lead the spade ace and then trump a third spade in south.

Now lead a club and enter dummy with the club queen. Dummy's remaining spades are now good for the rest of the tricks.

The plan you should choose is one that don't lose.

Tpr. G. Sheppard Severely Burned In Tank Battle

Trenton, Oct. 23 —Among those to arrive home aboard the Lady Nelson late in the week was Trooper Gordon Sheppard, son of Mrs. M. Sheppard, 46 Marmora St., and grandson of Chester W. Lott, retired C. P. R. freight agent. Trooper Sheppard was severely burned when the tank, which he was driving near Cassino early last Spring, was destroyed. The tank, which was a new one of only one hundred miles' travelling, was completely destroyed and all the crew members burned though not fatally. Sheppard was only saved, however, by the splendid work of one or two of the officers of their crew who managed to throw open his hatch from the outside after they had emerged. All parts of the tank were new and stiff and though Sheppard tried desperately from the inside he could not release himself. With hands and face severly burned he was sent back to hospital in England, where he has the highest praise for doctors and nurses, who helped him back to health. He has the greatest praise, too, for the padres both those in the hospitals and on the battlefront. One whom he particularly mentioned was from an Anglican church in Hamilton, Ont.

This was the second time Sheppard had been wounded, the first being when he received shrapnel in the hip a few months previous. After spending some time in hospital he was released and told that he was being sent home but instead he immediately reported back to his Regiment. Unfortunately this caused him the second wounds resulting in his burns.

Shortly before he was wounded the second time, Trooper Sheppard's twin brother L-Cpl. Chester Sheppard was killed in a similar tank battle in the same Regiment.

Trooper Gordon went overseas at the age of only 18 with the Hastings & Prince Edward Regiment more three years ago. Upon arrival in England, however, he was transferred to the Tank Corps in order that he might serve with his twin brother Chester, who had previously gone over.

Trooper Sheppard expects to report at a Military Hospital soon for further treatment but for the present is enjoying his much earned rest at home.

Building Gutted

Trenton Firemen were called to the home of Roy Lovelace, Ferry St. early Sunday morning when his house caught fire, thought to be from an overheated stove.

Most of the furniture had been moved out by neighbors and was undamaged but the entire inside of the building was gutted. However on arrival of the brigade the fire was soon brought under control and no damage was done to the adjacent homes though a stiff wind was blowing at the time.

By HYE BOSSIN

Disarmament?

The Hays Office, conscience of the motion picture industry, has ruled that each Western film is now limited to eight corpses. Does that apply to Indians also? The Redskins have been biting the dust six to a bullet and dozens to the reel ever since films were invented.

This Indian business is being debunked these days and even the Indians don't take it quietly anymore. For years Hollywood has been presenting Indians as vengeful folk, forever unsmiling, who lived to kill or be killed. Yet the reports of explorers, writers and artists who lived with the Indians and were welcome during the time when America's original inhabitants were still strong show that they lived a fine communal life.

The Indians had their own games, among them lacrosse, and they loved fun. It is now generally agreed that it was the conduct of white men that caused most of the Indian trouble.

Backbones Up

Today's Indians are getting tired of seeing their ancestors pictured as inevitably defeated. An itinerant movie operator penetrated deep in the bush to provide inhabitants of a remote village with one of their infrequent movie shows. It was near an Indian community.

After the show the operator asked the patrons what type of films they preferred. "We want more films," said one Indian boy, "in which Indians kill cowboys."

A film salesman got quite a shock when he dropped into a theatre in a Northern Ontario town. Most of the patrons were Indians. The film, "The Deerslayer," opened with an Indian bringing down a white man with a bow and arrow.

The Indians cheered wildly!

Secret Weapon?

Western film are wonderful things and the Hays Office rule about the eight corpses, which amounts to disarmament, won't hinder the excitement.

For instance, in most horse operas a posse of 40 law-abiding citizens chases an equal number of rustlers and during this running gun battle a continuous hail of bullets tears into each group. Dozens from both sides hit the ground before the good guys capture the hustlers.

Yet there are about 36 good guys left and maybe 35 bad guys. That's Hollywood arithmetic. Maybe they think we can't count.

Have you ever noticed that Hollywood horses are also bullet proof? Thousands of bullets will tear into a solid mass of men and horses and no horses will drop. Well, maybe one.

That secret should be worth something to the Allies.

Films Down Under

Hallywood's nine leading studios cut production in half for the 1943-44 season. Yet, because of longer runs and reissues of old films, there were enough pictures to go around.

The country where films occupy the same theatre for the longest periods of time is Australia. A ten-week run is common there. "The Man in Grey," a British film, lasted 15 weeks. Both "The Sullivans" and "Jane Eyre," each of which stayed for one week in its initial Toronto run, ran for ten weeks in their Australian openings.

"Going My Way," now in its eighth week in Toronto, will probably run forever in Australia.

WILL AID DIVERS

Stockholm (CP) — A new, harmless method of mixing hydrogen gas with oxygen for deep-sea divers, has been discovered by a Swedish engineer, Arne Zetterstrom. After experimenting with animals, he has made the first descent himself, reaching a depth of 140 feet.

RESTORE POWERFUL LIGHT

Tuskar Rock, Eire (CP) — The 1,260,000 candlepower light on this lighthouse off the Wexford coast of Eire, most powerful in Europe, which has been dimmed since the war began is to be restored to full strength.

WILL RELIEVE SITUATION

Toronto, Oct. 23 (CP)—P. W. Litchfield, Chairman of the Board of a world-wide rubber corporation (Goodyear Tire and Rubber) said in an interview Saturday that the defeat of Germany will be reflected in a "marked improvement" in the tire situation for civilian use, with synthetic rubber matching the pre-war production from raw rubber.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By SYD THOMAS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Oct. 23 — (CP) — Back in 1941 when Britt Jessup was sports editor of the North Bay Daily Nugget he campaigned for a new system of rating hockey goaltenders by the percentage of pucks they let in, rather than the total number of goals scored against them as is done now in determining the Vezina Trophy winner in the N. H. L. each year.

Britt is in the R.C.A.F. stationed in Toronto now, but still has the same ideas about the subject, which has much to commend it. Of course, it's the same as any other innovation of change, there are arguments on both sides, with the status quo usually having nine-tenths of the law.

The way the system would work is like this: to take a simple example, supposing one goalie had 200 shots fired at him and let 50 get by, while the other chappie had 250 shots to handle and allowed 35 to trickle by him. If they had each played the same number of games, the first goalie on the surface would appear to be the better man, since he allowed fewer goals.

But a bit of slide-rule fumbling would show his percentage of goals allowed was .250, while the second man who has a lower percentage of .220, because he stopped a higher proportion of shots on goal.

Where that system of rating goalies would pay big dividends would be in the case of a weak team that failed to give its netminder much protection, and let him sweat it out in front of a heavy barrage. Take Ken McAuley of New York Rangers last year, for example. He allowed more goals than any other goalie, but there were plenty who agreed he was one of the best netminders in the league. The protection Rangers put up in front of him practically wasn't there, and it was just an ordinary evening's chore for him to handle 45 or 50 pucks.

Prime objection to the system is the extra book-keeping it would entail for the scorers, keeping track of the shots on goal. But hockey statisticians have an easy time of it, compared with the way their brethren in baseball have to work. The fans take quite an interest in figures, averages, and the like, and the time may come when hockey will blossom out more in this line.

The percentage system might also be worked out to evaluate goal scorers, perhaps with interesting results. If records were kept of the number of shots each player took at opposing goalies and percentage of goals they scored, it might not prove too much, but would show who was carrying the ball most of the time. Then, if those fellows who don't do much actual goal-getting but set up plays for the other fellows, were given credit for assists in determining their goal average, it would give them quite a high mark and point up their value more than the present system does.

It would require quite a complicated set-up to keep track of all those details in a fast-moving game like hockey, but as said before, the customers like statistics — they're so interesting to argue over during the off-season months.

AT THE BELLE — There are numerous dances in "Show Business," outstanding fun, romance and rhythm show, George Murphy and Constance Moore, whose stormy romance threads the story are seen in one of them. Eddie Cantor, Joan Davis and Nancy Kelly are embraced in the star billing.

Old-Fashioned Carriage

(New York Times Editorial)

The two-seated democrat is a part of American tradition. It did not have the cosy intimacy of the top buggy nor the style and zip of the fringed-top surrey. But many a city man who drives a car with three or fourscore horsepower magically concealed in a small space before him can remember the sturdy, utilitarian two-seated democrat.

It was a wagon of many uses. On Sundays, Father, Mother and four children could be comfortably seated for the ride to the white church beside the village common. On Saturday evenings, when the whole family went to the General Store for the week's groceries, notions and a dime's worth of hard candies apiece for the children, there was room beneath the seats for the eggs, butter, and perhaps some fruits and vegetables for special customers. With the rear seat removed, the democrat wagon body was sturdy enough to carry a barrel of Baldwins or Northern Spies and a couple sacks of Green Mountains to Uncle Barzoola and Aunt Hezekiah.

To many a farm lad the democrat was the best of the farm vehicles. Likely enough, it was in it that he was first permitted to drive alone to the village. It was probably the democrat that Father let him take when he was old enough to drive to Long Pond for a day's fishing. On many a rainy day one Morgan mare was hitched in the shafts and the other led behind as he took them to the blacksmith shop to have their shoes reset. And on that red-letter day in the fall when the family went to the County Cattle Show, it was the democrat that carried the family, with the boxes and hampers of lunch stowed beneath the seats.

It wasn't much to look at. Just a sturdy set of wheels, a low box body and two plain seats with leather cushions. But two-seated democrats had their part in daily living in the country. And when the time came for boys and girls to leave the farm and venture forth to the cities, many of them rode to the village depot in it. The air age has arrived, but there are many who remember the sturdy wagon that rolled along the dust roads behind a jogging horse.

CHAPTER 4

"We'll see about that," Jimmy muttered, and while Punchy gave a mock wolf howl behind him, sauntered onto the dark polished floor of Alma Mater's Big Hall and tapped the presumptuous Frosh who had custody of Verna Foster on the shoulder.

"May I cut in?" he asked unnecessarily, for the Frosh was awed. This was Jimmy Riley who though only in Second Year Law and thus lacking the social prestige of the exalted Seniors (Alma Mater was old enough in tradition still to cling to some of those time-honored customs) had nevertheless saved Alma Mater's hide that afternoon and was, for this Football Dance at any rate, the big shot. He hardly gave the redhead, of whom he was a trifle scared truth to tell, time to accept before he said, "Gosh sure Jimmy. Verna this is Jimmy Riley who got the winning touch this aft. Jimmy, this is Verna Foster."

"Hello," Jimmy said, and Verna smiled politely. He put his arm around her waist. He took her right hand in his left. He led off. She came up to the level of his eyes even though he was six feet tall. Her back was long and slightly curved under his arm and it was soft like most of the girls he had danced with or kissed. She was straight and firm but her face and hair made her completely feminine. Jimmy found himself thinking. "What a girl!" even as he led off the stereotyped conversation.

"Well, hello," he repeated as casually and smoothly as he could, for he could feel his heart pounding strangely, very different from the ordinary suave take-it-or-leave-it attitude he managed to maintain towards all girls, except of course the brief interlude with Margaret a few minutes before.

She smiled and he noticed the red lips, the white teeth, the clear milky skin. He leaned closer so that his own lips as he talked were very near her own. He liked that approach and he had forgotten completely about Punch's warning.

"You're new around here, aren't you? I've never seen you before." She smiled again, beautifully, but somehow impersonally, and he felt it was just a beautiful smile and did not convey any special meaning. And looking at it, not forced, but rehearsed, he was impelled to try harder. Most of the time when girls smiled at James Riley it was because they meant it. He was tall and lean. His face was too lean to be handsome, but there was good well-shaped bones underneath the taut skin he had fine teeth shiny black hair. But it was his eyes that you were most apt to notice first, dark brown, dancing, keen, with a mischief glint underneath, a practically spoken promise of things he would do if you gave him half a chance. He was still brown in the Fall of 1939 from a summer spent working on a survey crew (Arts men usually had to take Engineering jobs to get Summer work) and his hands were hard and capable. But it was his eyes you noticed especially if you were a girl, and more especially if you were Margaret Kelley. Every time time she looked at them she felt a little afraid somehow and fluttery, as if she had butterflies in her stomach—but she liked it. His eyes were the thing. Keen and dancing, mischievous and full of light, devil-may care, ideal then for running shivers down girls' spines, like Margaret's, and quite a few others before that though he always came back to her, and for attempting new conquests like Verna — but also quite suitable for lining up the head of a foresight with the ring of a backsight, for drawing the line, calculating deflection, quickly, for killing.

But in 1939 the only purpose Jimmy used his eyes for was to look—to glance—to look back again, to stare, to smile, to wink, meaningfully, because he was practically nineteen then and very much the wolf. He was aware of girls, and aware that he liked them, their hair, their eyes, their faces, their figures, their voices, soft, thrilling, capable of affording him pleasure with praise of which they were unstinting, capable of subtle flattery which was new to him, capable of making him do all sorts of things —like that afternoon charging downfield from the Forty, even though the last opposing backfielder must have outweighed him by forty pounds, even though he knew if the fellow hit him he would probably get hurt.

He had plowed in, knees high, spurred on by cheers from the stands, by the cries of "We want a touchdown," while the cheerleaders in white sweaters leaped and cavorted and the girls in camel hair coats and porkpies screamed shrilly; and he had caused the big Aggie to go for a smearing skid on his shoulder, on the grassy field. It was the kind of courage that needs a good motive behind it to make it click and do all sorts of things. Like attacking six Messerschmitts at once. In 1939 it was enough for him to exert a little, win a Chahee Chahaw for Riley' and then cut in on a welcoming Frosh and steal the belle of the ball from under the noses of the professional stags. He looked at her again and resolved to ignore the impersonality of her smile, the eyes which unlike Margaret's looked not just at him but at the whole floor, at everything and everybody as if resolved not to miss anything at all.

"Do you like it here?" he continued. There was a set pattern to his conversation. In a short while he would get quite personal, slip in a shy compliment or two, date her up.

"Umn, lovely. We've just moved into town. This reminds me of all the swell times we used to have at College back home." It sounded a little artificial, but her lips were verp close, and her perfume was subtle. Though eighteen she was very much a woman, while James Riley, though nineteen was still a boy in more ways than he knew.

"Oh, where are you from?"

She smiled at him lazily and he fought the sudden pulsing of his blood. "Oh, all over. Dad can't stay in one place. I was born in the Maritimes and we've been everywhere since. We just moved from Vermont. I went to College in New York."

"You must think it's pretty small time up her," Jimmy asked, beginning to have the first twitches of doubt. She stared at him for a minute.

"Oh, no—hardly. This is about the biggest University in Canada, isn't it?" He assured her it was. "I think it's grand up here. I'm so glad the family moved up. Everybody has been so nice to me." Cold to frigidity Jimmy thought, his reflections clearer on his young face than he imagined. Verna read them easily. And he wondered why she was staring at him so intently for a moment. He hoped it was with interest and her next words were deceptively reassuring.

"Let's talk about you," she said. "I don't know how you managed to get that touchdown this aft. It was wonderful." That's better, Jimmy thought.

"Nothing to it. Let's talk about you instead." She smiled again and continued to give him part of her attention but devoting half her glances to the rest of the floor. It irked him somehow, but he found himself impelled by it to try harder after that preliminary encouragement.

"I love red hair," he said, again as smoothly as he could, but adept as he was at passing compliments when he thought it woud do most good, felt his blood pounding again as she turned her smile full on him.

"Really? Your hair's nice too. You know" she continued. "You're the hero tonight aren't you?" He blushed a little but it didn't show under his tan and before he had to make a reply she leaned back against his arm so that he was able to hold her closer. Still looking into his eyes she said, "What made you cut in on Johnnie?" She was still smiling lazily at him, her lips slightly parted, and he noticed her eyes which were strangely gleaming and were grey-green.

"Umn? Oh just that he was dancing with you. You're new. . . and, well. . ." He was momentarily at a loss, not having ever before run into the type that fished for compliments.

"Go on," she said laughing.

"Do I have to?" Jimmy asked smoothly once more and he smiled at her. She laughed again, satisfied, and they danced. There were no more cut-ins for James Riley that night. He was the hero. He saw Margaret dancing with Punchy and he resented it for a moment, then his full attention was fastened to the redhead again as she spoke and smiled that fascinating smile. Why, he thought suddenly, it's just like a kitten's her cheek-bones were rather pronounced and there were slight intriguing hollows in her cheeks, and he noticed again her eyes, grey-green, and her lips which were parted over a rather wide mouth with the curves on the upper lip thicker than at the centre. Her face kept reminding Jimmy of a kitten's and he found it fascinating. He decided very strongly that it was worth investigating further to see if Punchy's sumup of her character was correct. Most people did.

"How's for a little stroll before we eat—give you an appetite."

"Umn—sounds good." He took her hand and led her out at the door at the end of the Hall, through the darkened corridor out onto the Campus. The grass was dark and velvety and a harvest moon, round and yellow, rode the scudding grey clouds; a few bright stars shone and, although there were no lights on the Campus at all; the dark stone walls of the buildings, the Med House, the Arts Building, the Chem Lab, the Engineers' Building, were sheened with silver. Footsteps scuffed on the stairs of the dark alcove that marked the entrance to the Med Building and a laugh tinkled from the shadows followed by the husky tones of a male voice. The music from the orchestra came faintly from Big Hall and it was Moonlight Serenade—a song that had heralded Glen Miller's orchestra into instant popularity that Fall — and such little details were very important to James Riley in 1939. The scene was set and he recalled for a brief second a line "There was a sound of revelry by night," but dismissed it just as abruptly when he looked at the girl. The war was just a newspaper headline then and the most important thing at the moment was to see just how he rated with this tall redhead. If all went well perhaps it might prove feasible to continue the friendship. Peg was suddenly quite dull when compared to Verna, looked at when moonlight glinted on her copper hair and again he could sense the thrilling and subtle scent of her perfume, of herself, could feel the electric-like shock he had felt when he first saw her, an hour ago; and still holding her hand he stopped their slow walking and turned to face her.

"Beautiful," he said smoothly. They were close to the tall dark shrubs that ringed the doorway of the Arts Building and she laughed and it ran, sparkling and tinkling, over him, intoxicating.

"Which, me or the moon?" she smiled.

"Guess," he said, and put his arm around her waist, drew her against him. She laughed again and put her free arm against his shoulder.

Little Benny's Note Book

The telephone started to ring, pop saying, Sit tight, everybody dont answer it. I've got a hunch that's Bart Enders, he said.

I never heard of him, ma said, and pop said, I wish I never had. He's a pest with a habit of missing appointments with me at my office and then ringing me up at home and expecting me to talk business with him for an hour over the telephone. Well, he's going to get stung this time. Let it ring till he gets discouraged and hangs up, pop said.

The result being the phone didn't stop ringing, and pop said to ma, This is becoming slightly maddening. Maybe you'd better answer it and tell him the last time you saw me I was on my way to bed, he said, and ma said, I dont want to answer it, because I've got my own idea who it is. I'm sure it's Lily Lawtry to ask if she can put my name down for 2 expensive tickits for some silly affair or other. She's called up everybody but me, so I know that's just who it is and I'm not going to answer. But we can't have that ringing driving us all crazy. You'd better answer it, Benny, and if it's Mrs. Lawtry you dont need to actually say I'm not at home. Just let her imagine it for herself by asking her if she cares to leave a message, ma said.

Well aw G, ma, I dont want to answer it, because I bet I know who it is, I said. I bet it's Puds Simkins to ask me for his lyberry book back and I haven't finished it yet, and anyways I didn't promise him I'd give it back to him tonight for sure. I just told him not to worry, I said, and pop said, Yee gods, nobody but somebody your age would hang onto a telephone that long. It must be that Simkins boy, he said.

And he jumped up and answered it himself, and it was Puds all right, and pop made me go and talk to him, the result being I had to go out and take his book over to him.

Two Weeks' Mission Begins at St. Michael's

A two weeks' Mission began on Sunday evening in the Church of St. Michael the Archangel. The preachers are Rev. Emmanuel Duffy and Rev. Oliver Murray, of the Order of Friars Minor of New York City, who have been conducting a similar mission in St. Michael's Cathedral, Toronto. The first week is for women and the second for men. At the first mission service at 7.30 on Sunday evening, Rev. Father Duffy was the speaker. The church was filled to capacity.

Founded in 13th Century.

The Friars Minor, sometimes called the Franciscan Order, was founded in the 13th century by St. Francis of Assisi, whose singularly lovable and winsome personality has endeared him during the ages, to men of all religious beliefs. It would be difficult to overestimate the effect produced by God's poor little man of Assisi upon the mind of his time or the quickening power he has wielded on the generations who have succeeded him. To rekindle the love of God in the world and reanimate the life of the Spirit in the hearts of men; such was his mission. A far-reaching, all-embracing sympathy was his characteristic gift. In his heart, the whole world found refuge, the poor, the sick and the fallen being the object of his solicitude in a special manner.

The very animals found in Francis a tender friend and protector and the early legends have left many an idyllic picture of how beasts and birds were susceptible to the charm of the saint's gentle ways. He is the author of the popular devotion of the crib as he reproduced in his church, at Christmastide, in 1223, the scene of the Nativity in the stable at Bethlehem. This man, who renounced a brilliant worldly carreer to lead a life of poverty to labor for the welfare of his fellowman, died October 3rd., 1226, at the age of 45, in the city of Assisi, Italy, his birthplace. His tomb is in the church called by his name.

Trenton Air Station and 6 R.D. Both Pass Victory Loan Objectives, Mohawk I.F.S. Reaches Goal

Once again showing leadership in their response to the Victory Loan, personnel of all three air stations in Hastings County have announced over-subscription toward the Seventh Victory Loan on the first day of the campaign, it was announced this morning from county loan headquarters.

Trenton main station with a total objective of $175,000 at Monday noon had subscribed $187,750, it was reported by station officers, while No. 6 R.D. had gone $500 over its objective of $110,000. No. 1 Instrument Flying School at Deseronto had just reached its objective of $45,000.

Total objective of the armed services as represented by the three air stations in the county is $330,000 with subscriptions by Monday noon having reached $343,250, or more than $13,000 over the quota. Canvass in the three air stations is not yet completed, however, it was stressed by officials, and with subscriptions still coming in, the final figures will show purchases of Victory Bonds in the Seventh Victory Loan as being far above the objective set.

Esschen Presents Desolate Sight After the Fury of Battle Subsides

By ROSS MUNRO
(C. P. War Correspondent.)

Esschen, Belgium, Oct. 23 (CP Cable)—Esschen today looks like the towns you used to see around Caen after they had been pummelled by our guns and planes.

Bulldozers are shoving the rubble through the shattered streets and the hulks of many buildings are still smoking from the rockets of our Typhoons and the bombs and shells of fighter-bombers. Esschen had been the end of the run for them when they were beating up the Roosendaal highway ahead of the Canadian advance.

The Germans were garrisoning Esschen and they really caught it.

We drove to the outskirts in a scout car late Sunday. Just south of the town Sherman tanks lay behind the hedgerows, their guns ranging back and forth over the fields to the east, looking for enemy guns or tanks which a short while before had knocked off a couple of trucks on the highway.

The trucks were blazing in the ditches, but the men had got out in time and were standing around cursing the enemy for those shots. They had to walk to Esschen.

Some German tanks were roaming around the area, but the only reaction it brought from our tankmen was: "Just let those so-and-sos come within range or get out of the bushes for a minute and they'll get a packet of hell," and they swung their guns with more vigor to emphasize this important point.

Four tremendous flame-throwers —in "crocodiles" which can spurt a plume of flame an amazing distance —thundered along a road. In the fields machine-gun troops were setting up their Vickers guns and digging neat slit trenches that looked out over a barren area of sand-dunes and marshlands fringed with oak trees.

Our artillery banged away with medium and field guns, hitting the area beyond Esschen. British and Canadian regiments were firing only a field apart. Occasionally a salvo of German mortar bombs whammed down in this area, but it did not worry the Canadian troops. They had won a victory and knew it, and German mortar or artillery fire was not bothering them.

This area around Esschen had been raked by war. The roads were cluttered with the branches of trees, with rocks and debris, and every few minutes we had to dodge a shallow crater where one of our shells had landed. Many of the fields were pitted with shell-craters from our medium and field artillery.

Trees were piled along the sides of the roads over which the Canadians had advanced. The Germans had cut down these trees for miles and then fixed them up with booby traps. I realized what a job our sappers had Saturday night in clearing the road. They had done a lumberman's job right here on the battlefront and had done it well.

Villages along the road to Esschen had been hard hit by the fighting. There was Clamthout, for which a Central Ontario infantry battalion fought so hard Saturday. The shops on the main street had been battered with small-arms fire and grenades. In some buildings the walls had been holed by tank shells. But from even the most devastated houses Belgian flags were draped over the battered walls.

That was only one place. The Germans had resisted everywhere there was a cluster of buildings to give them protection and they were soundly beaten where they stood and fought, beaten by the infantrymen from Ontario and the tanks from the west, Quebec and Ontario.

Probe Fire on Ship Which Destroyed Some Overseas Mail

Toronto Oct. 23 —(CP)— Postmaster-General Mulock said here today that prosecution may follow the destruction of 150 bags of mail by fire which broke out on a ship scheduled to leave Montreal last weekend with Christmas parcels for servicemen overseas.

Investigation is being made he stated, and if the fire was caused by matches n an overseas parcel and authorities can learn who put them in the parcel, the government will take the necessary action.

He said only as small portion of the mail was damaged, said that the department will get in touch with those concerned so far as they are able to do so. The fire broke out in a hatch of the ship containing 3,200 bags of mail, but was extinguished in 15 minutes.

SGT. STANLEY AKEY DIES IN BELGIUM

Word was received on Friday last by his wife, Mrs. Helen Akey, Point Anne, that Sergeant Stanley Akey of the Hamilton Light Infantry had died in Belgium on October 13th, from a liver infection. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Amab Akey of Point Anne and enlisted in February, 1943, and proceeded overseas in July of the same year and was transferred to the Hamilton Light Infantry battalion, with which unit he entered France on D-day and was with his unit, when Dieppe was captured. He took sick shortly after entering Belgium and died on the 13th of the month. Before his enlistment he was a valued employee of the Canada Cement Company. His parents, his wife and three children, Ray, Norma and Sharon, who survive, all reside in Point Anne.

Cleveland Disaster Has 'Death Toll Of Ninety-Eight

Cleveland, Oct. 23 —(AP)— As workers today resumed combing ruins for additional victims of Cleveland's greatest disaster, a 10-man board of inquiry appointed by Mayor Frank J. Lausche began an investigation of the liquid fuel gas storage plant explosions and fire which devastated a 50-block East Side area.

The death toll in the catastrophe which struck the East Ohio Gas Company's plant Friday afternoon soared to 98, while 108 persons still officially were listed as missing, 40 of them plant employees. However, many of those carried on the county morgue's missing roll may be found among the unidentified dead.

Another 49 men, women and children still were under treatment in hospitals. Seven remained in critical condition.

Mayor Lausche set up the board of inquiry, half of the members of which are chemists and engineers at Case School of Applied Science, shortly before he and American Red Cross officials reviewed final plans for a rehabilitation program.

680 Homeless Found Homes.

The Red Cross said 680 homeless persons who have been sleeping and eating in school buildings for three days, would be in semi-permanent dwellings by tonight.

Utility services were being restored to every habitable house and industrial plant as persons were permitted to return to residences damaged by concussion.

In the area of greatest havoc bulldozers were used to raze fire-blackened walls of gutted buildings and to level chimneys. City cleanup crews also hauled debris.

Estimates of property damage ranged from $7,000,000 to $15,000,000.

City and government investigators predicted the cause of the holocause would remain buried in the ruins. Unofficial sources advanced the theory that either an explosion freed liquid gas from the storage tanks or that liquified gas flowed from a fissure and formed a combustible mixture which exploded.

Rubber, Sears Roebuck, Consolidated Edison, Douglas Aircraft and Johns-Manville. Canadian issues were mixed. Hiram Walkers gained ⅝ and Dome ⅛ while McIntyre eased ⅝.

St. Helena: The Island That Britain Forgot

By G. DAVIES WATKINS
(in "London Calling")

When I first heard I was to go to St. Helena, I set out to read up all I could about the island and its people, and great was my astonishment to find that very few books about St. Helena existed at all. Even when I turned to the British Museum, the only information I could find was very incomplete and out of date.

Since my return last September, I have travelled over many parts of Great Britain, talking about St. Helena to audiences on camp sites, in fire service stations, in factory canteens, and many other places; and wherever I have been I have found the same thing; everywhere people have asked me, "Where is St. Helena and what kind of people live there?

No wonder St. Helena has been called "The Island Britain Forgot." The title well describes her since the death of Napoleon there in 1821. Yet at one time this island was of great importance to Britain, and the people of St. Helena are, in fact, of English descent.

The colony was founded by the East India Company some 300 years ago, to form a calling station for sailing ships on their way to the Cape and the Far East. The Clippers stopped there to take on water, fresh fruit and vegetables; but, as the sailing ship gave place to the steamer, the value of this half-way house to the Cape declined, and the opening of the Suez Canal in 1869 completed the island's ruin. When I went there in 1939 I found that only two ships a month called at St. Helena and these only because they were subsidized to do so by the Imperial Government for the carrying of mails.

This pre-war isolation had a two-way effect. St. Helena knew as little about the outside world as the outside world knew about her. Here is a story I was told to illustrate this. I suppose to most of us the name of St. Helena means one thing above all — Napoleon Bonaparte. Yet, to the average St. Helenian, in pre-war days the name of Napoleon meant nothing. For many years the parish of Longwood, where Napoleon spent the last six years of his exile, has been farmed by a family called Deason. Some little time before this war, a girl working within 100 yards of the very house in which the great soldier lived was heard to say to a tourist: "Napoleon?" No sir, I never 'eered of anyone o' that name round this way. Would 'e be the farmer 'ere afore Mr. Deason?"

Jamestown is the capital of the Colony. Dark, forbidding rocks rose to 1,000 feet on two sides of the harbor, and through a cleft in these rocks we could see the tiny town hiding as if in fear of annihilation. That fear is well founded, for time and again those precipitous rocks have tumbled down on the town. Winding paths and motor roads curve their ways up the sides of the rocks to the interior of the island.

First impressions of St. Helena are terrifying. No wonder Napoleon exclaimed on first seeing the island, "That frightful rock." Those blackish-brown rocks are all that can be seen of one of the largest extinct volcanoes in the world. It is estimated that 13,000 feet below sea level the base of this volcano on the ocean bed is ten times as large as that of Etna. Three thousand feet of the cone is all that is left above sea level.

Tiny rowing boats ply between the liner and the wharf, but landing is always an adventure, and the passenger is lucky if he escapes a soaking from the rough seas as he steps ashore. At times in the year the seas are so heavy that they pull down great rocks into the harbor and on the wharf, and have even lifted great sailing ships high and dry hundreds of feet above sea level.

Jamestown itself looks almost like a blitzed town. In the last century termites found their way into the island in rotten timber, and soon the woodwork of the whole town has been devoured and the buildings left in ruins.

The people of Jamestown are cockneys in descent, language, and philosophy of life. Many of their ancestors came from London hundreds of years ago, and though racial mixtures have darkened most of the skins of this generation, the cockney perkiness remains, and the language bears its cockney traits, with interchangeable v's and w's. One servant recently announced to the Vicar's family in the country that "The Wicar is sitting in the vicker chair," and I shall always remember hearing one teacher busy teaching from his prayer book something he described as "wersicles."

The average St. Helenian is short, dark and lively. He is conservative in his ways, very convinced that his own are the best, and very sceptical of any suggested improvements. Belief in black magic and the power of the evil eye are both strong. One man told me he could grow nothing in his garden because his enemy had buried a piece of black wood there.

The war has brought St. Helena nearer to Africa economically, because she has had to import most of her food supplies from there. In days of peace the mainstays of St. Helena's diet were rice and bread and plenty of sugar. In fact, a cup of tea was more like a cup of syrup. When Japan entered the war supplies of these commodities ran short in the Cape. So they had to be rationed in St. Helena, too, and the war came very close to the islanders.

Most of their physical ills can be traced to faulty diet, and no resistance can be shown to any epidemic that breaks out. Beri-beri, chest troubles, and influenza are common, and dysentery due to bad sanitation is endemic. The colony is now recovering from a very severe "epidemic" of what has been called jaundice, though, of course, that disease is not infectious in itself.

During the last century the island's agriculture has steadily deteriorated. I introduced school gardens and tried to interest the children in scientific ways of growing food. In this way the Education Department and the Information Office paved the way to more successful contacts with the parents by the Agricultural Department. New stock, seed, fruit trees and more fertilizers have been imported, and some signs of a revival are evident already. All three departments are tackling the rat and rabbit menaces with good results. It is estimated that the colony's rat population runs into six figures, and the rabbit population is probably greater than the human.

My wife and I took a special pride in one outstanding piece of work during our stay, which we hope will help to solve the clothing problem for the cooler weather. In 1939 few women in the colony could knit and we made knitting compulsory for all girls in the senior school classes.

All these improvements raise the question of the future of this beautiful colony. The people have become accustomed to shoes and warm clothes and have learned a higher standard of living from the soldiers in their midst. They will be unwilling to go back to the poverty-stricken conditions of pre-war days. Will it be possible to introduce some new industry to the island? Will it become a half-way house across the Atlantic for the great airways of the future? Can an emigration scheme be sponsored for some of the younger surplus population?

All these questions are on the lap of the gods at present. But one thing is very certain—St. Helena must never again become "The forgotten island" of the Empire. Thanks to awakened consciences on Colonial matters in this country, I do not think she ever will. St. Helena has a glorious past in the records of our Empire history and she deserves a brighter future.

MACARTHUR USES TACLOBAN AS NEW SEAT OF GOVT.

American Troops Steadily Advance Along 18-Mile Front on Leyte Island

By MURLIN SPENCER
(AP War Correspondent)

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Leyte, Philippines, Oct. 23.—(AP) — American troops steadily advanced along an 18-mile front on Leyte Island today against Japanese retreating to the west as Tacloban became the temporary capital of the first free government of the Philippines in more than two years.

As his troops pressed forward, Gen. Douglas MacArthur announced preparations already are under way for construction of a great base for future operations around the captured airdromes of Tacloban and Dulag.

The supply problem for Japan's 16th division already is becoming difficult after their "preliminary defeat" and should they be forced into the hills might become acute, Gen. MacArthur said in his communique today.

The role of this strategic island, in the heart of the Philippines, was underlined by the announcement that work has commenced on the 3 captured airfields and other installations to prepare "a great base for all arms for future operations."

Gen. MacArthur and President Sergio Osmena inaugurated the Philippine Commonwealth government's authority in liberated territory during a dramatic ceremony at Tacloban, designated as the temporary capital. They addressed the rest of the subjugated Philippines, as well as the United States, while gunfire echoed in the background.

Prelude to Liberation

American forces have landed, said the general in a proclamation, "as a prelude to the liberation of the entire territory of the Philippines."

He declared "null and void" the laws of the Japanese-sponsored "republic" in liberated areas. He promised extension of commonwealth authority, under the United States government, to other Philippine regions as quickly as they are freed and military considerations permit.

The announcement concerning the enemy's supply problems apparently referred to the effect of paralyzing aerial blows against communication lines and flank Japanese bases. These attacks continued, with bombers hitting other Visayan islands, surrounding Leyte, and Mindanao as well as more distant bases.

In return, the Japanese made "minor ineffectual" air raids against American shipping in the Gulfe of Leyte.

The communique did not specify the preparations which have begun to groom Leyte as a great striking base within enemy-controlled territory. Its phraseology, however, indicated that its harbor facilities, as well as the airfields, would be utilized, possibly to base naval forces.

The War Today—
Island of Luzon in Philippines Key To Unlock Nippon's Defences

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press War Analyst)

Gen. MacArthur's return to the Philippines breaks the back of the Allied task in the Pacific, since the battle for these islands is the prelude to the final struggle for Japan itself; without the Philippines the Mikado's ill-got empire of conquests will fall to pieces.

Once the American forces have overrun Leyte which is strategically situated almost in the heart of the Archipelago, and have established powerful air-bases, they will be able to sweep the rest of the islands with bombers. Today's reports show them firmly established and smashing ahead with the job of clearing the island. The Japanese 16th division, the barbarians who tortured so many boys to death on Bataan, have taken to the hills.

'Liberators.'

MacArthur declared in his proclamation to the Filipinos that the Americans have come as "liberators for the entire Philippine Archipelago." How he will proceed in the liberation is the secret of the high command, but presumably he will move northward into the great island of Luzon, unless developments change the picture. Luzon, where lies Manila, is the key which can unlock the Mikado's defences.

From this most northern of the Philippines the Allies can dominate Japan's communications to her essential war supplies—rubber and oil—in the East Indies. They can, by the same token, cut off from the homeland hundreds of thousands of Japanese troops in Indosia and Burma. They can neutralize the powerful air-naval base of Formosa, which is one of the chief shields of the enemy. They can reach the southeast coast of China to establish bases to aid the hard-hit Chinese, and from these bases they can send bombers to rip at the vitals of Japan.

Conquest of Philippines Big Task.

All that sounds mighty good—and it is good. However, let's not permit it to mislead us. As things now stand, it's a bloody route to Tokyo. The conquest of the Philippines in itself bids fair to be one of the greatest engagements of the entire war.

That much is certain. The fight may also prove to be not only tough but long.

While we are talking about taking the Mikado's empire to pieces, it's important to note that, coincident with the American invasion of the Philippines, London announced that part of a British fleet strong enough to deal with the whole Japanese navy was en route to the Far East.

Britain to See War in Japan to Finish.

So much for recent speculation as to whether Britain intends to see the war against Japan through to a finish. Of course she does. There never was any legitimate doubt of it.

Great preparations are under way in India for the all-out war against Japan. In this connection it has been disclosed that there are 2,250,000 Indian troops under arms, ready for action.

THEY HAD ENDURED POVERTY in Scotland. Many had died of typhus during long weeks at sea. All through the winter at Churchill on Hudson Bay they suffered from cold and hunger. In April they trudged 150 miles across the snow to York Factory—thence up the Nelson River, Lake Winnipeg and the Red River to the Selkirk Settlement where Winnipeg now stands.

It was a whole year's journey for this little band of Selkirk Settlers—a year of constant hardships. But these hardy pioneers were willing to undergo any hardships to reach a land where their effort and initiative could earn its reward, and where they could carve out a happy future for themselves and their children.

That is the heritage they have handed down to us. That is what we are defending in this second World War.

CANADIANS SEAL GAP TO S. BEVELAND ISLAND

Russians Advance on 87-Mile Front in East Prussia

Cutting Causeway Strengthens Vital Sector of Front

Infantry Fighting Fiercely For Fort West of Breskens

By ROSS MUNRO
(AP War Correspondent)

With the 1st Canadian Army, Oct. 24 —(CP Cable) —In an overnight attack, Western Canada infantry today cut clean across the neck of the causeway which leads to South Beveland Island, completely sealing this gap for the first time, as operations on this sector north of Antwerp gained more ground.

Advances also were made northeast of Hoogerhide, and several large woods were cleared, while west of Dallen Eschen Ontario tank-supported infantry got within 1½ miles of Dorp op Pindorf, a village 3½ miles west of Bergen op Zoom.

By cutting the causeway and consolidating positions around Hoogerhide and Eschen east of the causeway, the Canadians again have strengthened this sector of the front — a vital area in the battle to open the Schelde to Allied shipping.

Night Attack.

For several weeks the Germans have held a strip along the north side of the neck of the causeway but during the night the Canadians attacked across a highway and railway and drove the Germans out. The Canadians now are right along the sea on the north side of the causeway two miles west of Woensdrecht.

Southeast of Eschen, British troops of the 1st Canadian Army have gained more ground and the British 2nd Army's westward offensive through Southwest Holland is going well. The British troops are closing on 's Hertogenbosch and the British-Canadian squeeze play on an estimated 40,000 troops in this sector south of the lower Rhine is developing nicely.

In the Schelde pocket Canadian infantry still was fighting fiercely for Fort Frederik-Hendrik, a mile west of Breskens. The Germans resisted strongly in the moat-surrounded fort where coastal guns command the entrance to the Schelde.

At Vlissingen (Flushing) only one gun still fired, thanks to R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. attacks which knocked out several others. On South Beveland the Germans have a number of mobile guns, probably of 75-mm. calibre.

Yesterday 468 prisoners were taken on the Canadian army fronts.

Ontario infantry yesterday swept the last Germans from Schoondujke, three miles south of the liberated port of Breskens and key town on the enemy's secondary defence line in the Schelde pocket guarding the approach to Antwerp.

Repeating the performance of Sunday, when the Breskens stronghold fell, Canadian infantry made the assault from the north, taking strong German concrete gun positions from the rear.

As at Breskens, the Germans fought strongly but gave up a fortified position that could have held out much longer.

Schoondujke, with a normal population of about 2,000, lay in ruins when the first Canadians entered.

Flame-Throwers Used.

Infantrymen had a sticky time forcing the outer defences of the town. Flame-throwers were used with telling effect, but they operated without armored support because the roads and streets leading to the town were so cratered with shell-holes and littered with debris the tanks could not get through.

Company commanders in this New Ontario infantry success were Majs. Charlie Barrett of Toronto, T. R. Prest of Kitchener, Ont., Joe King of London, Ont., and Capt. "Maggie" McTaggart of Kitchener.

The Canadians captured at least five 75-mm. guns and a great haul of 20-mm. guns which the Germans had been using to slow up the Canadian advance on this sector.

By WILLIAM FRYE
(AP War Correspondent)

London, Oct. 24 — (AP)—British 2nd Army troops stormed into the outskirts of the Dutch communications of 'S Hertogenbosch today and 1st Canadian Army forces to the west plunged closer to Roosendaal in the blazing battle to clear the Germans from the vicinity of the Belgian port of Antwerp.

Along the main 475-mile front facing east toward Germany persistent Allied pressure scored no major gains, and the winter's first widespread snow sharpened the plague of weather which has hampered the Allied armies for weeks.

Front reports indicated that the Germans in the 'S Hertogenbosch area were suffering from lack of artillery support. The British were using a powerful force of infantry, tanks and artillery.

Close in on Rail Centre

Three British columns drove on the cathedral city and Dutch provincial capital. The northernmost one, having captured the village of Rosmalen, clawed its way westward into the outskirts of 'S Hertogenbosch during early-morning darkness. Two more columns slashed their way toward that communications hub and bastion of the Germans' West Holland line from the south and east.

The sector around Aachen was not active, but to the south German big guns, apparently railway weapons, hurled 16 to 20 huge shells into the U. S. 3rd Army area. The German radio reported that Allied guns were pounding the fortress of Metz with a heavy artillery barrage. Street fighting for possession of Maizieres Les Metz continued, with the enemy still holding about one-fourth of the town.

Two Objectives

While one obvious objective of British and Canadian forces is the clearance of the Germans from the vicinity of the Belgian port of Antwerp, German military commentators imputed a broader strategic aim to the assault on 'S Hertogenbosch. They said that Lt.-Gen. Dempsey's men were attempting to cut off German forces south of the Maas (Meuse) and Waal Rhine rivers and to gain elbow room for a general drive into Central Holland.

The British 2nd Army wiped out a whole battalion of the 712th German infantry division and took 500 prisoners, including one regimental and one battalion commander.

The enemy captured 'S Hertogenbosch May 12, 1940 after German troops in Dutch uniforms seized the city's vital bridges and defence centres. A city of 41,000 population, 'S Hertogenbosch is a junction of five rail lines and is an important centre of motor roads and waterways. It also is known as Bois de Duc.

Germans Order Budapest To Be Evacuated

London, Oct. 24 — Evacuation of Budapest, Hungarian capital, has been ordered by the Germans, the Rome radio said today.

Housing Crisis in Canada Nothing Compared to Getting Billets in Italy

By DOUG HOW
(CP War Correspondent)

With the Canadian Corps on the Adriatic Front, Oct. 24— (CP) — It may be of comfort to the good and sardined people of Halifax, Edmonton and so on, to come into the knowledge that as regards housing crises, brother, they ain't seen nothing.

They ought to live along the Adriatic when the weather gets sullen and the front pulls up short and everybody from the biggest general of them all to the rifleman just out of the line starts looking for shelter.

Here, there are no landladies, no rent ceilings, no ads in the papers, but here there are generals who overrule brigadiers who dictate to colonels who molest majors who do what they can by guile and compromise and the odd lick of whisky to work their charges into the houses or buildings left after the last bomb and shell has had its say.

And the impact of it all falls upon the town major, that luckless individual who volunteered to go anywhere but swears it wasn't to this. To him come colonels whose resting battalions need billets, representatives of vast headquarters of corps and armies who have decided tents are no longer the thing, people who want room for casualty clearing stations, supply points, leave centres. He encounters pressure, persuasion, passion, even pathos.

There is the case of a town in which the Canadian Public Relations field detachment has had a billet. With one hefty blow 8th Army headquarters decided to move in and half the town has been ordered to be evacuated.

For three days now the detachment's troubleshooters, Maj. Ed McIntyre, Galt, Ont., and Capt. Len Tracy, Weyburn, Sask., have been seeking a new home. In Rimini they were given their choice of 16 houses. There wasn't a window in any of them. Huge bomb craters blocked the roads. They decided against Rimini.

They went to the other towns around there, Cattolica, Riccione, others. There was nothing, absolutely nothing. They searched, argued, cajoled, begged. There was nothing, absolutely nothing. Today they are back in Rimini, the while ravenous, chilled army headquarters officers ramble through our villa with hungry eye and inadequate courtesy. The situation is ominous if not desperate.

R.A.F. RAIDS ESSEN AS NAZI FIGHTERS SWARM OVER CITY

Bombers Fly Thru Heavy Snowstorm, Barrage Fiercest On Last 7 Trips

London, Oct. 24 —(CP)— Strong forces of German night fighters, saved for defence of prize targets, swarmed up over Essen last night to challenge a fleet of 1,000 R. A. F. and R. C. A. F. heavy bombers which attacked the great armament and railway centre in the heart of the Ruhr.

The bombers, which flew through the first heavy snowstorm of the season over the Western front, also encountered the fiercest ground barrage they have met on their last seven trips to the Ruhr.

Eight of the giant bombers were reported missing. Two of these came from the large force of Canadian Halifaxes and Lancasters which participated in the raid.

While the heavies were unloading their bombs at Essen a small force of fast Mosquitos shot on across Northern Germany and attacked Berlin.

Say German-Speaking Swiss See Victory Of Allies Inside 3 Mos.

By ALLAN NICKLESON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Oct. 24 ((CP Cable) — Home from interment in Switzerland, British servicemen voiced the almost unanimous opinion today that the Swiss people long for Allied victory over Germany and even German-speaking Swiss are certain it will come within three months.

The 1,119 repariates, who arrived at a northwest port yesterday after being interned for periods ranging from months to several years, started home leave today. There were no Canadians in the group but a few are expected among the more than 4,000 Empire fighting men yet to arrive.

It was a quiet homecoming because it was kept secret but a better day than yesterday for the return to Britain could no have been chosen for it was the second anniversary of the British 8th Army victory at El Alamein—described by Field Marshal Montgomery as "the turning point of the war."

Most of the men had served under the Field Marshal when he commanded the 8th Army in the Middle East and each had defied bars and guards or fought or wrangled his way from capacivity in Italy to neutral Switzerland.

All spoke highly of the Swiss people and the treatment received. About 60 of them had married Swiss girls.

Internment regulations were not severe and a Scots Guards member who married a Swiss girl was allowed to live with his wife's family.

CANADIANS HOLD MILE-WIDE STRIP OVER SAVIO RIVER

Brush Off Repeated, Stinging German Counter-Attacks in Past 24 Hours

By BILL BOSS
(CP War Correspondent)

With the Canadian Corps in Italy, Oct. 24 — (CP Cable) — Canadians holding a mile-wide bridgehead over the swift-flowing Savio river in the Adriatic sector have brushed off repeated, stinging German counter-attacks during the last 24 hours and early today were holding firmly to their positions.

The bridgehead was thrown across the Savio, which runs northward through captured Cesena into the Adriatic, late Friday night and today, at the beginning of the fourth day of the thrust, the Canadians were in high spirits.

Dry clothes, rations, ammunition and — most important of all in this torrential rain and cold — an issue of rum, cheered the troops lying in their places on the sodden ground.

The situation here remained substantially unchanged during Monday. On the left of the toehold prairie regiment men strengthened their positions and British Columbia Highlanders on the right dug in more firmly. Both these units command all movement on the main Cesena-Ravenna road.

ADVANCE 11 MILES

SUBSCRIPTIONS ON FIRST DAY OF LOAN ARE $68,260,300

Early Reports From Armed Services Show Enthusiastic Buying

Ottawa, Oct. 24 —(CP)— A recapitulation today of yesterday's first stage in Canada's $1,300,000,000 Seventh Victory Loan drive showed that the estimated $75,000,000 figure had not been reached and instead only $68,260,300 had been collected.

With early reports from the armed forces showing enthusiastic buying, loan officials had felt that the first day of three-week campaign would at least equal if not exceed the first day of the Sixth Loan when the total of slightly above $74,276,000 was subscribed.

Of today's total, $19,858,300 came from individual Canadians. This is approximately $14,000,000 below the daily average which must be maintained by individual purchasers if their minimum objective of $600,000,000 is to be reached.

"Too much emphasis should not be placed on the results of the first day's canvassing," a Victory Loan official stated today. "In the Fifth Loan, for instance, our first day's total was approximately the same as in the present one with the first day of the Sixth Loan an all-time high. While, at the moment, the total was approximately the same their daily average must be, we are certain that they will equal the total they reached in the last loan."

A Flying Start.

6TH ARMY TROOPS FORGE AHEAD ON 20-MILE FRONT

Coastal Road South From Tacloban To Palo Entirely In American Hands

By C. YATES McDANIEL
(AP War Correspondent)

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Oct. 24 —(AP)— American liberators of 11 towns in the central Philippines drove ahead on Leyte Island today through almost impassable muck and bitterly resisting Japanese.

U. S. Sixth Army troops moved northwestward from Tacloban, at the northern tip of the 20 mile Leyte east coast front, and slid through swamps in the southern sector from Dulag. Muck and slime proved a greater obstacle in the south than the Japanese and sometimes left the advancing troops without the support of their tanks.

The coastal road south from Tacloban to Palo was entirely in American hands.

Palo and Dulag anchored the westbound arms of a potential trap reaching out to engulf enemy elements in a 140-square-mile area bounded on the east by the coast and on the west by a valley road from Burauen to Santa Fe.

Marked progress was reported today in a communique on the Dulag south arm toward Burauen. After menacing positions in the Catmon hills area were by-passed, Sherman tanks pushed seven miles into the outskirts of San Pablo, about three miles from Burauen.

Different at Palo.

It was a different story at Palo. All Monday night, the Japanese counter-attacked fiercely and it was not until this morning that the onslaught was broken bloodily. Then the Americans resumed a slow push west of the liberated town of Palo which is six miles from the road junction of Santa Fe. The advance was contested along the main road.

There are signs the Japanese have sensed the growing danger at the southern end and already are pulling out to the northwest. Opposition before San Pablo was by rearguards.

Other enemy rearguards at the extreme north end of the Leyte front reterated before cavalry troops which last night pushed three miles northwest of Tacloban, new provincial capital of the Philippines government.

11 Towns Liberated.

Gen. MacArthur's communique listed not only the liberation of 11 towns on the island of Leyte but also the complete occupation of the three small islands of Suluan, Dinagat and Homonhon guarding the entrance to Leyte Gulf.

Front line dispatches told of Filipino women and children, who took to the hills during the pre-invasion shelling, coming down into liberated communities where they were issued food and clothing.

The list of liberated towns announced included those along the road from Tacloban to Palo.

Attempts to move south of Palo were slowed down in scrub-congested palm plantations flanking the road. Warships in San Pedro Bay poured salvoes into Japanese pockets and carrier planes swept in for low-level bombing and strafing.

Most of the coastal road between Palo and Dulag apparently is in Japanese hands. MacArthur's reports are stressing the inland pushes from Dulag and Palo.

Nazi Radio Says Russians 35 Miles Inside of Border

Insterburg and Konigsberg Lie West of Break-Through

By DANIEL De LUCE

Moscow, Oct. 24 — (AP)—Russian penetration of German territory to a depth of at least 19 miles in East Prussia was proclaimed today in the first Moscow announcement of a powerful Red Army offensive that already has captured 400 German towns and villages.

Summarizing results of a thrust from Western Lithuania that the Germans have been reporting for a week, a Russian communique said Gen. Cherniakhovsky's 3rd White Russian Army had broken through frontier defences on an 87-mile front on the east.

Gen. Bagramian's 1st Baltic Army cleared the way to spring into the homeland of the Junkers from the north as other armies have done so.

Cut Off Memel Garrison

The Soviet bulletin announced Bagramian's troops had occupied all of Memel territory except the port of Memel itself, where the German garrison was cut off, and had massed along the Niemen river, East Prussia's northern border, from the Baltic to Jurbarkas in Lithuania.

Twenty salvoes from each of Moscow's 224 victory guns saluted the achievements of the Cherniakhovsky and Bagramian armies — disclosed on a day that brought announcement of nearly 1,500 towns seized by Red armies from the Norwegian border in the Arctic to Yugoslavia in the south.

Cherniakhovsky's offensive, which gave the Russians a solid footing on German soil for the first time, drove directly westward on each side of the main highway and rail routes from Kaunas, Lithuania, to Insterburg and Konigsberg. Insterburg, a hub of five railways 37 miles from the border, appeared the immediate strategical prize.

Late dispatches said the Russians were approaching Gumbinnen, on the main westward route 15 miles east of Insterburg and 63 miles from Konigsberg, East Prussian capital.

(A German broadcast last night said the Russians now had reached the Antwerp river, 17 miles west of fallen Goldap, for a total penetration of 35 miles inside East Prussia.

Berlin declared further that on the north Bagramian's forces, already within shelling range of Tilsit, had attempted to cross the Niemen and capture that fortress city on the south bank of the stream.)

Insterburg, where the sound of the Red guns already was said to be audible, lies 29 miles south of Tilsit. If Insterburg falls, the northern city would be threatened with encirclement.

Bagramian's 1st Baltic army captured 500 populated points in virtually cleaning up Memel territory, a 1,099-square-mile area ceded to Germany by Lithuania in 1939 under German pressure.

In a battle for the frozen wastes of Norway's northcap, Gen. Meretskov's Alpine troops deployed for miles along the Norwegian frontier. It was anounced officially they had cut the highway to Kirkenes, big German naval base in Norway.

(A Berlin announcement indicated they already had crossed into Norway.)

The Russians also announced gains in Hungary and Yugoslavia.

Front dispatches said elements of Hitler's new home guard, mobilized last week among civilian men from 16 to 60, had been killed or captured in the big break-through in East Prussia.

Prime Minister Appears in House

London, Oct. 24 — (CP) — Prime Minister Churchill was roundly cheered today as he took his seat on the government bench in the House of Commons for the first time since returning from Moscow.

His entry interrupted a discussion of the housing shortage due to the blitz and robot bombings.

Mr. Churchill said he would make a "shortish statement" Friday on his meeting with Premier Stalin.

He added he hoped his statement would not lead to a debate.

"But I would like to make a statement which in a way would be supplementary to what I said the last time and bring a few matters into it on which the House should be informed," Mr. Churchill said.

When John McGovern, Labor, suggested the Prime Minister was postponing his statement for lack of something to say, Mr. Churchill retorted:

"On the contrary I am considering how I can best impart the greatest amount of information without committing an indiscretion in any direction or encroaching on controversial matters."

Mr. Churchill looked well, full of energy and acknowledged his tremendous ovation with a broad smile.

Later, Mr. Churchill lunched at Buckingham Palace and was said to have given the King a full account of his mission to Moscow.

Robot Bombs Dangerous to Property But Much Less Dangerous to Life

Fredericton, Oct. 24 — (CP) — Although the robot bombs "were extremely dangerous to property, they were much less dangerous to life than might have been expected, for our shelters were safe and London became thoroughly shelter-minded," Sheila MacDonald, sister of Malcolm MacDonald, United Kingdom High Commissioner, said today in an address prepared for delivery to a Fredericton service club (Rotary).

Recently returned from a two-month visit in Britain, Miss MacDonald is touring the eastern townships and the Maritimes.

"The destruction has revealed early days of London which would otherwise have remained unknown. A bomb near the Tower of London exposed a section of the Roman wall superimposed with mediaeval masonry, and similar archaeological diggings have been carried out by the Germans in some of our other cities," said Miss MacDonald.

English women are doing much heavy work, including transfer of baggage.

The British were tired from the strain of war and in their few spare moments were glad to "sit at home and do nothing at all." There was, however, a great revival of interest in artistic subjects.

Several Trenton Industrial Firms Obtain Objectives

Trenton, Oct. 24—The Seventh Victory Loan was officially opened in Trenton yesterday when members of the 6 R.D. of the R.C.A.F., with their band, paraded through the town to the post office building where Mayor H. R. Cory unfurled the Victory Flag at 1 p.m.

Early in the morning however, ten local canvassers had set forth from the loan office on Elgin Street to cover every home in the community and canvass from every possible angle. W. H. Ireland, is chairman of the Loan Committee with his assistants W. B. McClung, H. Desjardine, C. W. Saylor, W. Bain, N. Banfield, K. Couch and A. A. Farrar Doug Mitchell, who has organized each loan for this district, is in charge with ten canvassers Alan MacNab, J. A. MacKenzie, Mrs. E. M. Parker, Mrs. D. Sager, Mrs. P. Anderson, Vic. Wemyss, M. Walt, C. Stein, Sid Martin and Bob Derry.

Before the Loan opened on Monday every Trenton industry, with the exception of two, had gone over the top, and all with large percentages. Benedict Proctor was again first to go over the top with Canadian Doughnut, Central Bridge, Crosse & Blackwell, Downs-Coulter and the Trent Dyeing Companies following close.

The opening day brought a total of $43,250, which is considerably more than the opening day of the last Victory Loan and is evidence that the citizens of Trenton are ready and willing to again do their utmost to put the loan well over the objective of $540,000 even though that is an increase of $40,000 over last loan.

Rather than have a parade for this the Seventh Loan, officials have decided in favor of several smaller ones and the parade today is to be followed by a part in the Kinsmen parade on Hallowe'en and one to be made up of personnel of the Main Station R.C.A.F. on Nov. 2nd.

White Gloves Given to Bench

Traditional white gloves, indicating the absence of criminal cases on the docket, were presented Mr. Justice Greene at the opening of the Fall Assizes of the Supreme Court here yesterday.

"The absence of criminal cases from this court reflects well upon the people of Hastings County, especially at this time," remarked His Lordship as he accepted the gloves presented by Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan K. C. on behalf of the court. Sheriff J. D. O'Flynn then presented the motions listed.

The principal motion was spoken upon by Mr. A. B. Collins K. C., city solicitor. It is a motion to name the Mayor and Comptroller of the City of Belleville as trustees for a certain playground fund left the city by the estate of the late Thos. Ritchie. The proposed trustees are to replace Mr. C. M. Reid, who was named in the original will.

Six divorce actions and a non-jury case constitute the entire agenda of the court that continued this morning.

Winner of George Medal Tells Of Experiences Devitalizing Mines

Winner of the George Medal for his services in the "mine disposal" field overseas, Lieut. George H. O. Rundle, 30-year-old member of the Royal Canadian Naval Reserve, was the guest speaker at a special Victory Loan rally held Monday noon for employees of the Bata Shoe Company.

The naval officer who wears on his tunic one of the highest badges of heroism of the war, Lieut. Rundle told of the ticklish moments mine disposal personnel experienced as they devitalized enemy mines laid in English harbor waters, and also of his experiences as a diver going "under" in friendly waters to remove the detonators from unexploded depth charges. Working in England during the early years of the war Lieut. Rundle was transferred to the East Canadian coast two-and-one-half-years ago to undertake mine disposal work in Canadian waters.

A member of the British Admiralty since 1934, Lieut. Rundle served as navigating officer in the Royal Naval Auxiliary transporting refugees during the Spanish civil war. When the present war broke out he was assigned to mine disposal work.

One of his most ticklish jobs was devitalizing an enemy mine in 48 feet of water, which was set to explode at 50 feet. Working on a life and death margin of only two feet he did the job.

Appearing as part of a rollicking stage performance by Toronto entertainers, Lieut. Rundle was introduced to approximately 500 workers by the company vice-president, Mr. C. H. Herz, who announced that the Bata objective in the Seventh Victory Loan was the highest for any industrial firm in Hastings. He termed the Loan as the Canadian "secret weapon" and stressed government need of money even after hostilities ceased in the European war theatre.

Providing entertainment prior to the program proper, the Trenton R.C.A.F. band under the direction of WO. E. Hancock, was heard in several popular numbers For the entertainment proper Don Gordon, of CBC fame, acted as piano accompanist for vocalist Betty Morrison and for the tap-dancing team of "Marge and Honor." Rounding out the program was 310-pound Johnny Perkins and his accordian.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

At Halifax the loan got away to a flying start when five ships and three naval shore establishments in the north-west Atlantic command over-subscribed their objectives. A grand total of $350,500 in bonds was purchased by naval and civilian personnel of the command. This was $100,000 more than the total of the first day in the Sixth Victory Loan.

East Coast Command of the Navy reported $350,000 on a quota of $2,700,000, while naval divisions reported an objective of $250,000 had been exceeded by $2,000. Thirteen of the 21 divisions across Canada are past their objectives.

Commodore E. R. Brock, commanding officer, said H. M. C. S. Halifonian, Halifax, had secured 301 per cent.; Headquarters Staff, Toronto, 203 per cent; and H. M. C. S. Chippewa, Winnipeg, 200 per cent.

It took H. M. C. S. Queen Charlotte, Naval Training establishment at Charlottetown, P. E. I., just 30 minutes to achieve 166 per cent of quota.

Some Quotas Exceeded.

In New Brunswick several naval and military units exceeded quotas.

Officers in training at H.M.C.S. King's, Halifax, eased past their $62,000 quota the first day, as did sub-chasing motor launches with an objective of $16,000.

Throughout Edmonton various units of the three services were reported over the top before noon, while in British Columbia-Yukon the armed forces showed the way. Formally opened on Saturday, Vancouver's new naval establishment, H.M.C.S. Discovery, has 180 per cent of quota. A small army unit told of reaching 600 per cent.

A cable was received in Vancouver from the officer commanding the 6th Canadian Field Co., R.C.E., now in Belgium. It read: "Seventh Victory Loan bond target $7,000. Already sold $14,600. Best of luck your end."

Chief of Police Horace E. McLeese of Saint John, N.B., believes he was the first man to be canvassed there. A few minutes past midnight he was reading a book in bed when he was jolted by a terrific crash. The special white "Buy Victory Bonds" bus of the New Brunswick Power Co., had coasted down a hill and crashed into his home. The Chief bought a bond as soon as it was daylight.

Research Enterprises, Toronto, announced that as early as last Tuesday their 5,400 workers had rolled up $772,000 on a $632,000 objective. Humberstone Shoe Company, Humberstone, Ont., exceeded even this record. Two weeks before the books opened $26,000 had been subscribed on a $21,000 quota, every worker pledging a purchase.

Set a Precedent.

Lethbridge, Alta., set what is believed to be a precedent on the first day of the loan by closing all liquor stores and beer parlors and, at the close of the canvass on the initial day of the drive, reported 323 subscriptions totalling $46,350. Calgary had 566 subscriptions for $271,050.

Farmers of the Peterboro, Ont., area staged an enterprising auction in which goods went to the highest bidder of bonds. The sale realized $27,500. One item raffled was an $85 broadloom rug for which 33 farmers each bid a $50 bond. A $67 cream separator brought $1,200 in bonds.

Large subscriptions reported earlier reported a er included Shawinigan Water and Power Co., and Associated Companies, Montreal, $5,000,000; Crown Life Insurance Co., Toronto, $3,000,000; Western Savings and Loan Association, Winnipeg, $1,500,000; Lake of the Woods Milling Co., Montreal, $750,000 and Wawanesa Mutual Insurance Co., Wawanesa, Man., $350,000.

The army overseas announced that it had reached 84 per cent of its total objective. In Canada, the troops had subscribed more than 50 per cent of their total objective at the end of the first day of selling. Canvassing overseas began Oct. 12.

R.M.C. Passes Quota.

First Army Group in Canada to pass its quota was the Royal Military College at Kingston, Ont., with an objective of $40,000. M.D. 13, Calgary reported $477,600, for 65 per cent of quota. Other leaders included M. D. 10, Winnipeg, $412,000 for 63 per cent; Camp Borden, Ont., $564,450 for 59 per cent; M. D. 3, Kingston, $498,250 for 56 per cent; and M. D. 6, Halifax, $635,900 for 53 per cent.

Seven thousand Massey Harris workers throughout Canada subscribed $879,000 against a quota of $700,000, within 90 minutes of the loan's opening.

Fleet Aircraft, Fort Erie, Ont., reported that 2,400 employees averaged a subscription rate of $192.

Employing 270 persons, Hill, Clark and Francis, New Liskeard, Ont., reported $29,500 already raised on an objective of $25,100. Of this amount, $23,000 was bought on the payroll savings plan, compared with $16,950 in the last loan.

Ottawa, Oct. 24 —(CP)— Ottawa service station operators decided at a meeting last night to reduce immediately the retail price of gasoline by ½ cent a gallon.

PARIS JOURNALIST IS CONDEMNED

George Suarez is Alleged to Have Received $15,000 Month for Collaboration

Paris, Oct. 24 —(AP)— George Suarez, veteran Paris journalist, was sentenced to death at Paris' first purge trial on his conviction of intelligence with the enemy during the German occupation.

As director of the Nazi-sponsored newspaper Aujourd'hui, he was alleged to have received $15,000 a month during Nazi occupation.

Only a moderate crowd filed into the gloomy halls of the old Palais de Justice for the first of a series of trials, in which the government intends in six months to deal with more than 100,000 accused of conniving with the Germans.

Suarez was calm as the trial started.

His fate—which may be the firing squad—will furnish some precedents for the trials of hundreds of other prominent pre-war writers accused of working for Nazi-dominated periodicals now suppressed.

Vast Machinery for Purge.

Vast special judicial machinery has been set up on a nation-wide basis to handle the purge. Altogether some 254 courts with one or more judges presiding over each are being established by the Minister of Justice and they are expected to begin operation all over France within two weeks.

Although military tribunals all over France have been condemning hundreds to death for over acts of treason, the more subtle cases of "collaboration" will be tried by civil courts with judge and jury—including women for the first time in French history.

In four days last week 2,000 new charges were filed in the Paris area alone—where it is estimated 10,000 people are under arrest—and several hundred more are coming in daily.

GENERAL CRERAR LEAVES HOSPITAL

Will Return to His Post As Commander in Few Days

Ottawa, Oct. 23—(CP)—Defence headquarters revealed today that Lt.-Gen. H. D. G. Crerar, Commander of the 1st Canadian Army, has been ill in Britain for the last three weeks and has been succeeded temporarily as Army Commander in France by Lt.-Gen. Guy Simonds, Commander of the Second Canadian Corps.

The announcement said Gen. Crerar, who has been suffering from an intestinal infection and a blood condition, has been discharged from hospital and will return to his post as Army Commander "in the next few days."

"A thorough examination by British and Canadian medical specialists established that Gen. Crerar's condition was due to secondary causes of a temporary nature," the announcement said.

"He responded to treatment, has been discharged from hospital and will resume his full duties and responsibilities as Army Commander in the next few days."

A Good Start

Canada's Seventh Victory Loan got off on a good start on Monday with the records of the enlisted men of the forces showing over the minimum goal in many cases, and touching the minimum in others. They have shown the way to the home front, which possesses the means of a full and complete participation in the issue now before the public.

While the war is believed to be near its end, that does not mean that the needs financially are less or declining. It means that the necessity is as great as or greater than ever for all effort is now at the peak. The war is going on with a fury unrivalled. There is the fighting in Italy as well as that in Western Europe and there is the gigantic military effort of Russia in the east, all working in unison to crush the monster of Berchtesgaden and his vile gang and the spirit in Germany that permits Nazism to control the German nation and threaten freedom elsewhere.

No one can fail to see the financial needs. Then men of the fighting forces are at the front at the post of duty and do not slacken because the war is nearer its close than it was a few months ago. They will never let up until there is the final surrender unconditionally of the German nation including its army, air force and ships.

Neither should the home front let up one iota of the sacrifice of effort that is demanded. To do so might imperil the victory and the security that the world means to have follow the crushing of Germany and Japan. Germany is fighting with desperation, for at Aachen she showed that she was ready to see her cities wiped out in her madness.

From every part of Canada must come the money to meet the demands of the accelerating war, speeding to its climax and it is hoped very early defeat. When the war is over with Germany and when Japan has also been knocked out of the fighting then only can there be any relaxation of effort.

Every Canadian means that the war must be fought to the most crushing defeat of the enemy and every Canadian must as far as he and she are able serve in every way or do the utmost in industry with their labor and financially with their means. For the home front the task is imperative and will not be denied.

And Victory Bonds are the banner investment and at the same time they carry the guarantee of protection against runaway price markets. He who has his family chest filled with Victory Bonds and War Savings Certificates has set his financial house in order and on a solid foundation.

Freedom of the Seas

Were Lord Nelson alive today, what would be his feelings on the news that the largest ocean convoy in all history has arrived overseas with 167 vessels carrying more than one million tons of food and war equipment! He would feel that the spirit of the men of his day is emulated by the spirit of the men of today in the navy and in the merchant marine. He would be happy because he would recall that just 139 years ago he fought at Trafalgar and there guaranteed for the future generations of the world of not only Britain but for all the world of true and just men that freedom of the seas.

That is what has been done in our day in the past five and more years of this struggle. The spirit of Nelson at sea and the spirit of Wellington at Waterloo live today in the sea services and in the armies

Lord Nelson in his day could never have realized that the year 1944 would see such huge convoys twenty-six square miles in area crossing the great Atlantic without a mishap.

To Canada this feat has a meaning too for a Canadian frigate escorted the convoy. For seventeen days this slowly moving wealth of ships and cargoes moved eastbound.

Once again the freedom of the seas means something that in the time when airplanes can be used with great effectiveness cannot be guaranteed on land. Railway lines and roads may be blown up but the ocean waters cannot be blown up or destroyed. They are the ally of the nations that keep the ocean lanes free. They are the ally of freedom and the freedom-loving nations.

Hitler in his mad dream of empire to be won by looting the world of its wealth, never foresaw so great a traffic over the Atlantic as 35,000,000 tons of shipping which has been piloted across the seas in this war to the places where it has been and can be most effectively used.

Friday the Thirteenth

Persons who look upon Friday the thirteenth as one carrying sombre threats of trouble should correct their viewpoint and mental twist when they remember that the greatest amphibious operation since D-Day was carried out after it had been launched on Friday the thirteenth of October. That was the day when the American convoy for the Philippines was assembled. Had the leaders been superstitious which as wideawake and farseeing men they could not be, the convoy operation might have been delayed. But they had no such dread.

Here is a Friday the thirteenth when good for humanity was set in motion and woes innumerable set afoot for the Japanese aggressors.

Other People's Children

(New York Times)

The "spoiled brat" is a sick child and the whaling the tar out of him will not "do the slightest bit of good," Dr. Bert L. Beverly, pediatric psychiatrist of the School of Medicine, University of Illinois, said at Chicago in a talk before the annual meeting of the Interstate Post-Graduate Medical Association of North America, attended by about 5,000 physicians, nurses and medical technicians from all parts of the United States, Canada and foreign countries.

Spanking the brat or spoiled child "only makes the parents feel better," Dr. Beverly asserted.

To prevent a child from becoming a brat, he stipulated the following conditions:

The child must be wanted and loved and know it.

He must be accepted as he is.

He must not be compelled to grow up under impossible standards of behavior which parents sometimes set up.

"Love and affection are about all you need to raise a child who will not develop into the brat stage," Dr. Beverly asserted. "Parents should never refer to their children as being a 'bad boy' or a 'bad girl'." When youngsters were so designated they lost confidence in their parents.

Teaching History

(London Free Press)

History is all around us. We are living it and making it every hour, and obviously the proper way to approach the study of history is to use it to illustrate our own community life and background.

Then the wider implications can be drawn, building up from what is known and familiar to wider concepts. Both are essential, but any attempt to ram the wider concepts down the throats of children are likely to result in nothing more than boredom.

History—the story of the struggles of mankind with forces outside and inside themselves—is one of the most vivid and dramatic of studies. It is the story of life itself. But it can easily degenerate into dry chronicles or be perverted into disruptive propaganda.

A Gun for Dover?

(Letter to the London Times)

Sir:— Now that Calais has been liberated and Dover is freed from her long ordeal of attacks by shells and bombs of every description it would seem fitting that one of the enemy 16 in. guns captured at Calais should be presented to Dover, the gun to be sited in a suitable position as a memorial to the heroism of the people of Dover.

SHOCK ON A DINER

That better world that is to be
I glimpsed upon a train,
A sight I never hoped to see
And may not see again.
E'en now the memory of it thrills
So new it was and strange:
The waiter brought four dollar bills
And fifteen cents in change!

He took to meet the breakfast-slip
My fiver on a tray,
But did not seek the larger tip
As is the waiter's way.
An end to one of travel's ills
He managed to arrange,
He brought me back four dollar bills
And fifteen cents in change!

He did not strew the silver tray
With quarters, halves and dimes,
As is the waiter's usual way,
Though these are troubled times:
Now hope is shining on the hills
And every mountain range,
He brought me back four dollar bills
And fifteen cents in change!

NUGGETS OF KNOWLEDGE

If Harry S. Truman is elected on November 7 he will not be the first Vice President of the United States whose middle initial stands for no name.

Daniel D. Tompkins, of New York, who was Vice President from 1817 to 1825 under President Monroe, was christened simply Daniel. He adopted the middle initial "D." to distinguish himself from a schoolmate of the same name. Like the "S." in Truman's name it stood for no word.

Tompkins was the first Vice President to write his name with a middle initial. His five predecessors —John Adams, Thomas Jefferson, Aaron Burr, George Clinton and Elbridge Gerry—had no middle names.

When Thomas Riley Marshall was reelected in 1916 he was the first Vice President to be chosen to succeed himself in 88 years. John Adams, George Clinton, Daniel D. Tompkins and John C. Calhoun were all elected to a second term as Vice President, but between Calhoun and Marshall not a single Vice President was elected for a second term. Since Marshall only John N. Garner has served a second term as Vice President. Thus since the adoption of the constitution only six Vice Presidents have served more than four years.

"Passing the buck," meaning shifting responsibility, is a product of the cardroom. In various card games a counter or marker is placed on the table before each of the players to remind him of his turn to deal. This marker, which is to prevent mistakes as to the position of the deal, is called the "buck" and is passed from player to player as the turn to deal goes around. In poker a marker or buck is sometimes put into a jack pot, another jack pot being in order when the deal passes to the player having the buck. Thus to pass the buck to another player obligates the dealer to ante for another jack pot. From this circumstance "to pass the buck" came to signify to shift the responsibility to someone else.

Frederick William, Crown Prince of Germany from the time of his birth until the downfall of the Hohenzollerns in 1918, was called "The Laughing Murderer of Verdun" by his enemies during the First World War. He commanded the forces before Verdun and the name referred to the terrific losses his army sustained in his unsuccessful attempt to capture that fortress.

The battle of Verdun was the longest and bloodiest battle in all history up to that time. It began February, 1916, with a terrific German offensive that carried the German army under Frederick William to within four miles of Verdun within three days. The desperate but successful offensive of the French under Petain and Nivelle crystallized in the famous battle cry, "They shall not pass." Two million men were engaged in the action and about a million were killed. It was said that Crown Prince Frederick William took these losses lightly.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Re. Gas By-Law

Editor:
Ontario Intelligencer;

Through the columns of your paper I would like to ask His Worship the Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Belleville the following questions, as you are going to present a by-law to voters regarding the gas plant closing. I am sure the public should know why the by-law is being presented.

1. What date did the Public Utility take over the gas works?
2. What was the net profit or loss during that year and each year following?

I think all using gas and in fact every tax payer should have a detailed statement from the time the Utility took over the gas plant until the present date.

Awaiting a reply from the Mayor and Council, I am,

Yours very truly,
A Gas User.

The Shark Is A Sissy

(Colliers)

Inch for inch and pound for pound, the shark is the most cowardly thing that swims, walks or flies. Forced landings and shipwrecks in shark-infested waters have led to unparalleled intimacy between hundreds of young Americans and the so-called "tigers of the sea." Their experiences, combined with renewed research by U. S. Navy experts and marine scientists, have shattered superstitions that had been believed since the days of Aristotle. The truth seems to be that the men who know sharks best fear them least.

This does not mean that familiarity with shark habits and behavior has made the sailors and flyers love them. No shark, no matter how gracefully he may glide through the water, is lovely—particularly to men paddling home on a rubber raft. But tales of man-eaters have grown with the telling for centuries, and so many tall shark stories have been coming in from tropic war zones that frankly skeptical experts have been running every thriller through the filter of scientific fact.

There have been authenticated cases where sharks attacked and killed human beings. On the other hand, scores of American flyers forced down in the South Pacific, where sharks seem to be hungriest, have frightened the tough-skinned brutes away with no more than a well-voiced "Boo!" or a playful jab in the shark's direction.

Stories of shark ferocity have been so thoroughly disproved that the Navy's Bureau of Aeronautics, in a pamphlet recently issued to its flyers, makes the statement that, in the opinion of scientists, commercial fishermen, sponge divers and others who have studied the shark over long periods of time, there is practically no danger that an unwounded man floating in a life jacket will be attacked by a shark.

MULL BEFORE YOU MOVE

We are moving to California. Please inform me which locality would be better for me, as I have chronic bronchitis and asthma spells. We would like to be fairly near a government plant as my husband is a machinist. We plan to drive out with our trailer so the housing problem is out of the way.

(Mrs. F. M.)

My answer to your query, Ma'am, is probably not the conventional one. I have less faith in the remedial value of season, locality, residence or climate than most people have.

I base my opinion on the vital statistics The U. S. government has established numerous hospitals and sanitoriums for tuberculosis and other diseases, in every part of the country—in places where the temperature falls to 20 below zero as well as in places where there may be little change of temperature the year around. Evidently the government is not prejudiced for or against any climate or locality. Patients in these institutions recover as well in one place as in another.

Some persons with chronic bronchitis, emphysema, bronchiectasis, asthma, sinusitis, or an undiagnosed complaint they are content to call "catarrh" are more comfortable in a cold dry locality such as the Adirondacks in New York or the Rockies in Colorado or British Columbia. Others live more comfortably in moist warm places such as Florida, Bermuda.

There is a good deal too much speculation and fancy in the popular idea of climate. Tuberculosis occurs in every climate or locality in North America, with little variation in incidence per thousand population. Likewise recovery from tuberculosis occurs as frequently in one climate or locality as it does in another. If this is true, by the vital statistic, it is no doubt just as true in regard to other diseases for which change of climate or residence is popularly deemed necessary or advisable.

To the correspondent who asks where she should live, I say perhaps right where she lives now. But if she and friend husband are determined to migrate, then perhaps they should park the trailer first in or near any village or small city in Southern California and see how they like it. The climate of Southern California is moderately warm and dry.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Good Nutrition

I have eaten no refined sugar in the last five years. (If so it was because I could not avoid it). My source of sugar is from honey, raisins, plenty of fruit and vegetables, fresh, canned, raw or cooked. Our fruit is canned without sugar and to me it has a more delicious flavor. My muffins, cake or cookies are baked with whole wheat flour, wheat germ, soy bean flour (raised and ground myself). My bread is whole wheat and dry toasted. I am 46. I have more vite, more vigor and less fatigue than I ever knew when I lived largely on white flour and white sugar.

(S. E. R.)

Answer—Using whole wheat flour (with nothing whatever removed in grinding) and natural sugar instead of refined sugar, the average person gets about 550 more international units of B1 daily than he or she gets if white flour and white sugar are used in the average per capita amounts. Naturally the vite, vigor and general well being are more nearly what they should be. It is difficult to change even partly to whole wheat unless you buy and grind your own. Send stamped envelope bearing your address, for pamphlet "Wheat to Eat"—which tells you how to use plain wheat in the everyday family dietary. It makes for good nutrition and good economy.

Happy Birthday, Little Sergeant

I was a member of the W.A.C. I married a sergeant. He was killed in a plane crash, and I have been discharged because I am expectant. My doctor has given me some pamphlets but I want to get whatever you have for the expectant mother.

(Mrs. F. J.)

Answer—Copies of "Preparing for Maternity" and "The Brady Baby Book" are on the way to you. I am glad to send these to any service man or his wife with our best wishes. Others may send ten cents for each booklet, and stamped self addressed envelope.

SETS NEW RECORD

Toronto Oct. 24 (CP)—A. Miller, an official of de Havilland Aircraft of Canada, Limited, said last night that Jim Follett, the company's chief test pilot, set a new speed mark when he flew a Mosquito from Fort William to Toronto—a distance of 610 ground miles—in an hour and 23 minutes. The plane's average speed was 410 M.P.H.

DROWNED WHILE FISHING

Kingston, Oct. 24 (CP)—Bodies of a man and woman found in the St. Lawrence river yesterday near Long Point on nearby Wolfe Island have been identified as F. W. Bothwell, 33, and his wife, Katherine, 28, of Kingston. The couple went fishing in a light boat Sunday while heavy seas were running.

City Council Votes 8 to 7 For Submission of Question Of Closing Gas Plant to Voters

The question of selling, operating or otherwise disposing of the gas plant by the corporation will be decided by the ratepayers in the form of a question to be submitted to the ratepayers at the next municipal election according to a by-law passed at the regular session of the council on Monday evening. The vote was 8 to 7 and when the Yeas and Nays were requested the following vote was recorded Yeas, Mayor Rollins, Aldermen Armstrong, Butler, Chamberlain, Clarke, Hyde, McDougall and Pringle and the Nays, Aldermen Allin, Clapp, Follwell, Harvey, Trudeau, Wilbur and Woodley. Considerable discussion took place before the vote was taken and many of the points were rehashed that have been the medium of discussion on this utility in the years past. It was a lengthy session the time being extended and deliberations were not concluded until the midnight hour.

Keep Going if Feasible.

In opening the discussion Ald. Butler stated he was on a committee several years ago with respect to the gas plant and that he was in favor of keeping it going then and was still of the same opinion providing it was a feasible proposition. "By submitting the question I do not believe that the council has obligated itself to any immediate procedure and that all questions that have been brought up both pro and con can be fully looked into and reasonable judgment applied", said Ald. Butler. Ald. Clapp proposed that the gas plant be turned into a coke oven and this by-product be sold to the coal dealers and they in turn sell it to the people. He showed there were 662 domestic users of gas in the city and 111 commercial users and that a debt of $153,728 had already been paid and from now until 1960 there are non callable debenture to be paid amounting to $218,572 and he was convinced it would not be good business to close the plant. He also showed what could be produced out of a ton of coal if the plant was operated as a coke oven and would like to have the opinion of an engineer as to whether it was feasible to turn the plant over.

Thought Question Premature.

Ald. Allin thought the question was premature and that the city was probably obligated to keep the plant in operation during wartime. "This gas is used by industry in this city with an employment far greater than the number quoted as domestic users and it is vital that the gas should be retained", said the Alderman. Ald. Follwell agreed with the speakers and so did Ald. Chamberlain. Ald. Harvey was not in favor of closing the plant. Ald. Pringle, who introduced the motion stated the plant was built in 1854 and operated by a private company for 50 years. "In 1904 it was taken over by the corporation and in 1931 sold to the Ontario Shore Gas Company", said Ald. Pringle. "From 1919 to 1931 the city loss was $77,000. In 1937 the city again assumed control and soon after turned it over to the Public Utilities and since 1941 the operating loss has been $18,000". He also stated that improvements were made in 1928-30 that cost the city $185,000 and although we have had a lot of experts give their advice on the plant none has shown how it could be operated at a profit. There are eight industrial users in the city and I don't think they will have to leave Belleville if the plant is closed and I don't think it is necessary to have gas to get industries for the city.

Thought People Should Say.

Ald. Armstrong suggested the amount that it might take to convert the plant to a coke oven could be used to compensate the gas users that would have to turn to electricity. Mayor Rollins thought that the people should have the say and that Ald. Clapp did not quote the cost of obtaining the amount of gross profit that was named. Ald. Chamberlain thought the council would not be justified to make the expenses necessary to convert the plant and Ald. McDougall was of the opinion there would not be sufficient sale for the coke for the plant to be converted. Before the discussion took place some members were in favor of referring the matter back but on a vote this was defeated so the discussion continued and finally the above vote was recorded. Following this move the by-law for submission to the people was passed through the various stages.

Wanted Question Aired.

Ald. Chamberlain requested that the agreement between the Utilities and the city made by Ald. Clarke and his committee respecting the payment of a $10,000 deficit in the gas utility be aired in open council. He stated it was an unforeseen expenditure and argued that the council budgeted for a deficit, when the rate was struck.

Ald. Clarke was not of the same opinion and neither was Mayor Rollins. Ald. Chamberlain stated, that the money was being paid out of the surplus of the Sinking Fund and that he did not believe this money could be used for current expenditure without autherity. He claimed the city was bleeding the only source of profit. Mayor Rollins explained to the members, that the Utilities was to pay the city $10,000 this year and that the city was to pay their deficit to the Utilities by the end of 1944. "This year", said the Mayor, "we had $5,500 profit in the Sinking Fund from the sale of bonds and we were authorized by Department of Municipal Affairs in Toronto to pay that amount to the Utilities on our debt of next year. Again the sum of $3,150 was made on the sale of bonds and as the act does not provide, that the profits be put in the Sinking Fund we kept this money in current revenue. From the sale of property we estimated $[illegible] but we have sold to date nearly $7,000 and with the two amounts we have wiped out our debt to the Utilities and I think that is good business".

Eating Into Reserves Claim.

Ald. Clapp argued that the city was not running according to the mill rate set but was opposed by most of the members in this contention. Ald. Allin stated that the corporation was eating into the reserves to keep the rate down but Ald. Armstrong showed that the money required to be placed in the Sinking Fund had been deposited. Ald. Chamberlain asked why the city was so anxious to pay the $10,000 and was it not true that the Utilities refused to pay their $10,000 until the city did likewise. Ald. Clarke covered the same ground as the Mayor in explaining the situation and showed that the surplus from the sale of bonds did not belong in the Sinking Fund according to the auditor. We sold the Ontario bonds and received a profit of $3,150 and the money obtained was used to buy Victory Bonds. This closed the discussion.

Place Street Lights.

Street lights will be placed at 118 Queen Street, on William between Bridge and Dundas, on Ponton between W. Moira and Green Street and on West Dundas near Reliance Industries. Three firemen's suits and two overcoats will be purchased and $1,075 will be offered for the A.R.P. equipment now in the city. Three pieces of property were sold upon which houses will be built in the near future. The engineer and the solicitor were authorized to investigate the lowering of sewer levels and if in line with the Municipal Act, that a by-law be prepared regulating the change of sewer laterals as between the owner and municipality. The work on Mt. Pleasant Road will be proceeded with at once and an itemized statement of the cost must be given the council by the engineer. The comptroller was instructed to interview all civil employees and ascertain if they wish to take advantage of the pension plan as passed by council and that he report to the council as soon as the survey is made. The City Engineer will attend the convention on sewage and sanitation to be held in Toronto next week. The advisability of putting a Stop sign at Pine and Bleecker, was left to a committee of Aldermen Follwell, Woodley and Wilbur. A letter reporting disturbances in the vicinity of Turnbull and Lattimer streets in the early hours of the morning was passed on to the Chief of Police for his action.

Many Enquiries Made.

Under the heading of enquiries Ald. Allin asked if anything had been done about the Meira River and Mayor Rollins stated he was interviewing officials at Corbyville today. Ald. Wilbur asked what had been done about providing rinks for children and it was announced that a meeting between the Board of Education and a committee from the council had been held and that the Board was willing that the school properties be used the council to provide the insurance and the Y.M.C.A. the supervision. The cushions will be prepared immediately under the direction of Ald. Clapp and the rinks will be ready early in the winter. Ald. Follwell asked if no parking signs had been placed on Coleman Street south of Bridge and Ald. Armstrong stated this was being done. Ald. Pringle asked if the local Justice of the Peace had been marking cars and the Alderman replied in the negative.

Will Answer Letter.

Ald. McDougall thought it was advisable to answer the letter in the Ontario Intelligencer respecting fixed assessment and he was instructed to meet the assessor and have him draft a letter. Ald. Trudeau wanted to know how the folder was progressing, which was to advertise the city and Ald. Pringle stated the photographer was busy at the present time getting the cuts ready. Ald. Hyde asked abous Standard Time and Mayor Rollins expressed the hope that Daylight Time would be made standard.

Mrs. Stan Upper, the secretary of the Board, and Ald. H. J. Clarke were thanked for their efforts in issuing the ration books. The helpers were also praised by the council. Ald. Clarke stated over 18,000 books were issued. Ald. Butler thanked the Corvette Committee and Mayor Rollins for the very fine ceremony put on in Kingston on Sunday and the Mayor thanked the council for their interest and stated the men of the ship were most grateful to the citizens for the splendid job done. A motion was passed that the public works department under direction of the City Engineer made a complete survey of all Stop signs and Parking signs and wherever necessary they be painted and repaired and new signs placed where needed.

The City Solicitor, A. B. Collins, answered two questions submitted by council, the answers being herewith given:

Re: Public Parks in City of Belleville.

Replying to yours of the 11th inst. by virtue of by-law number 2449 passed in pursuance of the powers conferred upon municipalities by the Public Parks Act, R.S.O. 1937, Chapter 285, the general management, regulation and control of all existing parks and avenues and all parks and avenues which may thereafter be acquired is vested in the Board of Parks Management, which came into existence by virtue of the said By-law passed pursuant to the Provisions of the said Act.

Section 12 of the said Act deals with the powers of the Board to acquire land for park purposes.

Sub-section 3 thereof specifically states that the conveyance of all lands, rights and privileges so acquired by purchase or lease shall be taken to the Municipal Corporation.

Obviously the powers of the Board of Park Management are limited to the general management, regulation and control of the parks but the title to the lands laid out for parks remains vested in the Municipal Corporation.

Re: Bass and Fielding

This matter was referred to the writer some little time ago and in connection therewith a letter was addressed to you under date of September 11th last wherein it was pointed out that heretofore Council has consistently declined to make refund where applications of a similar nature were presented to it.

The facts would appear to be that the above-named firm' when establishing in Belleville applied for and was granted a Transient Trader's License. Neither under the by-law nor in the Statute is there any provision for a refund. The Statute does provide for an off-set in favour of the licensee of the amount of taxes thereafter accruing against him as provided for by sub-section 6 (f) of Section 439 of The Municipal Act—hence therefore after the license is taken out the sum paid therefore should be credited to the licensee on account of taxes thereafter payable by the licensee until such time as the licensee had received a credit for the full amount paid for the license provided however that the licensee continued in business until the aggregate of his taxes would have offset the sum paid for the license.

Returned herewith you will please find letter of October 6th addressed to you by Messrs. Cameron & Sprague and a declaration thereto annexed of Clarence Grimshaw Fielding.

There being no further business the council adjourned.

Ancestor of Capt. Roome Hoisted Nelson's Historic Message to Fleet

One hundred and thirty-nine years ago, as his flagship, H.M.S. "Victory" led the British fleet into action off Cape Trafalgar, Admiral Horatio Nelson, gave orders that a signal message be hoisted. It read: "England expects this day that every man will do his duty."

The name of the boy sailor who ran up the signal flags was Harry (Yeoman of Signals) Roome, great-great-grandfather of a Royal Canadian Navy officer, now stationed at R.C.N. headquarters, Ottawa.

He is Captain G. L. Roome, superintendent of the contract-built shipping program of the Royal Canadian Navy.

Captain Roome was in the city on Saturday last on behalf of the inauguration of the Seventh Victory Loan campaign here, and also took part in the official adoption ceremonies of H.M.C.S. "Belleville" at Kingston on Sunday.

Possesses Press Clipping.

On Saturday, Trafalgar Day, Captain Roome became heir to a little press clipping, published in the London press 139 years ago, recording the words which became the great rallying cry of gallant seamen down the years, and the name of the lad who signalled the message.

The clipping, now worn and yellowed with age, cherished by each succeeding generation will be handed down soon to Captain Roome. At present it is in the possession of his father, Engineer Rear-Admiral G. W. Roome, Royal Navy, retired.

The corvette "Belleville" was the 365th ship that Captain Roome has officially "accepted" from the builders on behalf of the Navy. He averages one a day. A brother Captain H. S. Roome, R.N., now stationed with the Admiralty in London, England, is also a Great War veteran. An uncle Paymaster-Commander P. W. Roome went down with his ship in the last war.

H.M.C.S. Belleville Finest Corvette

Speaking of the "Belleville," Captain Roome on Sunday told the Ontario Intelligencer that "she is the finest corvette it has been my pleasure to accept as yet. She is well-equipped and will give a fine account of herself."

He paid a fine tribute to the residents of the city of Belleville in their generous gesture of providing the trim little ship with comforts for its personnel. "You have done a fine job in this work" he said, "and I am sure that the ship's company greatly appreciate what the people of your city have done for them."

Captain Roome has a fifteen-year-old son Michael who will soon be of age to carry on the Roome tradition in the navy. He is at present serving in a cadet corps.

ALLAN MILLS—

Promotion Given Posthumously

Allan Mills — Mr. and Mrs. Harold Rowe, of Campbellford, formerly of this vicinity, received word from the Director of Records at Ottawa that their son, Sergeant Pilot Arthur M. Rowe, had been promoted posthumously to the rank of Flight Sergeant.

The following letter was received:

Dear Mr. Rowe: I am directed to advise you that your son, Arthur Milton Rowe, has been promoted to the rank of Flight Sergeant with effect from May 21st., 1942.

This promotion is based on a policy inaugurated by the Royal Canadian Air Force, whereby air crew members of the service who have been recommended previously by their commanding officer for the next higher rank and who would have received the promotion but for the intervention of untimely death, are promoted to that rank effective six months from the date of their last promotion.

It is my sincere hope that you may find sustaining comfort in the knowledge that the qualities of your gallant son are thus recognized, and it is regretted that this information could not be passed on to you at an earlier date, but delay in notifying you was unavoidable.

May I again express to you and the members of your family my profound sympathy.

Yours Sincerely,
T. K. McDougall,
R.C.A.F. Records Officer for Chief of the Air Force.

Police Determined To End Noise Nuisance in City

Belleville police are determined to stamp out the prevailing practice of the unnecessary sounding of motor vehicle horns within the city limits. Just as a reminder to the motoring public regarding this practice a local motorist paid $6.00, including costs, for the continued and unnecessary sounding of a musical horn in the city.

"Not only war workers, but city residents in general desire to obtain their rest at night, but with auto horns blowing at random and with abandon rest is impossible. We have received numerous complaints regarding this practice and it must be discontinued," warned Deputy Chief Arthur Harman after court today. The party charged with making an unnecessary noise was Jack Phillips of this city. He paid his fine and costs prior to the opening of court held before Magistrate A. B. Collins today.

Deputy Harman also pointed out that the Highway Traffic Act provided that no vehicle shall make "an unnecessary or unreasonable noise by sounding a horn".

Hon. W.D. Black, Former Speaker, Dies in Ottawa

Kingston, Oct 24 (CP) — Hon. William David Black, former speaker of the Ontario legislature and Conservative member for Addington for 33 years, died today at the home of his daughter, Mrs. J. W. Stroder, Ottawa, after a lengthy illness He was 76.

The 33 years he served without suffering defeat is believed to be the longest period of any legislature member.

In 1911 he entered the Ontario legislature as member for Addington and was re-elected at each succeeding general election in 1914, 1923, 1929, 1934 and 1937. He retired before the general election last August.

POLICE COURT

George A. Draper, 22-year-old member of the R.C.E. stationed at Petawawa, pleaded guilty to a charge of bigamy when arraigned before Magistrate A. B. Collins in city police court today. His Worship reserved sentence judgment for one week.

Draper admitted marrying a girl in his native Brantford in July of 1940 and also of going through the form of marriage with a local girl on Nov. 1st., 1943. He enlisted, he said, in January, 1942, after having family trouble.

"Apparently he thought he was no longer obligated to his first wife," added Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, who added that it was the aggrieved young lady he married in Belleville who had to suffer.

"Penalty for such an offence as this runs high, it could be seven years," remarked His Worship as he deemed it advisable to consider the matter before meting out sentence.

Wilmot Maybee, of Wellmans Corners, paid $25 and costs after pleading guilty to a charge of careless driving, while a charge of theft against John C. Brewer was laid over until the next court at the request of the accused.

Pleads Not Guilty.

John J. Moxam, Bancroft, appeared on two traffic counts, one of dangerous driving and the other of leaving the scene of an accident. These counts arose out of an accident some weeks ago when a motorcycle, ridden by Thos. Donnan and Murray McIntosh, of this city, was struck at the intersection of Pinnacle St. and Victoria Ave., resulting in injuries to McIntosh. Through Mr. E. O. Butler the accused man pleaded not guilty while Assistant Crown Attorney S. Gordon Robertson assumed the prosecutor's role as Mr. Donnan refrained from the prosecution owing to the fact his son, Flt.-Sergt. Thos. Donnan, was one of the principal witnesses. Flt.-Sergt. Donnan was the only witness called today, his evidence being heard because he has been posted by the R.C.A.F. The remainder of the witnesses will be heard at a later date.

Two persons paid drunk fines prior to the opening of court and therefore did not have to appear in person today.

Wight officiated at the wedding ceremony on Saturday afternoon, October 21st., at 2.30 o'clock, at 183 William Street, of Maud Reddick, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Murney Reddick, Rossmore, to Howard Mathew Green, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Green, also of Rossmore. Mr. and Mrs. Reddick were the witnesses for the occasion.

THOMPSON-FLEMING

Queensboro — A very pretty autumn wedding was solemnized in the Queensboro United Church when Ella Mae Fleming was married to Allan Thompson, youngest son of Mrs Thompson and the late Charles Thompson of Queensboro, Rev. W. Patterson officiating. The church, which was filled to capacity, was beautifully decorated for the occasion with evergreens and bittersweet.

The bride entered the church on the arm of her brother-in-law Robert McCaffrey to the strains of wedding march from Lohengrin. She was winsome in a floor-length gown of white chiffon with applique trimming and finger-tip veil with a coronet of orange blossoms. Her bouquet was of crimson roses.

Miss Hazel Thompson, sister of the groom, was bridesmaid and was charmingly gowned in turquoise blue chiffon with matching floral headdress and chrysanthemum nosegay.

The groomsman was Mr. Glenn Fleming, brother of the bride.

The bride's mother, Mrs. John Fleming, wore a dress of old gold crepe with matching hat and Mrs. Thompson mother of the groom, wore a Nassau blue crepe dress and hat.

Following the wedding a reception was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert McCaffrey. A dinner was served to some thirty guests after which the happy couple left for Niagara Falls and points west. The bride travelled in a Kelly green herringbone wool dress with matching hat and bag and short fur jacket.

On their return they will reside on the groom's farm near Queensboro.

Hall, of Calgary, Alberta, to Sgt. Howard G. Aziz, R.C.A.F., W.A.G., son of Mr. and Mrs. G. J. Aziz, of Trenton. The Rev. K. F. Blachford, B.A., solemnized the wedding ceremony before an altar banked with a lovely floral array of Winter white 'mums.

The bride, who was given in marriage by Mr. Oswald Larry, was attired in a particularly attractive ensemble in pastel blue shade, complemented with matching hat, black accessories and corsage of orchids.

Miss Charlotte Lestikau, Toronto, was a charming bridesmaid wearing a two-piece blush jersey dress and accented with small hat misted with blush feathers. Her accessories were black and her corsage was of roses.

Some Helpful Suggestions For Care of the Complexion

Remove Make-up by Applying Cold Cream.

By HELEN FOLLETT

EVERY woman who has passed the thirtieth mark should do a bit of heavy thinking about keeping her complexion youthful looking. Something more is necessary than cleanliness of the skin surface, laying on the calcimine and blushes. We're doing better by ourselves every year but even more can be accomplished. The big trouble is that no woman strives and fights to retain the youthful bloom until the bloom begins to fade.

Things will be different in the future. The goddess Hygeia will have even more followers; it is possible that wrinkles will not appear before the age of 60. Even more attention will be paid to the subject of nutrition. Food will be more appetizingly prepared, exercise will not be the bugbear that it is to many women. We will realize that normal circulation plays a large part in keeping one young and good looking.

Cosmetics Helpful.

Cosmetics are helpful, but they should be backed up by health habits. One must have fresh air and sunlight, long hours of restful sleep. One must eat wisely and be strong, courageous and cheerful. A woman's character and disposition form their imprints upon the face.

Local treatment consists of a five minute massage with a heavy emollient before going to bed. Tapping not only rouses sluggish blood streams, but it tones and hardens facial fibres that are bound to soften as birthdays bank up.

Facial Cleansing.

The stop-and-go method just doesn't work. No woman should go to bed with a dirty face and, after the face has been washed, it should be oiled. The skin thrives on lubrication. Have at hand a jar of cold cream for removing make-up, a jar of massage cream to be frictioned into the flesh, allowed to remain on over night.

In the morning dash on cold water and, if tiny lines have appeared, used an astringent. Let it dry on. A few minutes later you can play with the make-up box. And keep tranquil. That's half the battle.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Do Not Print Engagement Announcements

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

I am planning to announce my engagement, and since so many of our friends are in the service or away from home at college, and because my fiance is from out-of-town, would it be proper to send small formal announcements, engraved with just our names and "Engaged" above the names? If you tell me this is proper, should the date be included?

Florence

I don't approve of engraved (or printed) engagement announcements, and I hope I can persuade you not to send them. These "formal" announcements of an engagement have never been accepted as good taste by people of good taste. (Engravers and printers try, of course, to "push" these, but naturally they are more interested in what's what in a sale rather than what's what in good form.)

Your reasons for sending these announcements are not really reasons, but excuses for taking the easiest way to inform your friends of The News. Notes will reach your far-away friends just as easily and quickly as cards!

Now I know that you want to have your relatives and friends regard you as a girl who knows what's what, as a girl who announces her engagement in a way accepted as a proper way. In doing the incorrect thing, aren't you thoughtlessly taking for granted that your friends haven't a proper sense of taste and appropriateness? Believe me, if they have good taste they won't be proud of your taste if you send them the news of your engagement via a bleak and impersonal card of "formal" announcement. These friends are entitled to receive, and should receive, such personal news about you in a properly personal form. And the properly personal form is notes, written by you to your far-away relatives and friends, notes written by your fiance to his relatives, and friends. This is the right way, the personal, delightful, heart-warming way to tell your relatives and friends your happy news.

Telephone Manners.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

I am always puzzled as to just what to do when I am with one or two people calling on a friend and the friend answers the telephone in the same room with us. What's the polite thing to do?

Wondering.

This is a quandary, for to continue to talk seems discourteous, and to be completely silent seems as if we were trying to "listen in" on the telephone conversation. The best thing to do, I think, is for the "waiters" to speak together in very-lowered tones, so the person answering the telephone can hear what is being said to her and can also have as much privacy as possible.

Duties of Bridesmaids.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,—

Next month I am to be bridesmaid at my best friend's wedding. It is to be a large church wedding, and I am uncertain as to my duties as bridesmaid. Will you outline them for me, please?

E. J.

Your duties as bridesmaid might be listed as "charm" duties. That is, you are expected, of course, to look your prettiest. To adapt yourself graciously to all the bride's plans for your costume-fittings and so forth, and for all wedding plans. To be attentive and completely co-operative, at the wedding rehearsal, so you will know precisely what you are expected to do at the wedding itself. And (and this is more important than many bridesmaids remember it is) be charmingly friendly as you receive the guests in the receiving-line, whether or not you know them.

The Marry Go Round

Experimenting With Marriage

I often wonder why people who have found a perfectly happy and contented marriage will experiment with it.

You know what I mean. Somebody is always trying or suggesting a new "stunt" to make marriage more exciting or less monotonous or more colorful. In the last two decades everything has been enthusiasticaly touted, from living in separate apartments to Companionate Marriage and "extra-marital experiment", which is a polite name for free love.

About the silliest of these brilliant suggestions is that of husband and wife taking "separate vacations". A very happily-married young couple of my acquaintance thought they'd try this experiment and make Guinea pigs of themselves. They were like the man who kept hitting himself on the head with a hammer "because it felt so good when he stopped". They have just returned from their "separate vacations" and admit that those "vacations" were the two most bitterly unhappy and boresome weeks of their lives.

Separate vacations are only for wives of long standing who HAVE to take the children to the country for the summer; and even then, these wives feel a little doubtful about leaving their husbands alone in the hot and dangerous city. But sometimes it does a man good to get the family off his nerves between weekends.

However, this does not apply to congenial young married people. (And I don't believe in any other kind of married people.) What did they marry for if they are not congenial and cannot take their good times and pleasures, together? It is only the very rare, exceptional and very lucky young couple who can enjoy working together. Only an occasional pair of artists or writers or designers, or people who have gone into business together.

If the average married couple cannot enjoy their PLAYTIMES together—if they are not the best playmates in the world, if they do not have better times with each other than with anybody else in the world, they just shouldn't be married at all! They do not BELONG! They are mismated—each has gotten somebody else's mate!

This does not mean that a man should not have his men friends, his masculine pursuits, his golf, his fishing trips, his poker games with "the boys"—all those sacred he-man moments when no woman is wanted around. Neither does it mean that a wife should not have her bridge club, her evenings with "the girls" and her trips to visit "Mother"—her individual feminine life.

It simply means that they should be able to enjoy most of life with each other, better than with anybody else. That is the whole secret of being happily married. Why experiment with happiness. Why be a Guinea pig? "Separate vacations" are the bunk!

Madoc.—Madoc members of the Women's Institute met at the home of Mrs. Russel Lewis for their October meeting on Friday afternoon, with a good attendance. Mrs. Geo. Hill, president took charge. Communications were read. Letters of thanks from sick members, for gifts, were received. A very satisfactory report on the fair day activities by the Institute showed that a balance of over $190 was received from the booth. Their share of Tag Day receipts were $112.50 which goes into the war work section of the Institute. Over fifty Christmas boxes have been packed and sent overseas to Madoc boys and girls on Active Service. Arrangements were made for the one day lecture on Bedside Nursing by a Department speaker. The president, Mrs. Hill was appointed delegate to the Area Convention being held in Belleville. The War Today—
Britain, United States and Russia Called Key to Enduring Peace Problem

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press War Analyst.)

The most important product of any war is the ensuing peace— a truth impressed on public consciousness by the Dumbarton Oaks conference to plan for a world organization to outlaw armed conflict.

Enduring peace is the star to which we want to hitch our chariot, but the difficulties to be surmounted in achieving it become more apparent daily as the European international political sparks shower about the open powder keg. Every point of the continental compass produces its problem. A concrete example is the boundary dispute between Moscow and the Polish government in London—a dangerous situation which again is hot.

Big Three Key to Problem.

Whether a workable peace league can be created seems to me to depend mainly at the outset on the Big Three—Great Britain the United States and Russia—as this column previously has recorded. Of course all nations, big and little, are essential to perfect union, but the trio is the key to the problem.

These three dominant powers have the strength to enforce peace. By the same token the strength of each is so great that a serious falling out among them must mean a fresh upheaval

That's why the statesmen of all countries watched Moscow intently during the talks just concluded between Premier Stalin and Prime Minister Churchill regarding military and political problems. This conference may in the long run prove to be one of the most momentous of our time.

Russo-British Relations.

While responsibility for peace can be assessed against the Big Three, it revolves strongly around Russo-British relations, which have taken on an entirely new complexion as a result of the war. Russia is emerging as the great new power of the eastern hemisphere, and fortune is transferring to Moscow much of the influence which long has made Britain the gendarme of Europe.

The United States, situated in the distant western hemisphere, is deeply but not so intimately concerned with this epochal shift of influence in Europe. London and Moscow, however, must reach a thorough and friendly understanding, involving a great deal of give and take, if this colossal readjustment is to be made smoothly.

World Cheered by Moscow Success.

Thus it was with relief that the outside world received word through the Soviet press that the Stalin-Churchill conference was a success. The government paper Izvestia declared the conference gave good reason to believe that the Soviet Union, Britain and the United States would enjoy an era of increasing collaboration in speeding up defeat of Germany and of comradeship in the solution of peace.

If that's a correct estimate, then the prospects of the Dumbarton Oaks project seem good. There are many delicate moments yet to be bridged, but a peace organization can be created and made to function.

CANADIANS

Enemy shelling, mortaring and machine-gunning continues to be heavy and counter-attacks, supported by tanks and self-propelled artillery, are constantly thrown at our troops.

Ordered to Pull Out

Counter thrusts of this kind forced the withdrawal of one company of a western permanent force unit and others of a Nova Scotia regiment. Attacked at close quarters by tanks and strong infantry forces, the Canadians were ordered to pull out.

Farther south, another company of western permanent force men under Maj. Ted Cuthill of Hamilton, Ont., and Montreal held on for the fourth day. Yesterday they had their first hot meal since hitting the bridgehead.

Communication between the bridgehead and Canadian forces on the east bank of the Savio is being maintained by a shuttle service which was set up Saturday evening. The depth of the Savio and the depth of the mud at its approaches make it impossible to erect a bridge and a ferry was the answer.

One hundred prisoners caged on the east bank of the river until it is possible to evacuate them worked all night carrying casualties on the ferry service and from the east bank to the medical posts.

The prisoner total has risen to 85 in the last few days, most of them cocky young boys who should still be at school.

Mile Beyond Cervia

Rome, Oct. 24 — (AP) — British 8th Army troops driving northward along Italy's Adriatic coast have advanced half a mile beyond captured Cervia, while inland Canadian forces have enlarged and strengthened their bridgehead across the Savio river north of Cesena, Allied headquarters announced today.

German tanks and infantry counter-attacked the Canadians, but the latter held firm, the announcement said.

West of Cesena, where British troops hold another bridgehead across the Savio, the Germans were hurling a heavy weight of shells. Tanks were moving up most of the supplies for the British infantry.

Flood conditions made for difficult going on the 8th Army front, but the troops were meeting only slight resistance.

South of Cesena, Indian troops took Monte Cavallo, key feature of the Savio watershed. Farther south Britons and Poles of the 8th Army made local gains.

American troops of the Allied 5th Army battling down the northern slopes of the Apennines approached today within four miles of Castel San Pietro, large Po Valley junction town on the Rimini highway 13 miles southeast of Bologna.

Rough Terrain Ahead

Headquarters announced this American column had captured the village of Frassineto, southeast of Castel San Pietro, after a heavy battle. Rough terrain still lay ahead.

Thick minefields, demolitions and barbed wire entanglements held up another force advancing on dominating Monte Belmonte. A communique said the most bitter fighting centred around that feature.

On the southeast other 5th Army troops drove 2 1/2 miles along highway toward Imola, another junction point on the Rimini-Bologna road, and captured the village of Fontanelice. It lies seven miles southwest of Imola.

British and Indian forces battling along highway 67 in the sector to the east pushed beyond the road junction of Portico on the way to Forli. On the 5th Army left flank African troops operating northeast of Vergato seized a hill dominating the Prato-Bologna highway.

Germans Strike Twice at England With Flying Bombs

London, Oct. 24 — (CP) — The Germans struck twice at Britain last night with their flying bombs, ending a 48-hour lull that followed 11 successive nights of attack.

The double assault, which appeared more intense than any recent raids, was met by terrific anti-aircraft fire, but a number of the robots penetrated the barrage.

One crashed in the centre of a town in southern England, plunging into a garage and setting fire to many automobiles and trucks. Gasoline-tank explosions rocked the whole town and flames shot 100 feet in the air. An elderly couple living above the garage were critically injured.

Returned Flier Fights with Maquis

With the R. C. A. F. Overseas, Oct. 24 —(CP)— FO. Bruce Armstrong of Peterborough, Ont., about ready to go back to Canada, has something to remember about his war experience, all right—he parachuted unconscious from a blazing bomber and spent several weeks fighting with French patriots.

Armstrong doesn't remember his drop when his bomber was set afire by a Nazi night-fighter over a French target last May. He recalls strapping on his parachute and struggling to the escape hatch — then blackness.

His first recollection after that is of being moved from the branches of a tree in which he landed. At a French farmhouse a doctor diagnosed his injuries as concussion severe lacerations, a sprained back and injured eye.

As he recuperated he met the local Maquis leader and the Maquis soon had another member.

"Our job was principally sabotaging German supply lines," Armstrong said. "We would go out in small groups at night and wide alongside a road over which German convoys travelled.

"We would toss a few Grenades, blaze away with our guns, and then fade into the darkness."

Armstrong said the average German soldiers hasn't "much on the ball mentally;" but he was a healthy respect for the Gestapo, S. S. boys and the Hitler youth.

"They are full of Hitler and to them killing is a part of living," he said.

WHOLESALE LOOTING

With the 1st Canadian Army, Oct. 24 —(CP Reuter)— The Germans have begun a wholesale looting of Breda, one of their "fortress" towns on the southwestern Holland defence line as British and Canadian forces approach from north of Antwerp, according to reports reaching Canadian front lines.

With the weather turning bitterly cold, homes are being robbed of blankets, suits, overcoats, underwear and footwear, civilians being left with only a minimum of each article.

The chute may be released from the glider at any time by means of a cockpit control.

Polish Premier Summons Cabinet

London, Oct. 24 —(CP)— Prime Minister Stanlislaw Mikolajczyk of the Polish Government in London summoned his cabinet into special session today for a report on the status of Polish-Soviet relations after his trip to Moscow.

Spokesmen for the London Poles said they anticipated no immediate action by the government on issues standing in the way of an accord with Russia.

Meanwhile, it appeared unlikely there will be any public statement by the Polish Government on its position until after Prime Minister Churchill furnishes the House of Commons with a more detailed account of the Moscow Government.

North Bay, Oct. 24 —(CP)— An oddly-worded charge laid against a North Bay resident was dismissed by Magistrate M. G. Gould after Crown Attorney E. A. Tilley remarked that it meant nothing. The charge said the accused failed to make proper returns of his day's receipts and truck "using extra gas by driving around the city for pleasure."

Cervia Captured By British Units Of Eighth Army

Rome, Oct. 23—(AP)—Cervia, on the coastal road six miles north of Cesenatico, has fallen to British 8th Army troops inching their way up the Adriatic Coast, and Canadian forces have established another bridgehead across the Savio River two miles north of captured Cesena, Allied headquarters said today.

The bridgehead, a mile wide and two miles deep, was established across the swift-flowing stream in the face of heavy German resistance and counter-attacks by tanks and infantry.

Cervia is 12 miles south and slightly east of Ravenna, and 10 miles northeast of Cesena.

Bad weather again hampered operations on the Allied 5th Army front but heavy fighting was reported in the southern outskirts of Frassineto, about four miles southwest of Castel San Pietro on the Bologna-Rimini highway.

Cervia, 19 miles north of Rimini, is on the main highway from Rimini to northeastern Italya.

The communique said the Allied bridgehead over the Savio River has been enlarged.

To the west, other 8th Army units crossed the Rabbi River in the vicinity of Strada, 19 miles south of Faenza, and drove forward into high ground on the opposite bank.

Poor weather limited the M. A. A. F. to 240 sorties, but enemy gun positions in Northern Italy and roads in Yugoslavia were hit, as well as enemy shipping in the Adriatic. Four planes were lost.

HAWES' FLOOR GLOSS

CANADIANS have learned the art of conservation. Through the years of war, things which could not be replaced have had to be protected. The stitch in time has reached a new high in public estimation.

Through the magic of chemistry, improved paints and other finishes have been produced to preserve vulnerable surfaces. Wood and metal have been protected against the hand of time and the effects of the elements. And with this has come new beauty in colour and in surface effects.

Specializing in this field, the Paint and Varnish Division of Canadian Industries Limited has cooperated with various manufacturing groups in evolving for them suitable finishing materials. The best types of paint for ships, for industrial buildings for vehicles, for aircraft and for the exterior and interior of homes have been developed by intensive study and continual experimentation.

In this way the Paint and Varnish Division has made a contribution to the industrial and domestic development of Canada, and the familiar C-I-L trademark has become a recognized symbol of service protection throughout the land.

Mess Room Chatter Of Canada's Airmen

(By The Canadian Press)

With the R.C.A.F. Overseas, Oct. 24—(CP)—The satisfaction of being able to see some of the damage done by their own squadrons is one of the compensations of R.C.A.F. overcrews serving in France.

Wing Cmdr. Massey Beveridge, D.F.C., of Montreal, leader of the R. C. A. F. Nighthawk Mosquito squadron, recently visited Dreux and Evreux where the Germans operated active air fields, and saw some of the damage to which he contributed when he was flying with the City of Edmonton squadron.

"The damage was terrific," he said. "There's not a hangar standing nor a building that hadn't been completely smashed. You can see where our 500 pounders have hit the landing strips and the Germans have made hurried repairs. Particularly gratifying were the number of wrecked FW-190's, Junkers and Heinkels."

The City of Edmonton squadron Mosquitos' tactics were to drop their bombs on the runways, strafe the fields with cannon fire, then intrude over the field and pick off German planes when they attempted to return to base.

"Johnny came flying home again" to a few score families in liberated sections of Belgium as some members of the Belgian Air Force visited their homes for the first time in four years.

At the Canadian air field in Belgium commanded by Group Capt. G. R. McGregor, D.F.C., of Montreal, Spitfires arrived from England piloted by Belgium Air Force members flying with an R.A.F. fighter group. The fortunate ones had been given permission to fly home in relays of four to visit their families for a few hours.

Canadian airmen flying squadrons of the Balkan Air Force are in the thick of the land, sea and air offensive which has been directed at squeezing the Germans from their increasingly difficult position in the Balkans. Working in close support of Marshal Tito's Jugoslav partisans, the Allied fliers are bombing bridges and railroads, strafing convoys and troop concentrations, and cutting off escape routes.

Fast medium bombers are in the forefront of the harrassing attack. FO. George Granda of Montreal, veteran of more than 120 operations, is daily adding to his total with a Baltimore squadron. More than a dozen Canadians fly with a South African bomber squadron in daily attacks on the German retreat paths. Among them are WO. George Blake, of Manchester Ave., Toronto; PO. Norm Britton, Saint John, N.B.; Flt.-Lt. Gordon Cook, Lethbridge, Alta.; FO. Bill Wickens, Revelstoke, B.C.; and FO. Bert Knaap, Sackville, N.B.; Spitfire pilots active in strafing and escort duties include: WO. A. H. McEwan, Smith's Falls, Ont.; WO. J. A. Gordon, Wallaceburg, Ont., and Flt.-Sgt. E. G. Wetherall, Calgary; PO. Dick Ryerse, of Port Dover, Ont., and FO. George Herman of Montreal are among the many flying with squadrons which deliver arms to the partisan forces in the interior.

For the majority of Canucks at the base commanded by Group Capt. McGregor, ice cream has been a thing of the corner drug store back home since they departed for overseas. But now they're in Belgium. Raisin pie and ice cream became a reality on mess tables.

Pope 'Godfather' Of Franco Regime Says Soviet Paper

Moscow, Oct. 24 — (AP) — Pope Pius XII and the Franco regime in Spain were the twin targets of an article yesterday in the Soviet publication, War and the Working Class, which said the Pope might be called the "Godfather" of the Spanish dictatorship.

The article, written by F. Golubev, demanded "the liquidation of the centre of the Fascist infection in Spain for the future security of Europe." Gen. Franco was described as "Hitler's faithful servant."

"...Today the Vatican accords all possible support to Franco's regime. As he loses his main support—Hitlerite Germany — Franco looks to other forces for aid. One of his best Allies is the Vatican. Pope Pius could be called Franco's 'Godfather.' "

Republican Senator Supports Roosevelt

New York, Oct. 23 —(AP)—Senator Joseph H. Ball (Rep.-Minn.) announced today: "I shall vote for and support President Roosevelt."

The opposition Senator, abandoning his party for the presidential race, said Mr. Roosevelt had met the foreign policy issue more squarely than had Gov. Thomas E. Dewey.

In his Saturday night speech on foreign relations, Sen. Ball said, President Roosevelt kept a record of action by "meeting squarely and unequivocably the two vital and controversial issues on which the isolationists kept us out of the league of nations and will fight our entry into the United Nations security organization."

The Senator added in a statement:

"He insisted that the United Nations organization be formed without delay, before hostilites cease, and that it be granted power to use military force against future aggressors without requiring individual approval of each member nation. . ."

DALEY ADVISES LABOR TO STAY OUT OF POLITICS

"Would be Free to Support Any Govt. Making an Honest Effort," Says Minister

Toronto, Oct. 24 — (CP) — Hon. Charles Daley, Ontario Labor Minister, Monday advised labor to stay out of politics. Rather than making an alliance with one party the labor movement should leave itself free to support any government which was making an honest effort.

Mr. Daley spoke at the opening of the 60th annual convention of the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada. The 750 delegates also heard Labor Minister Mitchell sound a warning that limited unemployment was to be expected in the transition from a war to a peacetime economy, but eventually full employment could be expected.

Mayor Fred J. Conboy and R. H. Brown, president of the Toronto district Labor Council also welcomed the delegates.

"You must guide your people wisely and sanely so that those things for which you have fought will not be destroyed by the introduction of fanatical ideas that have failed wherever they have been tried," Mr. Daley said.

"In my opinion union organizations should be free of politics, free to choose for themselves, free to support politically the government they think is trying."

Govt. Positions Outlined

The Ontario government had shown its position on labor by a number of pieces of legislation including the hours and vacations act, collective bargaining and extension of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Mr. Mitchell said despite stringent control measures there had not been unfair freezing of wages during the war. Dealing with more than 60,000 cases War Labor Boards had given increases and cost-of-living bonuses totalling $175,000,000 a year. Wage and salary payments in Canada last year amounted to almost $5,500,000,000 an increase of $3,000,000,000 compared with 1938.

Will Be Some Unemployment.

"I would not be honest with you if I did not say that when this tremendous war industrial set-up of ours no longer is necessary there will not be some unemployment as we move back to peacetime production," he said.

"There should be plenty of jobs once our plants are again turning out automobiles, furniture, refrigerators and all the other things to which Canada has been accustomed. In partnership with private enterprise your government and also the various provincial governments and municipalities, are planning important project which will provide employment."

Trade union movements in Canada and elsewhere had developed on the basis of freedom of the individual which was lost when control passed into the hands of the state.

"We cannot have freedom without ownership and when freedom based on this principle is destroyed, free trade unions as we understand them will cease to be," he said.

The government's intention in introducing a scheme of family allowance was to produce a more fair distribution of wealth. The measure was not intended in any way as a subsidy to low wages.

Arthur MacNamara Director of National Selective Service, outlined the work of his department. Its accomplishments had been possible only as a result of the co-operation of workers and the Canadian people in general.

During the war years industrial workers had gained new recognition.

"What labor accomplishes in the next few years may affect Canada for a generation," he said, urging labor leaders to accept the responsibilities of post-war problems.

Fights Way Back With Wounded Pal

By BILL BOSS
(CP War Correspondent)

With the Canadian Corps on the Adriatic, Oct. 24 —(CP)— Short shots on highlights of the Loyal Edmonton Regiment's campaign around and about the Gothic Line:

When Pte. K. D. Styles, Grenfell, Sask., was wounded during the battle in the Montecicardo monastery garden, Pte. George Ross, Edmonton, of L/Cpl. Jim Ferguson's section, carried him into the building once it had been cleared, dressed his wounds, then returned to the battle. When it was decided to withdraw from the town again, Ross, although wounded himself, put Styles on his back, fought his way out and carried him 500 yards down the hill, continuously under fire. . . .

In one house Pte. Fred Phillips, High Ridge, Alta., came across a German. At the same moment, the German saw him. Both aimed and fired. The bullet through Phillips' helmet only parted his hair. The German died. . . .

Pte. J. A. W. Woodford, Edmonton, on his way with a message to a tank commander supporting his company, came across a German. He tackled the Nazi, made him prisoner, forced him to go along while he delivered the message, then returned to regimental headquarters and turned him over. . . .

Cpl. Earl Horton, Edmonton, clearing a house, heard a movement and found a German who surrendered before he could shoot him. . . .

Willing Prisoners.

A platoon sergeant was leading his men along a road to an objective, with sections under Cpls. Roy Page, Edmonton, and Rudolf Martin, Coronation, Alta. Two German machine-gun posts opened up. Their reply to Canadian answering fire was to surrender. Two Canucks then went into a field to get a better view of what was going on ahead. They sighted two or three Germans in a cave. There they noticed several more. Going in to get them they brought out 15, all willing prisoners. Sgt. Leslie McMurray, Cardston, Alta., of the same company, took two other prisoners while exploring a house. . . .

A Pole in German uniform surrendered to C.S.M. Al Baker, Medicine Hat, Alta. The Pole told him he tried to surrender to the Canadians in France when his unit was opposing them there, but his officer cautioned him "on the side" that Canadians didn't take, but shot, prisoners. In Italy, against Canadians again, he decided he'd take a chance anyway. A prisoner taken by the same sergeant-major's men said that when the Edmontons started their attack, a German officer ordered his men to get away and look after themselves. "The Canadians are after you," he said. . . .

While the regiment fights its battles it is not without an eye for future recreation. L/Cpls. H. R. Bloye, Toronto, S. C. Burke, Grand Prairie, Man., Paul Rosenthal, Edmonton, and Pte. Leslie Lebischak, Arnaud, Man., have been equipped with guitars, violin and ukulele at regimental expense, left out of battle and told to practice together as an orcrestra. The boys will have accompaniment for their singsongs now.

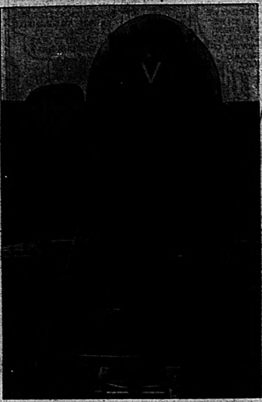
Canadian-Built Plane Deadly Weapon Mosquito Outflies All Enemy Craft



This sleek plane with its nose full of stingers and its fuselage being loaded with 4,000 pounds of destruction is a Canadian-built, all-wood Mosquito, one of the Allies' most powerful air weapons. Around this amazing craft and its highly-trained crews is woven the story of the new National Film Board production, "Mosquito Squadron," released in the Canada Carries On series. Speed and maneuverability its greatest assets, the Mosquito can easily outfly any enemy craft.

Canada's contribution to world airpower has been significant, not only from the viewpoint of training of manpower but also from that of aircraft production. One of the Dominion's greatest contributions to the Allied war in the air is the Mosquito, deadliest of all intruder aircraft and powerful air weapon. Unarmed, the Mosquito can operate as a bomber carrying 4,000 pounds of bombs. Armed, it becomes a night or day intruder of a photographic reconnaissance unit aircraft. It can outfly the fastest enemy craft, usually flying to avoid flak, but also to dodge balloon cables and chimneys.

The Mosquito's greatest assets are its speed and maneuverability, made possible by its construction, which is almost entirely of wood. The plane's tremendous speed requires split-second timing in the take-off and landing in low-flying tactics, demanding top ability from the men who fly it.

Not only Canadians, but airmen all over the world revere the Mosquito. The story of this amazing craft, its construction from plywood strong as sheet metal, the training of its crews, its astounding action in battle, is told in the National Film Board production, "Mosquito Squadron," released in the Canada Carries On series. This film follows the story from the pound of the axe in the forests of the Dominion through the unique construction operations, the intense training at an eastern school, to battle.

Logs come from the forest to be softened by steam to allow a razor-sharp knife to shave paper-thin sheets of wood from it. From these thin, weak sheets, strong, sleek plywood is made and formed into the fuselage and wings of the Mosquito.

No. 36 Operational Training School, at Greenwood, N.S., is where the crews are trained, most of the students being veteran airmen with enviable records in war, some of them with decorations. The instructors are all veterans of the air war. These men get to know each other and study, fly and fight as teams. At the school, they team up, to stay together on into the skies over enemy territory.

"Mosquito Squadron" is enhanced by the appearance of several outstanding airmen at Greenwood, including Squadron Leader Stewart of Calgary, chief flying instructor at the school; Sqdn. Ldr. Henney of England, chief ground instructor; Flying Officer Ross Howland of Moncton, former newspaperman and radio announcer who returned from flying Bostons and Beaufighters to learn the intricate and exacting flight of the Mosquito; Pilot Officer Peter Wood, D.F.O., of London, England, with an extensive record of combat experience, and others.

Also in "Mosquito Squadron" is Dorothy Stone of Toronto, "Miss Warworker of 1944." Miss Stone, who works on Mosquito production in the de Havilland plant at Toronto, is the only featured girl in the picture, although women appear in various scenes during the construction sequences.

With Ontario Naturalists

Toronto, Oct. 24 —(CP)— First official record in more than 60 years of the presence in Ontario of the orchid autumn Coral Root (Corallorrhize Odontorhize) was made by Munroe Landon, botanist from Simcoe, Ont., in a letter to Professor J. R. Dymond of the Royal Ontario Museum. Mr. Landon discovered a small colony of the rare plants growing in his own woodlot.

This orchid grows five to seven inches high, and the flowers are a combination of brown, purple and white in color. Its name is derived from a resemblance of the root to coral. This October-blooming plant is one of the five famous orchid varieties once found flowering commonly in southern Ontario. The other four are white Lady Slippers and Whorled Pogonia, blooming in June, and Three Birds and Yellow Fringed Orchid, blooming in August.

The lowly milkweed, one of the commonest weeds in Canada, one day may be cultivated as a wealth-producing crop on the basis of its war-time service as a substitute for vital materials.

After the Japanese cut off export from Java of Kapok, the fibrous filling for seamen's life preservers, the silky floss packed within milkweed pods was found to be a 100-per cent substitute for the Japanese-controlled product. Saving the lives of sailors, however, is just a war-time emergency job for milkweed. It has other uses so vital and promising that the once despised weed might easily become an aristocrat of the plant world.

Its potential value as a source of rubber is well known in Canada by now. Not so familiar is the fact, pointed out by Prof. Sherwood Fox, of London, Ont., that the bark of the milkweed stock is only slightly inferior to hemp and could be used in the manufacture of coarser textile fabrics. Paper can be made from cellulose in the milkweed stock, he said, and the seed secretes valuable oils with possibilities for paint and food industries.

Professor Fox, at Ottawa's request, visited Walpole Island in the St. Clair River where he found several stands of Sullivant's milkweed, a superior variety of the plant, last reported in that region in 1894. He described it as a beautiful plant with leaves similar to the rubber plant grown for decorative purposes, with a dainty, flesh-colored flower.

Professor A. P. Coventry of the University of Toronto doesn't divulge the source of his favorite limerick, but he made students at the Summer Nature School at Camp Billie Bear in Algonquin Park familiar with the following verse:

"Said a very intelligent ermine,
There's one thing I cannot determine—
When a dame wears my coat,
She's a lady of note,
But when I wear my coat, I'm just vermin."

FRANKFORD

New Hall Opened, Begins Service For Community

Frankford — Wednesday, Oct. 18th was the opening date of Frankford's new community hall. For the first time the door was opened wide to citizens of Frankford and community to give everyone an opportunity to view the results of several months' work on the part of the town council. The hall consists of one large auditorium on second floor equipped with a fine stage and excellent dance floor, also a large room to be equipped as a lounge room. On the first floor are quarters for council chambers, wash rooms and jail.

As the crowds gathered they were entertained by the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment band under the direction of Capt. Ketcheson. Reeve Geo. Montgomery, as chairman, called on the members of the council to take seats on the platform. All standing joined in the singing of 'O Canada.' In a few opening remarks Reeve Montgomery welcomed one and all to the new community hall and extended his appreciation to all who had in any way made the project possible.

Rev. Mr. Brazill, rector of Trinity Anglican Church, spoke of this great occasion, "when we gather to pat ourselves on the back." He spoke of the hall as an achievement worthy of any money the council had seen fit to spend in the building. A community hall, he said, is not meant solely for amusement but for the cultural development of the citizens. He made the suggestion that when the lounge is furnished it might be supplied not only with papers and magazines but possibly some of the books from the public library.

Mr. Arthur Duncan of Batawa supplied the fun for the evening, when, as he said, he came to be laughed at. His contributions, however, were not all fun but also had their serious side, closing with the recital of the poem "The Things That Make a Soldier Great."

Rev. Father LeSage of Frankford and Stirling extended greetings on behalf of his parishioners and spoke of the hall as a place "where we come to meet one another and that it would be a source of pleasure to all here at home and also to our boys, who would we hope soon be coming back from overseas." In closing he said the ladies of the Catholic Women's League had decided to have a party of some kind in the hall in the near future at which all proceeds would be given to the coffers of the community hall.

The band played "They're Always Be An England" with the audience joining in singing. Rev. H. H. Lackey, pastor of the United Church, Frankford, expressed his appreciation of the opportunity to see the new hall which he hoped would be used for the finest and highest interest of life. Miss Phyllis Slingerland contributed a vocal solo at this point, "Say a Prayer for the Boys Over There." Rev. Mr. Dostal of Batawa spoke briefly, congratulating the community on such a fine place to conduct official business as well as entertainment for the people of the town. He wished for it success both cultural and financial for Frankford. Mr. Ed. Loucks, editor of the Frankford Advocate, said that it was through co-operation of community endeavor that "we were able to say it's a job well done." Miss Madeline Walt of Stockdale sang, "When Shadows Fall," accompanied at the piano by Miss Marjory Walt.

The members of the council, Messrs. C. R. Turley, J. M. Dafoe, Smith Osterhout and Oscar Farrar, spoke briefly, outlining the work they had done, and the money that had been spent to bring about the building of the hall that they have hopes will prove to be an asset to their town.

The band's closing number was the military march "The Hasty P's," composed by Lieut.-Col. A. B. Yates and arranged by Mr. Reg. Hinchey of Belleville.

The singing of the National Anthem closed this eventful program.

LITTLE INTEREST EVINCED IN BASEBALL DRAFT

Jack Zeller of Detroit Comes Up With New Idea to Give All Teams Chance

By JACK HAND
(AP Sport Writer)

New York, Oct. 24 — (AP)—Baseball's annual draft grab bag, only 2 weeks off, is exciting little interest with fans or magnates, but things may be different in the future if Jack Zeller of Detroit Tigers has his way.

According to the scheme concocted by the general manager of the Bengals, the major leagues' only manpower funnel from the minors would be the annual draft system.

The selection system under the Zeller plan would be widened in scope, unlimited in numbers and would call for higher price tags than the current $7,500 ceiling. Although the revolutionary idea has attracted some support among the owners it has been met with violent reaction in many quarters because it practically dictates the end of the farm systems.

Nothing can be done until the annual major league meetings, now listed for New York, Dec. 5-7 and the minors' annual confab, scheduled for Buffalo Dec. 6-8. Most baseball men doubt that the proposal will come up for a vote in the immediate future that is already clouded with post-war planning.

The accent is on age in the list of minor league players eligible for selection at the Chicago draft meeting Nov. 1 with such old codgers named as Garland Braxton of Norfolk, Sylvester Johnson of Seattle, Floyd (Babe) Herman and Charley Root of Hollywood and Earl Whitehill of Buffalo.

Among the prize picks could be Otto Denning or Eddie Kobesky of Buffalo, Alex Mustaikis of Toronto, Ed Levy of Milwaukee, Chick Genovese of Louisville, Chet Clemens of Indianapolis, Howie Moss or Stan West of Baltimore, Bill Emmerich of Rochester and Roy Zimmerman of Newark.

There are 589 eligible "picks" on the active rosters of the 10 leagues and twice as many on their national defence, voluntarily retired and suspended lists.

GETS TOUGH ROLE

Promoter Frank Tunney didn't hand Pierre DeGlane any soft spot on his Wednesday night feature wrestling show at the Hume Arena when he signed the popular Montreal grappler to meet Babe Zaharias, the Salt Lake City mat villain. Babe is the middle brother of the famed Zaharias triple-threat ring villains, of which George Zaharias started the family grappling ball rolling. This pair will tangle prior to the main bout that sees John Katan and Ivan Rasputin, the arch villains of the ring, meet for the first time. The preliminary of Don Evans and Vern Baxter is another villain-hero attraction.

What's Doing in Sport

(By The Canadian Press)

Billy Arnold, 18-year-old welterweight sensation from Philadelphia, scored his 27th knockout in 29 professional fights last night when he stopped Ernest (Cat) Robinson of Jamaica in 2:46 of the second round at St. Nicholas Arena in New York. Robinson went through the ropes for a nine-count early in the second round, and was helpless on the lower strand from a flurry of right and lefts when Referee Billy Cavanagh stepped in and stopped it.

The second highest daily double payoff in the history of the San Mateo, Calif., Bay Meadows race track took place yesterday when Milldust coupled with Bonalta returned backers $3,546 for $2 tickets. The record of $3,610.60 was established in 1937. Milldust paid $198.60 and Bonalta $16.20.

George Slater, president of the Quebec Senior Hockey League, announced last night that the league would operate this season with four teams, with the first game scheduled for Ottawa Nov. 4 between Hull Volants and Ottawa Commandos. Decision that the League would operate came after a closed meeting between representatives of the Ottawa and Hull clubs and Montreal Royals and Quebec Aces. Revival of the League came after weeks of reports and counter-reports that it would not operate.

CASUAL COMMENT by K.J.C.

A mother lost her young daughter in the weekend confusion at a railway terminus. After a frantic search she finally located the child in the midst of a group of nuns. Both the little girl and the nuns seemed to be having a very good time.

"I hope my daughter hasn't been giving you too much trouble," exclaimed the relieved parent.

"On the contrary," chuckled the Mother Superior. "Your little girl seems to have the notion that we are penguins!"

This and That.

Prexy Fred Fisher says he was "railroaded" into the job of president of the Belleville Golf Club.... (Never mind Freddie, the ride was worth it.)....And to the golfers in general—don't worry Freddie will have work for all in 1945....Up and down 42nd St., and across Times Square the sport scribes are whispering words about Joe DiMaggio being back in the Yankees' line-up come next spring....Why? Well recently they say Sergt. Joe was flown back from the Pacific area in an army hospital plane....Some look for a quick medical discharge from the American armed services.... Bill Southworth and the champion Cardinals won't like that, even if they are only rumors....Zanesville, Ohio, want to see their native Larry MacPhail succeed Judge Landis as baseball's czar...Other ball-minded men want either Generals MacArthur or Eisenhower....See where Don Hutson booted 62 consecutive goals for the Green Bay Packers... The Louisiana University has a live tiger for a mascot....If the human Tigers can't beat the opposition they could unleash the four-legged one....However, that would be unfair competition, especially on meatless Tuesday....It's Albert at B.C.I. Wednesday afternoon.

Could Be.

Quoting Peterboro Scribe Fred Craig, whose use for six-man football is as small as some people have for Mussolini, but then maybe Fred has something. At any rate here is all the comment the Liftlock City scribe has to say about six-man football: "Belleville school gridders are still playing six-man football and trying to make it look like a game."

Maybe the heading for this paragraph should have been: "As others see us." Six-man football served its purpose long and well to help keep the fall classic alive in Belleville, but like all imitations should have its proper place. The abbreviated game is ideal for small schools and inter-form competition, but seems to lack the razzle dazzle picture presented by conventional football. Practically every secondary school in the C.O.S.S.A returned to the Interscholastic football wars this fall, that is all except the local high schools. Even in Port Hope and Bowmanville the 12-man game is being played, to say nothing of Owen Sound, Collingwood, Lindsay et al. It will be noted we made reference in each case to towns smaller than Belleville. If these small places are ready for the game surely this city should be. In Oshawa and Peterboro where the 12-man game is reviving rapidly, they also have extensive school athletic periods, but there is pride in the school team.

A Family Name.

Synonymous to wrestling is the name Zaharias. A decade ago there rose on wrestling horizon one George Zaharias, the original "hotcha, hotcha" exponent in the grappling ring. Known as "the big bad wolf of wrestling," George Zaharias tutored his younger brothers in the art of successfully playing the ring villain in, and around their Salt Lake City home. Some time ago George married the heralded Babe Didrickson, outstanding lady golfer and versatile Yankee feminine athlete and left the wrestling business to his younger brothers. One of them is Babe Zaharias, who meets Pierre DeGlane in the semi-final go of tomorrow night's arena show. Where the younger Zaharias picked up the nickname, Babe, from isn't exactly made clear, but it came after George married the Didrickson gal so that one shouldn't be hard to decipher. Following the DeGlane-Zaharais go the fans will get first peek at John Katan and Ivan Rasputin, in their initial meeting in any ring.

Remember When.

Frank Boucher signed with Vancouver Maroons of the Pacific Coast League 22 years ago today. He went to the New York Rangers in 1926 and teamed up with the famous Cook brothers, Bun and Bill. One of the cleanest and best centre players in hockey, Boucher was given permanent possession of the Lady Byng trophy after winning it seven times. Boucher is now assistant manager and coach of the New York Rangers.

Batters' Paradise.

Found—a hitters' paradise. It is Quito, Ecuador. Because the city is 9,500 feet above sea level, balls will not curve on account of the rare atmosphere, and pitchers can serve nothing but straight balls to the batters.

The game was not played there until Jorge Phillips, a shortstop who learned the sport in New Jersey, returned to his native country and sought to introduce the American national pastime. He persuaded Quito University and other institutions to take up the game, but discovered the batters always are ahead of the pitchers.

MAPLE LEAFS' LONE QUESTION CONCERNS CLUB'S GOALTENDING

This is the fourth of a Canadian Press series on the pre-season prospects of the N.H.L. clubs. Today's story covers Toronto Maple Leafs. Tomorrow: Chicago Black Hawks.

By FRASER MacDOUGALL
(CP Staff Writer)

Owen Sound, Ont., Oct. 24—(CP)—Toronto Maple Leafs will start the 1944-45 National Hockey League season with only one question mark on a club which possesses greater all-round offensive and defensive strength than last year's team which finished in third place in the league standings.

However, coach Clarence (Hap) Day, who was frankly optimistic two weeks ago about his Club's chances when he said it would be the best since the Stanley Cup winning aggregation of 1941-42, now declines any speculation as to its prospects in the campaign which it opens Saturday night in Toronto against New York Rangers.

"I have never seen so little information coming out of the camps of the other teams as this year," he said. "So I don't propose to do any talking until I learn what we're going to be up against."

Question Mark

The question mark concerns the goaltending. Harry McCool, Canadian Army dischargee from Calgary who will be 28 Friday, is Day's choice for the goaltending position. McCool was out with New York Rangers a year ago but illness prevented him from playing. He is the pick of the three candidates in training camp drills here, the other two prospects being 18-year-old Pat Boehmer of Kitchener who played with Toronto St. Michael's College last season and Leo Sergent from St. Catharines.

Three players from last year's Leafs and one newcomer will make up the regular defence foursome. Big Walter (Babe) Pratt, leading point-getter among N.H.L. defencemen last year with 17 goals and 40 assists, Reg Hamilton and Elwin Morris are the veterans and the newcomer is Pete Backor, a husky performer who comes from Fort William who played with St. Catharines in the Ontario Hockey Association senior series last season. Backor, aged 25, is an army reject.

The return to N.H.L. play of Dave (Sweeney) Schriner after a one-year lay-off is expected to give the Leafs added scoring strength. The left-winger from Calgary will team up on a line with 22-year-old Gus Bodnar, winner of the N.H.L. rookie award last season, and veteran right winger Lorne Carr who stood third among league point-getters last season with 74. He had 36 goals and 38 assists. Bodnar had 22 goals and 40 assists for 62 points.

Metz Returns

Nick Metz, another Toronto veteran who joined the army in 1942 and was discharged last summer, is expected to play on a forward line with Bill Ezinicki, promising Winnipeg youngster who played with the Oshawa Generals, Dominion junior champions last season, and Ted (Teeter) Kennedy, the Port Colborne boy who is starting his 2nd season with Leafs.

Veteran Bob Davidson and Mel (Sudden-death) Hill will be on a third line and their partner may be Tom O'Neill or Jack McLean, both members of last year's team. McLean is available only for home games.

Defencemen Jim Thomson from Winnipeg and Ross Johnstone, Leaf utility player last season, may also be carried and there is a prospect that Ken Schultz from Preston and Eric Prentice from Schumacher in the Timmins district may wind up with contracts.

Leafs have not yet completely given up hope of acquiring Paul Bibeault from Montreal Canadiens fo goal. The agile little netminder played good hockey in the 29 games he played with Toronto last season when he came to the team on loan from Montreal Canadiens after his discharge from the Canadian Army. They are still angling for his services, although Canadiens so far have turned a deaf ear to all proposals for a cash purchase.

Notre Dame Rates Best Football Team

Notre Dame, unbeaten this season, garnered 40 first-place tickets and 917 points. Army, likewise unscathed, finished with 909 points.

The leading teams on a point basis with each first-place vote 10 points, second nine, third eight, and so on (first-place votes in parentheses):

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

New York, Oct. 24 — (AP)—The Amateur Hockey Association of the United States is organising a series of schools to teach the young how to shoot pucks at the net ... that isn't especially important in the general sports program, as the eight schools all will be held in the east and on the Pacific coast, but one phrase in President Tom Lockhart's announcement stands out: "Any American-born boy with a pair of skates and a desire to learn hockey will be welcomed." . . . This corner has taken occasional raps at other sports, particularly baseball, for neglecting the kids until they are good enough to be professional prospects. Now it will be interesting to see how the hockey folks will do in their effort to start from the bottom.

N.H.L. Training Camp Notes

By The Canadian Press.)

There's a scarcity of news from the training camps which probably indicates that the coaches, managers and other club officials are busy with the task of weeding out the rookies.

Art Ross of Boston Bruins' adopts the "say nothing" attitude yearly just before the league gets under way so that he can keep his line-up more or less secret until the opening game. Bruins break their Quebec training camp Thursday and will go to Montreal for the first game against Canadiens Saturday.

Toronto Maple Leafs began the first of three exhibition games last (Monday) night. The Blues play the Whites in these tilts put on for the benefit of the public. Coach Hap Day is keeping quiet also about his starting lineup.

When New York Rangers break camp at Winnipeg Wednesday night they'll be accompanied to Toronto by nine players from New York Rovers, their farm team. Lester Patrick plans keeping the boys with him in the Queen City for a couple of days because of a shortage of hotel space in New York.

Gaston Gauthier, obtained by Patrick from Hershey Bears of the American Hockey League, will be unable to line up with Rangers because of rheumatism in his feet.

Montreal Canadiens' forward lines probably will shape up like this: Toe Blake, Elmer Lach and Maurice Richard; Fernand Gauthier, Murph Chamberlain and Ray Getliffe, and Rollie Rossignol, Buddy O'Connor and Dutch Hiller, with Bob Filion being retained in a utility role.

Even with the opening game scheduled at Montreal for Saturday night the Habitants training camp is not closed to recruits. It is reported that Nils Tremblay, a member of the Allan Cup Quebec Aces, is expected for a last-minute trial.

Horse Sense Bridge

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Horse Sense bridge is an example of simple art and efficiency. Bids start from a few centralized groups. Parts are interchangeable. They come out like on an assembly line.

In suit bids, a one-opening shows only half enough for a game; a two-opening expects to make a game by itself; an opening of three or higher needs little help for game.

In suit bids, an opening of two or less shows a suit that may only be biddable; an opening of three or more guarantees a suit that is long and strong and needs no support.

Thus, an opening of three in a major suit (spades or hearts) shows a hand that needs a little help, but not much, to make a game. And it guarantees a long and strong suit that needs no support.

An opening of three in a major is a one-less-than-game bid. So is an opening of four in a minor suit (diamonds or clubs). And all one-less-than-game bids mean the same thing.

An opening of three-major shows a long-strong suit. So does a four-minor. A three-major shows a sure trick outside of the long suit. So does a four-minor.

Only one noticeable difference may be expected between a three-major and a four-minor. A three-major expects to take a maximum of eight tricks; a four-minor expects to take nine tricks.

Take a hand like this:

♠ None
♥ K 6
♦ A K J 10 6 5 4 3
♣ K Q 8

This hand has nine tricks. They are made up of five high cards (one ace, three kings, one queen) and four short cards (three in the spade suit and one in hearts.)

The sure outside trick is K Q of clubs. The suit is long and strong. It has all the stuff needed for an opening of four diamonds.

Bridge players must watch out when squirrels are about.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By SYD THOMAS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Oct. 24 —(CP)— What hockey needs is plenty of the old iron fist, without too much velvet glove on it, in the opinion of Leo Dandurand, Montreal sportsman of diversified tastes. Dandurand is best known for his work of building Montreal Canadiens into the powerful and colorful aggregation they were for many years in the 1920's and 1930's, but he was, and is, just as keen about horse racing and many other sports.

Dandurand, in an interview with Bill (Niagara Falls Review) Gagnon, joined the ranks of those who plunk strongly for appointment of a "Judge Landis" who would be given broad powers over the great and little lights of the hockey heavens. And his choice for such a big-stick wielder is Red Dutton, with no reservations.

Leo confirmed the report that he had been offered the N.H.L. presidency but had to decline it because his race tracks and other interests keep him too busy.

Golf Balls Galore.

Golfers on the West Coast have been digging deeply into their reserves and turning over quantities of golf balls for use by the servicemen. Bill Frost, news editor and golf columnist of the Vancouver Province, started it when he remarked how scarce golf balls were in Britain and suggested golfers help out a bit. Since then 400 of the scarce and precious balls have been shipped to service officers in Britain, and 600 more are ready to go. Some shiny, brand new pre-war samples turned up in the lot, too.

Incidentally:

The army or more properly Major Ian Eisenhardt, started something with that cross-country race business. Montreal will see its first interscholastic cross-territory gallop Nov. 9 when the senior and junior boys get on their shank's mares . . . His physical disabilities barred him from the army, so Gus Mell decided on another way to help out. The Canadian featherweight title-holder donated his share of the purse in his fight with Al Triola of New York, to send Christmas boxes overseas for the troops . . . Vince Ferguson, one of the slickest all-round athletes produced in Halifax, played the leading role at a testimonial dinner in his honor recently. Vince has been around the Bluenose sport scene practically a generation now, and still is going strong. . . .

Busher Jackson Leaves N.H.L.

COUNCIL MEMBERS HAVE A NAME FOR HIM

Kitchener, Oct. 24—(CP)—Waterloo County Council fond itself with a new "deputy warden" recently—but not for long. That's the title members bestowed upon an inebriate found "sleeping it off" in the council chamber by the building superintendent. The man was handed over to police.

By HYE BOSSIN

Joe Kirkwood, Jr., Canadian pro golfer, has been signed by MGM Studios and will become an actor after his RCAF days are over. He was presented with a gold chain at the dinner which followed the recent Canadian Motion Picture Golf Championships. . . Time for audience applause had to be allowed after the main titles of "The Thin Man Goes Home" flash on the screen. Myrna Loy and William Powell return to the screen in it and silent action had to be created to allow audiences to welcome them back. The film had to be brought back to the studio after its first showing because it was evident that the same thing would happen everywhere.

* * *

An actress named Alma Kruger, who is appearing in "Babes on Swing Street," will probably play Cobourg's late Marie Dressler in any film story of her life. The Kruger lady, as Hollywood has noticed, is a ringer for the great comedienne. . . Canadian motion picture executives are winning international recognition in the film world. Recently David Coplan of United Artists in Canada was placed in charge of that company's British interests and now Wolfe Cohen of Warner Bros. in Canada has been given supervision of Mexico, South America, Central America, Australia and New Zealand. . . Brian Donlevy owns a Tungsten mine in Arizona. . . Paramount's starlet, Dianna Lynn, whose last screen appearance was as Betty Hutton's little sister in "The Miracle of Morgan's Creek," made quit a hit during her recent visit to Toronto. A pleasant and unassuming person. Her newest appearance is as a co-star with Gail Russell in "Our Hearts Were Young and Gay."

* * *

World premiere of "When the Lights Go On Again" will take place in Quebec City during European V-Day and everything is set to work on 24 hours' notice. . . . Fred Allen's first film since 1940 will be "It's In the Bag." He appears as the impresario of a flea circus, with Robert Benchley as an insect exterminator. Sounds funny. . . Vancouver-born Yvonne De Carlo will have the lead in "Salome, Where She Danced." She was chosen by Producer Walter Wanger when he spotted her on the screen in a small part. Wanger had asked for applications, saying that he wanted a new face, and heard from 20,000 girls. But he found his girl right in Hollywood. . . You'll see Sylvia Sidney again soon. She will play opposite Jimmy Cagney in "Blood On the Sun."

* * *

They tell about a lady patron of a movie show who was groping around on the floor. The lady next to her asked what it was that she had lost. "A caramel," was the answer. "A caramel?" she asked in surprise. "Yes," said the groper, "my teeth are in it." . . . In production right now is "The Church of the Good Thief," story of a Catholic church within the walls of the USA's Dannemora prison. The priest who built it is acting in an advisory capacity. . . Bing Crosby's four sons will appear with William Bendix in "Duffy's Tavern." . . . Jean Cagney, sister of Jimmy, married a six-foot-four lad named Kim Spaulding.

Italians Well Fed

(London Express)

Railwaymen at a Birmingham station said recently that Italian co-operators working with them were better fed—and threw away some of their food.

The Italians, they said, often waste whole loaves.

One worker said: "When you think of the cost in lives to the Merchant Navy it makes you sick to see the food thrown away because they are not hungry.

"I have children who would be pleased to get some of it."

The Italians carry in their lunchboxes loaves, tins of fish, condensed milk, cake and, sometimes, fresh eggs.

They arrive at 9.30 a.m. in uncrowded motor coaches.

A railwayman said: "As workmen they aren't worth anything. It takes 18 of them a full day to fill in a trench 6 yards long, 3 feet wide and 3 feet deep."

At 4 p.m. the coaches come to collect them. And for the day's work each man gets 1s 6d.

The railwaymen work from 6 a.m. to 5 p.m., and their lunch baskets usually have only bread, margarine and jam—from the family rations.

BREAK-THROUGH FOILED

London, Oct. 24 —(CP Reuter)—The German D.N.B. news agency said today that strong Allied break-through attempts northeast of Antwerp and east of 'S Hertogenbosch were foiled. It added a small local breach was made in the German line, but did not specify where the breach was made.

THE FIGHT GOES ON IN AACHEN

These two scenes taken in the devastated Siegfried Line city of Aachen show, tanks and soldiers of the U. S. First Army as they continue to mop up remaining nests of Nazi resistance. In the upper photo the soldiers are on the alert for Nazi snipers hidden in the ruined buildings and in the lower photo two of the soldiers carefully lift a stricken buddy. American forces now hold one half of the wrecked city and are smashing German tank and infantry counter-thrusts to the northeast.

TO THE STARS

By Russell McKeogh

CHAPTER 5

"You tell me," she whispered and James was quite nervous though he didn't know it.

"Actions," he said, "Speak louder than words." He leaned towards her to kiss her and she laughed softly.

"Not now, Jimmy," she said, pressing back against his shoulders. He was a little surprised and embarassed.

"Why not?"

She swayed against him again but turned her head so that she was looking at the moon. "We've lots of time for that later, haven't we?" In spite of himself Jimmy knew she was probably right. He felt he ought not to pursue the matter further, but he knew he would — knew he was powerless to do otherwise. Verna, even at eighteen, was a very fascinating though slightly unscrupulous woman, and she shared an admirer, the hero of the night, at the Football Dance in the Fall of 1939.

Inside the dinner was about to start and Jimmy, suddenly sorry, began to look for Margaret. She was nowhere to be seen and then he was sitting at the players' table with Verna. The dinner was typically buffet and handled by a caterer and when, after the speeches, a special photographer came around Verna said, "Oh, Jimmy let's get our pictures taken. After all you're the hero tonight and we both want to remember this dance." And as the bulb flashed Jimmy was looking around guiltily for Margaret. She was sitting at the Froshes' table with the kid who had been dancing with Verna when he cut in and suddenly he didn't like the rest of the cold chicken that was on his plate.

At three-thirty he took Margaret home. As they drove down the dark deserted street to her house he found himself saying in a low voice, "I'm sorry I missed you tonight there, Peggy. I couldn't find you when we were going to eat." And Margaret looking at the dark lean profile of his face as she sat beside him, felt butterflies in her stomach and said only, "Oh that's all right, Jimmy, I had a marvelous time, and thanks for everything." When they were on her porch he kissed her and felt her lips, warm and soft and welcoming and loving under his own, and he felt like a complete cad. As he drove home he wiped the lipstick off with his handkerchief and thought again, involuntarily, and unwillingly, of Verna Foster, tall and beautiful and firm. In the Fall of 1939 you would say James Riley was a shallow and thoughtless and pretty flighty young man. And you'd be right—in the Fall of 1939.

It was Roman Law and outside the sun shone through the windows and he watched the prof outlining the mimeographed set of notes he had just released and he soon tired of that. He could swot it up easily the night of the exam and instead he leaned his chin in his hand on the broad arm of the desk-chair and day-dreamed for a while. He thought of the girls in general, how nice they were, then he thought of girls in particular, of Verna and Margaret. He looked at the back of Punchy's head and noticed the waves that ran even through the hair on the back of his neck. He looked at other fellows in the class and wondered just how many of them would ever really make lawyers. Especially now with the rumors of all-out conscription going around. He thought about the war. It all seemed pretty foolish, a whole lot of men going around killing each other, but from what he was hearing it was pretty necessary. Freedom. What the hell was it anyhow. He thought about that for a while and then he noticed that old Smidley was way off the point again as usual. He had put the mimeographed release down on the lecture table and he was talking in a manner that was much more fiery and altogether unlike his usual meek and droning habit. Jimmy listened.

"As Law students," the old professor was saying, "it's part of your education to know facts and to draw comparisons, and I can't recommend anything more heartily for your pleasure and leisure reading than the classics. Most of you have already, I believe, run across Cicero and Demostenes at any rate and I must earnestly recommend a further perusal of Socrates and Sophocles. You won't find better logic or writing anywhere and it will prove immeasurably beneficial to you later on." Lord, Lord, what does he think we are, supermen? Say, that's the name the Huns were calling themselves these days, supermen, a master race. Old Smidley paused and wiped his glasses, holding them out to the light of the big windows along the side of the lecture room. Jimmy looked at his worn seamed face, a man of sixty at least, yet still contented-looking with none of the bitter and lost look of most old people he knew who never seemed to know what to do with themselves now that the big struggle was over. He realized too what it was that kept old Smidley so happy and peaceful. He had another interest, something outside the normal sphere of his life. He lived the subject he taught and he also had a consuming interest in the classics, though practically anything would serve as well, liking them for themselves, for the wisdom he found in them. He realized suddenly too that he wanted very much to be like Smidley when he grew old, if like anything at all. Like the professor he wanted very much to have something to think about when the nights grew long and you didn't sleep and the days were long after the nights and you were unable to do any of the things you had done like swimming and dancing. Or just making money. Professor Smidley was talking again.

"Some of you might think the classics, especially the Greek, are pretty dry stuff and useless, not applicable to present day life. Well you're wrong. As you grow older you'll learn the truth of the old saw that history always repeats itself. And you'll see that there is nothing new under the sun.

"The old orators were the wisest men of their day and just as wise, though perhaps not advanced scientifically, as we are. For which latter perhaps they can be thoroughly thankful.

"Be that as it may, I was reading Demosthene's Philippics last night and the picture comparison was so real I was led to wonder at it. It could have been happening today. Athens, the centre of the civilized world of the time was threatened by Philip of Macedon, which was outside Greece and therefore barbarian. Philip had already overrun Corinthia and Sparta, and Demosthenes by his eloquence had endeavored to rouse the Greeks to watchfulness against this danger and to unite among themselves. Philip of Macedon was able to offset his influence by forming in Greece itself a party under Eskenes which dissolved the bonds of union among the Greeks and prepared the way for the final blow which took pace at Chaeronea. The party of Eskenes—Philip's Quislings, you might say — triumphed over patriotism of Demosthenes and made Greece a prey to the Northern State of Macedonia and the Athenians and Thebans were defeated in the Battle of Chaeronea in 338, and Philip became the master of Greece.

"I won't belabor the comparison. The similarity to the present day state of affairs is clearly enough drawn. But I would say, beware of complacency and listen to the man who is charge over there. He is a fine orator among other things and I can conscientiously recommend him to you for that alone. There could be other reasons and until it is proved otherwise I wouldn't believe it too strongly that this is a phoney war. We might havve another Chaeronea."The bell rang and Jimmy walked rather quickly out of the class with the rest.

The Smoker always presented a mad scene at Break. Students milled around, talking, laughing, shouting. Pipes and cigarettes hung a blue hazy mantle over the assemblage and the two big tables were always obscured by the throng. Little groups gathered around the notice boards, those in the back leaning forward onto the shoulders of those in front to the unlucky individuals next to the boards were always pressed against the wall and saw the notices from a worm's eye position. As soon as each shift finished reading about the next holiday, the meeting of the Camera Club, the Orchestra practice, the next Debate, they broke up and drifted off and their places were filled by another group.

As Jimmy strolled over to join Gus, Cuz, and Punchy, who had gathered at one of the tables to discuss Saturday's game he caught typical snatches of conversation.

"Solid time last night."

"Yeah? Who?"

"Betty."

"Brother she sure must have changed since I took her out."

Bespectacled Ab Newman jumped up on the table and in a deep and resonant voice entirely out of keeping with his thin neck, small chest immaculate stiff collar, bellowed for silence and got it. "OK, now listen you men. You all turned out for last Saturday's game and we won. . ."

"Yeah Tem!" a chorus yelled and the cry was taken up. Ab got silence again only with difficulty. "Yeah, we won," Ab continued. "And that just shows what a little fight and spirit in there will do. All right then, you've got another team going in there tomorrow night. We're debating against Queens and I want to see everyone of you birds down there. Do that and we'll be on our way to getting you another Championship, the Inter-University Shield." More cheers. "So come out there tomorrow night—everyone of you." His descent from the table was followed by cries of "Yeah Ab," as another typically impromptu little rally came to an end.

Chet strolled up to the group at the table. He was small and stocky with a toughness and stamina that somehow managed to survive in spite of a pretty wild life. He was always to be found downtown at nights, doing the eternal round of clubs and pubs and how he managed to pass the exams, mid-terms and finals, was a mystery. He had created something of a sensation that Fall at the Chez by swaggering into the middle of the floorshow with a fern fully two feet long, dangling from his lapel.

It helps nature, girls!

Take heed if you like so many girls and women—on such days—suffer from cramps, headache, backache, feel nervous, "dragged out", a bit blue—all due to functional monthly disturbances!

Start at once—try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve such symptoms because this medicine has a soothing effect on ONE OF WOMAN'S MOST IMPORTANT ORGANS. Thousands upon thousands of women and girls—rich and poor have reported benefits.

Pinkham's Compound is made from effective roots and herbs (plus Vitamin B_1). Here's a product that helps nature and that's the kind to buy! Just see if you're not delighted with results. Follow label directions.

Lydia E. Pinkham's VEGETABLE COMPOUND

RECTAL SORENESS AND PILE TORTURE
QUICKLY RELIEVED

If you are troubled with itching piles or rectal soreness, do not delay treatment and run the risk of letting this condition become chronic. Any itching or soreness or painful passage of stool is nature's warning and proper treatment should be secured at once.

For this purpose get a package of Hemroid from J. S. McKeown or any I.D.A. or other drug store and use as directed. This formula which is used internally is a small, easy to take tablet, will quickly relieve the itching and soreness and aid in healing the sore tender spots. Hem-Roid is pleasant to use, is highly recommended and it seems the height of folly for any one to risk a painful and chronic pile condition when such a fine remedy may be had at such a small cost.

If you try Hem-Roid and are not entirely pleased with the results, your druggist will gladly return your money.

Little Benny's Note Book

After supper I was finishing the last chapter of Puds Simkin's lyberry book on account of him being so impatient to get it back, and pop said, How about that homework?

Meaning was it done yet, and I said, I was just getting ready to start it, pop, and ma said, Oh dear, the same old proverbial story. We never had any such trouble with Gladdis over her lessons when she was Benny's age. Girls are much more serious about their duties than boys, she said.

That's the truth, pop said. And that's the reason men lead happier lives than women. The only way a man can do his work well is by making a game of it, and if Benny could only catch the nack of making a game of his homework, he'd be a star pupil in no time, he said, and I said, Well G, pop, how for instance?

Well, practically all games start with let's pretend, pop said. So why dont you pretend there's a little girl here doing her homework with you, and the 2 of you are having a race to see who gets done first. You can beat a mere girl doing homework, even an imaginary one, no matter how serious she is, he said, and ma said, Well, that's quite an idea, I suppose the male sex understands each other best after all.

Sure we do dont we, Benny? pop said, and I said, Sure, G. Only jimminy, pop, I can think of a still better game. How about if I run around to the drug store and get a package of lemmon drops and pretend I'm doing my lessons in the desert, and each lemmon drop is another oasis to keep me from dying of thirst so I can keep on studying? G, pop, gosh, ma, it'll only take a minute to run around to the drugstore for the lemmon drops if you give me the money, I said.

You get started on that homework and pretend it's a grindstone and keep your nose to it, pop said.

Being the end of the subject.

Soldiers, Sailors, Airmen Arrive In Big Movement

By The Canadian Press

From all the fighting fronts of Canada's war, a group of men and women of the Canadian Services have returned to the Dominion to take up new duties or to undergo treatment for wounds or disabilities suffered across the Atlantic.

Soldiers, sailors and airmen were in the large movement, with the khaki-clad contingent predominant. There were men from Italy and France, Navy Veterans of the war at sea and survivors of the battles over Europe. A few men who fought through the Dieppe "reconnaissance in force" were among them.

Members of the women's Branches of the fighting forces, coming back home after service in Britain, were included in the arrivals.

Along with them came another unit in the long procession of war brides of Canadian servicemen from Britain. Many of them carried young children, and in a few cases husbands and wives were travelling together.

Many Decorated.

Men decorated for bravery under enemy fire or for efficiency in disposing of the Hun were included in the group. The R. C. A. F. alone had 22 returning winners of the Distinguished Flying Cross or Medal.

Army men bearing decorations included Lt.-Col. Donald Buell, D. S. O., who led the North Shore New Brunswickers into France on D-Day and later was wounded, and thrice-wounded Maj. Jock McLean, D. S. O., of Vernon, B. C., who earned his decoration with the Seaforth Highlanders in the bloody fighting across the Moro River in Italy.

To Take Command.

Returning from instructional duties in England was Maj. J. M. Gifford of Kingston, Ont., who was bound for Barriefield, Ont., to take command of the Ordnance School there. Maj. Gifford was completing his second round-trip Atlantic crossing. Waiting for him at home was a new son whom he had not yet seen.

A D. F. C. winner of the R. C. A. F. contingent was FO. J. B. Findlay of Fitzroy Harbor, Ont., who had made 45 trips over Germany in two operational tours as an air gunner, including nine visits to Berlin. His bag was three German planes probably destroyed.

Price Control Big Factor in Keeping Value of Dollar at Economic Level

Keeping Canada's dollar value at a high standard and fighting off inflation has been a task of vast scope and many problems handled satisfactorily by the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, A. G. Smith, Toronto, of the Management Service of the Board declared here on Monday.

Speaking of the Rotary Club at the regular weekly luncheon, Mr. Smith stated that a lesson in inflation had been taught by the high rise in the cost of living during the last war. This lesson, he added, had prepared the country to maintain the value of the currency and avoid, as far as possible the misfortune of inflation.

"This job," he said, "was assigned by the government to the Wartime Prices and Trade Board which was faced with far greater economic pressures which start inflation, than was the case in 1916." He stated that 50 per cent of Canada's industrial production has been diverted to war materials. Increased employment and larger family incomes together with a decreased supply of goods and services available for civilian use required a complicated system of stabilized controls. These, he added, were price control, wage and salary control and heavy government borrowings through Victory Loans.

"Few people know of the work being done in connection with the supply and equitable distribution of civilian goods", Mr. Smith said, in explaining the necessity of ceilings and rationing. One of the chief difficulties has been the individual hoarder who went out and bought everything he could when it was advertised as becoming scarce. "It seems unfortunate that such advertising had the opposite effect to that which was desired."

"After three years of practical experience, we believe that with the continued co-operation of the public, it will be possible to maintain an adequate supply of all essential civilian goods for the Canadian consumer," Mr. Smith pointed out. He warned, however, that this will depend a lot on the civilian buying one article instead of two of the same kind, when the second one is unnecessary.

He explained the workings of the "Standards Division" of the Board, whose function is to study and direct values in consumr goods offered for sale under the price ceiling; of the ration administration for the assistance it gives the Board in keeping the country's dollar value at a high standard and many incidental and amusing stories in connection with board work.

President "Pink" Pinkston was in the chair with Rotarians "Sandy" Burrows and Leo Riggs providing the music. Howard Clarke was the official "fine-collector".

Govt. To Operate Synthetic Rubber Plant at Sarnia

Ottawa, Oct. 24 —(CP)— The Canadian government will continue to operate the synthetic rubber plant at Sarnia, Ont., Munitions Minister Howe said last night in an address over a Canadian radio network in which he described the operations of the Crown Assets Allocation Committee and War Assets Corporation.

Where it is considered desirable in the best interests of the nation to continue such properties as the Sarnia rubber plant under government ownership and operation, they will continue to be so maintained and operated, he said.

The function of the Crown Assets Allocation Committee is to advise the Minister of the broad international and inter-governmental aspects of the surplus disposal problem. It is charged also with receiving and recording all Crown property declared surplus by every department of government and of turning these surpluses over to the corporation for disposal.

"Upon War Assets Corporation falls the difficult and intricate task of deciding how disposal of physical surpluses will be undertaken, of establishing the price structure of sales and the channels through which the sales will be made within the broad policies agreed upon from time to time.

"Because many war materials will have no peace-time value, the corporation must also decide what surpluses will have to be destroyed. Its job will be neither easy nor enviable and except to give it certain broad general directions, which may be interpreted in more detail from time to time by War Assets Allocation Committee, parliament has left it free to work out its own destiny."

"However, while the corporation is left free to conduct its affairs as a business organization, it is nevertheless, an instrument of the people and must account for its acts to parliament, through the Minister."

HELP KINSMEN SEND MILK TO BRITAIN

Children Assist Kinsmen At Shell-Out Parties

All across Canada this month Canadian children are sacrificing their annual "treats or tricks" to send sorely needed milk to the children in bombed Britain. The occasion is the second annual nation-wide Kinsmen Hallowe'en "Shell-Out" parties that will be sponsored in 131 Canadian towns and cities wherever Kinsmen Clubs flourish. Th project is simple and the dividends great. Instead of collecting candies and apples on Hallowe'en the children collect "Shell Out" stamps, that have been sold from house to house previous to Hallowe'en. Then the kiddies meet at a central point, where prizes are given for the school children selling the greatest number of Hallowe'en "Shell Out" tickets at the nominal price of a cent each. And all the net profits go to send milk to the bombed out children of Britain.

Last year 47 Kinsmen Clubs across Canada sponsored the initial Shell Out Hallowe'en project when, through the co-operation of the school children, a total of $97,000. was realized to send over a million quarts of milk overseas. Now that the Robot or "Buzz Bombs" are taking a toll of havoc and leaving innumerable wounded and homeless, it is the little children, who suffer the most following these heavy Robot bombings when they find their homes, loved ones and even parents missing or dead following these devastating raids. These small children must have life-giving milk as their principal nourishment and the Kinsmen "Milk for Britain" fund is providing millions of quarts of milk for these kiddies each year. The Hallowe'en "Shell Out" party is one of the ventures the Kinsmen operate to raise money for "Milk for British Kiddies".

Their "Shell Out" program has the endorsation of all other service clubs across Canada and even in some towns where Kinsmen Clubs, do not function Kiwanis and Lions Clubs are organizing "Shell Out" parties for Hallowe'en with all profits being given over to the Kinsmen "Milk for Britain" fund. Remember—"a Dime sends a quart of milk overseas".

Expect To Raise Money for Three Million Quarts

All ready Belleville's school children have started a house-to-house campaign in the selling of tickets for the second annual Kinsmen "Shell Out" Hallowe'en party to be held in Belleville.

Endorsed by the city police, firemen and officials at the City Hall as one of the best mediums in keeping the destruction of property to a minimum at Hallowe'en, the Kinsmen "Shell Out" program seems to be the solution to such problems. Simultaneously across Canada the 2nd annual Kinsmen "Shell Out" is expected to be the medium of raising enough money to send three million quarts of milk overseas as the result of one evening's endeavours.

Special prizes for the school children selling the greatest number "Shell Out" tickets, the principal prizes being two bicycles, one for the girl selling the largest number of tickets and the other for the champion boy seller.

Last year the initial Kinsmen "Shell Out" Hallowe'en party attracted adults as well as children and tended to make one mighty big community party at the Armouries where all joined in the fun. Householders are urged to purchase "Shell Out" tickets, which can be given to masquerading kiddies on Hallowe'en in place of candy and apples. Remember "a Dime sends a quart of milk to a baby in Bombed Britain."

TWO MILLION QUARTS . . . that's a lot of milk, isn't it? British children need all that - and more - RIGHT NOW . . . in evacuee homes, in War Hospitals, War Nurseries, Havens for Waifs and Strays. Yes! Two million quarts is a lot of milk - but these youngsters, like ours in Canada, should drink milk every day. Canadian children are going to send it to them. Hallowe'en Night our children, in all parts of Canada, instead of crying "Gimme!" are going to ask "Help us to help others". Oh yes! They'll cry "SHELL OUT" but this year it will be "SHELL OUT" for the kids in Britain. You'll help them, won't you?

Kinsmen Fund Shell Out tickets, instead of candies and treats for themselves, are wanted when Canadian kiddies knock at your door this Hallowe'en and call "SHELL OUT . . . SHELL OUT for Milk-for-Britain".

Buy your SHELL OUT Tickets, 100 for $1.00, at your neighborhood store or from the school children themselves. Take your change in SHELL OUT tickets. Then when Hallowe'en "ghosts, an' goblins, an' funny little people" call at your door Tuesday night . . . "SHELL OUT" - - - for the children in Britain.

'Shell-Out' Party Tends To Minimize Child Delinquency

In its initial venture last year the Kinsmen Club of Belleville sent over 10,000 quarts of milk to succor the babies of bombed Britain in the first Kinsmen "Shell Out" Hallowe'en party. However, this year the local Kinsmen hope to be able to send over 15,000 quarts of milk to Britain, through their "Milk for Britain" fund in connection with the second annual "Shell Out" party this Hallowe'en. With increase Robot or "Buzz Bombing" resulting in a worse blitz than even 1940, the need of milk for the children of bombed Britain is even greater than ever before.

In 1943 the Kinsmen Club of Canada sent over 2,000,000 quarts of milk overseas as the direct result of their initial Hallowe'en "Shell Out" programs. This year the objective has been set at three million quarts, as the need is much greater today.

The conception of the Hallowe'en "Shell Out" originated in Western Canada with the idea of raising money for war charities and also of tending to minimize the extensive property damage at Hallowe'en time. The principle is simple, now that candy is hard to obtain. Prior to Hallowe'en school children sell "Shell Out" tickets (One Cent each) to the householders. On Hallowe'en these "Shell Out" tickets are collected by children in masquerade when householders can pass them out instead of candy. Taken to a central point, the Armouries in Belleville, prizes are given for the boys and girls selling the greatest number of tickets. Organized entertainment is also provided to which the parents and adults are also invited. Special prizes will be given for masquerade costumes making the party of Hallowe'en atmosphere throughout.

Kinsmen Send 18,000,000 Quarts Milk Overseas

Since the inception of the Kinsmen "Milk for Britain" fund, less than three years ago, over 18,000,000 quarts of milk have been sent overseas to succor the children throughout the areas of bombed Britain. Now that the Robot bombs have been introduced by the enemy the need for "milk for Britain" is equally as great as back in 1940-'41 when the Blitz was at its height. Since inauguration of the Kinsmen "Milk for Britain" fund over $2,000,000 has been spent in the purchase of milk and for its shipment overseas.

Last October 31st the National Council of Kinsmen in Canada introduced their first Hallowe'en "Shell Out" party, which met with instant success and resulted in over one million quarts of milk being realized and sent overseas.

Canadian children taking part in the second annual Kinsmen "Shell Out" party still can enjoy their traditional Hallowe'en fun, but under the "Shell Out" program it is fun with a purpose. While participating in the program they also share in a major war effort and the entire scheme tends to lessen juvenile delinquency and mischief-making at Hallowe'en. This also is another feature recognized by the householder, who can assist in making "Shell Out" night a success in every sense of the world by buying Shell-Out tickets. The Kinsmen "Shell-Out" Hallowe'en parties have the endorsation of federal, provincial and municipal authorities, as well as church and educational bodies to add to its popularity.

The Kinsmen Club is Canada's only national Service Club of Canadian origin. There are 131 clubs in Canada and one in Newfoundland. Since the declaration of war the Kinsmen has been a "War Service Club' 'across the Dominion. 'Milk for Britain', Merchant Navy comforts and cigarettes funds are their principal war charity projects.

JAPANESE FLEET BATTERED

Jap Carrier Sunk, 2 Damaged With Many Other Ships

150 Enemy Planes Shot Down, American Forces Lose Carrier

By CHARLES H. McMURTRY, AP WAR CORRESPONDENT

Pearl Harbor, Oct. 25 —(AP)— Carrier planes of the U. S. 3rd Fleet have sunk a large Japanese carrier, damaged two other large carriers, five or six battleships, one cruiser and several other unidentified warships in a great three-pronged naval battle which is continuing near the Philippines.

The U.S.S. Princeton, a light carrier, was lost when, already badly crippled, her magazine exploded and she had to be sunk by American ships.

The Tokyo radio has admitted the loss of two cruisers and a destroyer in the action while claiming to have sunk 11 ships and damaged five others.

The Princeton's captain and 1,360 of her officers and men were rescued.

In addition to fleet units sunk or damaged, the Japanese lost 150 planes.

The actions began Monday afternoon (U. S. time), extended throughout Tuesday and general "action is continuing," Nimitz said.

Nimitz said a strong force of land-based Japanese planes attacked one U. S. task group Monday and succeeded in seriously damaging the Princeton, first American carrier lost since the Liscombe Bay went down in flames off the Marshall islands in December, 1943.

150 Planes Downed.

Approximately 150 enemy planes were shot down during the attack, Nimitz said.

The Japanese — apparently attempting a surprise three-pronged attack which they hoped would catch the 3rd fleet concentrating on Japanese battleships and cruisers in the Sibuyan and Sulu seas — sent a third force from Formosa.

The group included at least three carriers. However there was no indication in the communique that any Japanese carrier planes were launched.

It was from this carrier force that U. S. carrier planes sank "at least one large carrier and severely damaged two others."

Nimitz said reports of this carrier action south of Formosa are incomplete, indicating the 3rd fleet may have inflicted additional damage upon the enemy.

Actions Began Monday.

The actions began Monday. Carrier search planes discovered two enemy forces heading eastward through the Sibuyan and Sulu Seas, ostensibly intending to bombard Gen. MacArthur's ground forces on Leyte Island.

One force consisted of three or four battleships, 10 cruisers and about 13 destroyers. Repeated attacks by carrier aircraft indicate that every battleship was damaged by bombs, that at least one was torpedoed and one cruiser was torpedoed.

The second force was sighted southwest of Negros Island in the Sulu Sea in the Southwestern Philippines. It consisted of two battleships, one cruiser and four destroyers. Both battleships were damaged by bombs and the light units were strafed.

There was no hint in the communique whether the Japanese battleships were of the older, slower classes or the new, heavily armed and armored ships which possibly have yet to see action.

Sixth Flat Top Sunk.

The Princeton is the second escort carrier lost by the United States, and the sixth flat-top sunk. The Carriers Lexington, Yorkton and Hornet were lost in the battle of the Coral Sea, Midway and Santa Cruz, respectively. The Wasp went down to submarine torpedoes in the South Pacific. The escort Carrier Liscombe Bay was torpedoed by land-based Japanese aircraft while attacking Wotje and Jaluit Atolls in neutralising raids six weeks before American amphibious forces captured the Marshall Islands.

The Princeton, a converted 10,000 ton cruiser carried about 45 combat aircraft, which could have landed on accompanying carriers.

13 Jap Carriers Sunk.

Destruction of 150 Japanese planes increased the aircraft toll exacted of the Japanese by U.S. Carrier forces since about Sept. 1 to between 2,425 and 2,435.

From Aug. 1 to date, 345 Japanese ships have been sunk, 56 probably sunk and 398 others damaged, a total of 589 exclusive of small craft.

JAPANESE VERSION

San Francisco, Oct. 25 (AP)—A Japanese communique reported today three Japanese warships had been sunk in a raging naval and sea battle off the Philippines, and claimed 11 American warships had been sunk and two damaged by naval gunfire and submarine action.

Tokyo radio asserted "Japanese naval fire sank four aircraft carriers, two large cruisers and one destroyer" in an intensifying sea battle "east of the Philippines Wednesday (Tokyo time).

"More than four enemy transports the broadcast asserted were sunk by Japanese submarines in the same action, which began Tuesday.

An English-language version of the communique, beamed to the United States and recorded by the F.C.C., reiterated early Domei news agency claims that five other ships had been damaged in addition to the 11 asserted to have been sunk. Domei identified the five as two carriers, a battleship and two cruisers.

The Sulu Sea lies in the southwestern corner of the Philippines, separating Mindanao, Palawan, Borneo and the Visayan group. The Sibuyan Sea lies between the Visayan group and Luzon Island.

On the eastern fringe of the Visayans are invaded Leyte Island and Samar, which a front report to Australia said had also been invaded by MacArthur's men

Unconditional Surrender Still Policy of Britain Says Churchill

London, Oct. 25 — (CP) — Prime Minister Churchill reiterated to the House of Commons today that "unconditional surrender in the sense of no bargaining with the enemy is still the policy of the government."

He suggested in answer to a question from the floor, that the House should bear in mind also the three-power declaration of last May 13 to Axis satellites, in which they were warned to quit Germany.

The Prime Minister nevertheless declined to engage in a foreign affairs debate, declaring it would be unwise to go into details on delicate international matters "on the spur of the moment." There would be an opportunity for debate after his report Friday on his Moscow mission, he said, but added he hoped it would be short.

He left unanswered questions as to how unconditional surrender was to be reconciled with former enemies becoming "apparent allies" and as to whether Nazis who surrendered unconditionally would be given government posts in Germany. Such matters, he said, would have to be settled among the principal Allies.

"I do not think there is any reason for alarm," he added.

Earlier, Richard Law, Minister of State, told the House Britain and Russia had made no decision during the recent Moscow talks on respective sons of influence in the Balkans.

Although Bulgaria has declared war on Germany, he said, the country is still technically at war with the Allies in the sense that terms are still being discussed. He added that Bulgaria could not yet be recognized as a co-belligerent.

Italy's status of co-belligerency offers no protection to individual Italians who mistreated British prisoners of war, Mr. Law said in answer to another question.

"A number of them are already in our hands," he reported. "Steps will certainly be taken against them."

The effort by members to turn today's debate onto foreign affairs came to an end after Mr. Churchill turned aside a question as to whether Germany would be made to pay for the "worthless marks" with which she had flooded occupied countries.

"The issue of currency is only one of the many ways in which Germany has exploited the countries she has occupied," the Prime Minister said. "I cannot at this stage say in what way her various exactions will be dealt with at the final settlement."

WILLIAM NUGENT, HASTINGS NATIVE, ON NEW HOTEL BD.

Judge Robb Chairman, J. Reid Member Of New Ontario Body To Regulate Hotels

Toronto, Oct. 25 (CP)—The new liquor Authority Control Board of Ontario, three-man board to control and regulate hotels, was today announced by Attorney-General L. E. Blackwell. The board is headed as chairman by Judge Walter T. Robb, Orangeville, and the other members are William T. Nugent, Lindsay and J. Frederick Reid of Windsor.

Mr. Blackwell said the province has been divided into districts for the purpose of conducting a judicial system licensing the sale of beer and wine on premises. The board will hold hearings for the purpose of granting, transferring, renewing, suspending and cancelling licenses and will have jurisdiction to impose conditions on licensees. The board will base its decisions on evidence taken at public hearings.

Judge Robb was born at Dunnville in 1898, graduated from University of Toronto in 1911, and was called to the Bar in 1914.

He is the father of eight children, six living. Four sons have served overseas, one Flt. Sergt. Reg. F. Robb having been killed in 1942.

Mr. Nugent is a Hastings County resident, served in the last war as a captain and was the son of the late W. J. Nugent, County Clerk of Hastings County. He has been an inspector of liquor stores and hotels. He is married and has two daughters.

Mr. Reid is a native of Middlesex County, but has lived in Windsor since childhood. He is one of the most widely known Masons in Canada. He represented Windsor West in the legislature from 1926 to 1934 as a Conservative. He has three sons, one in the Canadian Army Medical Corps.

Nazi Evacuate Port of Valos

Rome, Oct. 25 (AP)—British patrols following the German withdrawal from Greece have entered Dhomokos, 30 miles north of Lamia, Allied headquarters announced today. The occupation of Lamia, 93 miles northwest of Athens, was announced yesterday.

Headquarters also disclosed today that the Germans have evacuated the port of Volos, about 45 miles northwest of Lamia and 37 miles from Dhomokos, after suffering severe casualties at the hands of Greek guerillas.

From Volos the retreating Germans are confronted with a 125-mile trek northward before they reach the Yugoslav frontier.

Konigsberg, Kirkenes Are Being Evacuated Say Front Reports

London, Oct. 25. (AP)—The Norwegian port and town of Kirkenes on the Arctic has been evacuated "after destruction of all military installations" at the submarine and air base, Athwart, the Murmansk convoy route, the Berlin radio said today.

The broadcast, implying a Russian invasion across the Norwegian border which they reached on a broad front Sunday, followed by a few hours an enemy announcement of a new Russian offensive along the Narew River in Poland between Warsaw and the southern boundary of East Prussia.

A dispatch from Moscow quoted Soviet correspondent on the East Prussian front as reporting the Germans were evacuating the provisional capital of Konigsberg, 18th largest German city with 368,433 population, and a major submarine training base.

"Our air reconnaissance reports the evacuation of the main city of East Prussia has been going on for several days", the Russian correspondent said, "crowds of refugees are moving towards the central region of Germany".

The Berlin communique said Russian divisions struck from their bridgeheads at Senock and Rozan behind a drumfire artillery barrage and heavy aerial attacks. The Soviet infantry and tank forces were claimed "checked in heavy fighting in the forests" and subjected to counter-attacks in which numerous Russian tanks were declared destroyed.

The Germans have insisted that grand Russian strategy is to co-ordinate a drive from the Narew to the Baltic port of Danzig, 180 miles from Senock, with the invasion of East Prussia from the north and east. Successful Russian breakthroughs from the Narew, where armies of the Czar were beaten decisively in the First Great War, would outflank the whole 14,000 square miles of East Prussia and the ravaged Polish capital of Warsaw as well. Senock is 15 miles north of Warsaw.

By EDDY GILMORE
Associated Press War Correspondent

Moscow, Oct. 25 (AP)—Both the Russian and German high commands threw fresh armor and infantry into the battle of East Prussia today. Fighting blazed along a front of more than 180 miles extending from the Baltic mouth of the Niemen River to the southwestern edge of the Suwalki triangle.

Front dispatches said two famous enemy Panzer formations—the Hermann Goering and S. S. Greater Germany, defenders of Warsaw in August—were among four tank divisions committed to battle by the Germans in costly counter-attacks against a Soviet Salient some 15 miles from Insterburg and 70 miles from Konigsberg.

The sky over Insterburg was reported black with smoke rising from fires set by repeated Soviet air raids.

Hitler's forces appeared to have steadied before the powerful Russian ofefnsive through East Prussia, but Moscow announced capture of at least 14 additional German towns and disclosed a new thrust toward the province from the southeast.

The new pressure on the home of German militarism was exerted from the region of Augustow, Polish border stronghold, which a Soviet communique claimed was captured.

The 14 East Prussian towns were taken in advances of up to 10 miles against reinforced German armies—a feat that cut away another 750-square-mile slice of German territory.

The Russians also advanced in Hungary, capturing Kiskunhalas, 70 miles south of Budapest, overwhelmed the Big Czechoslovak town of Husst (Chust) and 10 other centres in the Carpatho-Ukraine district, and with Romanian help broke into Satu-Mare, last big city held by the enemy in Transylvania.

East Prussian fighting, described as the most bitter since Stalingrad, was reported heaviest in the area around Goldap, the point of deepest Russian penetration of East Prussia, and south of Gumbinnen, strategic junction on the direct westward route through the heart of the province. Gumbinnen lies northeast of Goldap.

SAN PABLO DROME ON LEYTE ISLAND TAKEN BY YANKS

New American Gains Reported in All Sections of Philippine Front

Gen MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Oct. 25 (CP)—Crushing feeble Japanese counter-attacks American forces liberated 14 more towns and villages and advanced to the outskirts of Tabontabon, eight miles northwest of Dulag, Gen. MacArthur's headquarters announced today.

The advance on Tabontabon is probably the longest made by MacArthur's men since the invasion started. Advances were general along the entire line.

Capture of San Pablo airdrome seven miles west of Dulag was also announced after a field dispatch from Al Dopkig, Associated Press War Correspondent, yesterday reported its seizure. It was the third airfield taken on Leyte. The others are at Tacloban and Dulag.

Fan Out Toward Dagami.

After securing the San Pablo field armored units fanned out northward toward Dagami, important road junction at the western edge of Leyte valley. Other elements advanced to a point nine miles north of Catamon, enveloped Catamon hill and pushed on to the approaches of Tabontabon.

2 LITTLE GIRLS HAVE NARROW ESCAPE

Waterloo, Ont., Oct. 25—(CP)—Two girls, each two years old, narrowly escaped drowning today when they fell into a fish pond two and a half feet deep, and became tangled in lily roots. Argentina Recalls Military Attache In London, Eng.

London, Oct. 25 —(AP)— Argentina has recalled Col. Pablo Beretta, its military attache in London, after an invitation to visit the Allies' Western Front was suddenly withdrawn.

While the Argentine embassy was officially silent, it was reported authentically here that the action occurred several days ago and presumably resulted from lack of co-operation in his country's foreign policy in the war against the Axis.

Clashes of Spanish Guerillas, Franco's Forces Spread to South

London, Oct. 25 —(CP)— Clashes between Spanish Republican guerillas and forces of Gen. Franco have spread into southern Spain, besides the guerilla raids into northern Spain from France, an officer of the anti-Franco National Spanish Union in Paris declared today.

Madrid meanwhile said all but a handful of the Republicans striking into Spain's Navarra section from France had been wiped out.

The National Spanish Union was formed to unite all anti-Franco Spaniards in France, and claims affiliation with an underground Junta of Madrid. In Paris a Union official, Colonel Paz, declared clashes were occurring in Andalusia in southern Spain, as well as in Catalonia and Asturias in northern Spain and other parts of the country. Forays from the French border continue, he said, but there is little information on these struggles due to scant communications.

Colonel Paz charged 40,000 Germans from France had taken refuge in Spain, some aiding Franco's forces and others being helped by the Franco government to go to South America. He also asserted Catholics in Spain now were largely opposed to Franco because of "his dictatorial actions."

Lt.-Gen. Yuan Yague, commander of the Navarra corps area, in a Madrid dispatch, said that a handful of guerillas remained in hiding in the mountains, but denied any general uprising in the area.

An open call for a new civil war came from the underground newspaper, Conquest of Spain, organ of the Republican Junta with secret headquarters in Madrid. It urged Spanish army officers to take up arms against Gen. Franco.

British quarters were silent on reports of the unrest.

German propagandists, however, seized upon the latest reports from Spain to suggest that French troops might be withdrawn from the Western Front to man the Spanish-French frontier.

Nazis Retreat On 15-Mile Front At 'S Hertogenbosch

Netherlands Road Junction Captured by British Troops

By WILLIAM FRYE
(AP War Correspondent)

London, Oct. 25 — (AP)—British troops, turning flame-throwers against German bazooka nests, struck through the big Netherlands road junction of 'S Hertogenbosch in mop-up operations today, and the Germans fell back in retreat on a 15-mile front north and south of that key city.

'S Hertogenbosch was captured except for isolated enemy pockets, a front dispatch said, and supply roads leading north and south were snipped.

Even as the British 2nd Army pressed in the eastern end of the German box salient in southwestern Holland, the 1st Canadian Army bit deeper into the western edge, and made progress in two drives to clear the water approaches to Antwerp.

One Canadian prong hit toward Rosendaal and Bergen Op Zoom, 22 and 20 miles north of Antwerp, against strong resistance. The enemy was reported making local withdrawals south of Breda and Tilburg, middle stronghold of his line across southwestern Holland.

Another Canadian column, striking westward, advanced slightly farther into the tip of South Beveland Island. German guns there and on adjacent Walcheren Island command the Scheldt estuary lane to Antwerp.

Capture of Fort Imminent

Other Canadians advanced in the diminishing Breskens pocket on the south shore of the estuary opposite Walcheren island. Fall of Fort Frederik-Hendrik a mile west of captured Breskens port was imminent, Ross Munro, Canadian Press war correspondent, said in a front report.

The Berlin radio reported that the Canadians captured Fort Frederik-Hendrik.

South of Breskens the Canadians reached the edge of Oostburg and cut the Oostburg-Schoondijke road.

The Canadian-British offensives threatened the whole German stand south of the Maas river.

Together the British and Canadian drives threatened both ends of the rail and highway network serving the Germans in southwestern Holland and were pushing the enemy back from his long-distance blockade of Antwerp, needed by the Allies to funnel supplies to the main front facing east toward Germany.

A field dispatch declared that the capture of 'S Hertogenbosch would imperil the entire German force estimated at between 60,000 and 70,000 men in western Holland.

The Brazzaville radio described the street fighting in 'S Hertogenbosch as bitter and reported British forces had captured the northern half of the key communications hub and cathedral city. The broadcast added that Tommies were slowly closing a trap around the city.

British Rolling Through Receding Nazi Resistance

Rome, Oct. 25 —(CP)— The British 8th Army rolled through receding German resistance in the Adriatic end of the Po valley today while 5th Army troops ground out important gains in the mountainous southern approaches to the communications hub of Bologna.

At the eastern end of the Po valley virtually all German resistance now has ceased in the triangle formed by the Savio river as it runs northward from Cesena to the Adriatic.

British and Canadian troops of the 8th Army, after enlarging separate bridgeheads across the Savio on each side of Cesena, now are advancing northwestward astride the Bologna highway with tank support.

Directly on the coast 8th Army troops, in an advance of 3½ miles, reached the village of Savio near the river's mouth—only eight miles short of the big coastal city of Ravenna—without contact with the Germans.

The 5th Army took Monte Belmonte in the mist-shrouded peaks of the Appenines, after what the communique called "the most bitter fighting of the last few days."

The feature was held against counter-attacks.

A similar "important gain" by British troops of the 5th Army was the capture of Monte Spaduro near the Bologna-Rimini highwway.

Indian and Polish troops of the 8th Army also made gains in the Adriatic sector.

Today's communique did not mention Canadian units, last reported holding their Savio bridgehead in the face of repeated German counter-attacks.

Bad weather grounded both heavy and medium Allied bombers, but fighter-bombers and fighters supported ground forces in the areas of Bologna and Cesena. From 850 sorties, the M.A.A.F. lost nine aircraft.

'What Life Insurance Is and Does' Theme Of Talk to Underwriters

The regular monthly meeting of the Belleville Life Underwriters Association was held in the Y. M. C. A., recently, under the direction of the London Life Assurance Company. Mr. Arthur Burke presided as president and the guest speaker. Mr. White, Inspector for the Industrial Department for Eastern Ontario of the London Life was introduced by Mr. Frank Creeggan.

The subject was "What Life Insurance is and does". Life insurance is one of the largest, cooperative enterprises in the world today, gathering together thousands of people to do for one another and their dependents in event of short life, life beyond years of usefulness to society, and in event of disability those things they could not do as individuals. Evolution of the business was traced through four phases, namely legal phase, financial phase, actuarial phase, and the phase in which we find ourselves at the present time, the social phase.

From here, the various services that life insurance renders to the public were discussed, namely the creation of an estate for dependents, arrangement of retirement incomes, and arrangement for income in the event of disability. In explaining these services he tried to show how the Life Underwriter today is making a contribution to the social order of our day far greater to human society and social progress than any value that can be measured in dollars.

On the completion of the address Mr. White was thanked on behalf of the Association by Mr. George Reid. Mr. Leo Riggs rendered two fine musical numbers and Mrs. R. J. Heaps, a newcomer to Belleville for the London Life, also rendered two solos.

RSM. L. Fry Awarded Canadian Efficiency Medal

Veteran gunner of the Royal Regiment of Artillery, famous British arm of the military forces, and of crack Canadian field batteries, Acting Regimental Sergeant Major L. Fry, now residing at 175 Mary St., has been awarded the Canadian Efficiency Medal for long and faithful service in the Canadian army.

The presentation of the award will be made in the near future by Captain S. A. Sword, officer commanding the 34th Field Battery, R.C.A. here.

R.S.M. Fry joined the Royal Regiment of Artillery in England in 1897 as a gunner and served with the permanent forces in that country until 1912. Leaving the service he came to Canada as a civilian in 1914, and on the outbreak of war immediately joined the 2nd Heavy Battery then mobilising at Cobourg. He saw service overseas and while in France was associated with the 2nd Canadian Division Brigade Column, and the 13th Field Battery.

He returned to Canada in 1919 and on reorganization of the Canadian militia forces in 1920-1921 joined the 34th Field Battery here. He served with that unit until 1939 and discovered he "was too old" to fight in this war.

Efficiency and faithful service soon earned for him promotion and at the time of his retirement from the army had risen the "hard way" and held the rank of acting regimental sergeant-major.

He served with the local battery with such gunners as Captain S. A. Sword, Lt. Col. T. Y. Wills and the late Lt. Col. Bob Graham. He was a staunch admirer of the late Col. Graham who was, he stated "one of the finest artillery officers Canada ever produced."

Radio Quiz Show Held.

Twenty-five hundred people filled Picton armories Monday night when the Spin-to-Win radio quiz show was broadcast over an Ontario network. The Kinsmen club realized $800 from an offering and an auction sale. James P. Maher, a Picton boy, who is president of the shoe firm sponsoring the broadcast, was present and recalled boyhood days in Picton.

During the broadcast, some early history of the town and district, its production of canned goods, and other features were stressed.

As a result of correctly answering questions, local contestants won $88 in prizes. Three out of 12 failed to answer their questions correctly.

After the broadcast, an acrobatic team and a ventriloquist, from Toronto, entertained. Kinsmen president W. A. Branscombe conducted the "Russian auction," buyers paying only the amount of the bid raised above the previous bid A pig brought $83 as a result of 25 and 50 cent bids. When a $50 Victory bond was offered, $278 was paid in by bidders before it fell to Fred Stafford whose portion of bidding cost him $74. Proceeds were for the Kinsmen Milk-For-Britain fund and the show was presented here in tribute to the local club which has been outstanding in its support of the fund.

STIRLING

Letter of Condolence Received by Mother Of Soldier Son

Stirling, Oct. 25. —Following is a letter received by Mrs. M. A. Stoneburgh, whose only son, Alvin Stoneburgh, was killed in Italy, recently: Dated Sept. 28: Dear Mrs. Stoneburgh: I must apologize for not having written to you before, but the fact is we have only just been pulled out of action after a very bitter and prolonged campaign.

I simply cannot tell you how badly we all felt when Alvin was killed right at the start of the campaign. He had been with us so long and had been through such a lot, it seemed a pity to us that he could not have been spared. However, it is not for us to determine these things. It will at least be some comfort to you to know that Alvin was killed instantly and did not suffer at all.

Your boy has left a gap in this Battalion which will be very hard to fill. We all thought a great deal of him and he has left behind him a splendid record of loyal and faithful service. You must cherish his memory with great pride, as we do. I know that the whole Battalion would wish to join me in expressing to you our most heartfelt sympathy.

We buried Alvin with all possible honor and reverence. A fine white cross made by our own boys, now marks his grave. I should mention however that his present resting-place is only temporary. We don't know yet where the Canadian Cemetery in this area will be, but if you were to write to the Imperial War Graves Commission, Cdn. Agency, 314 Transportation Building, Ottawa, say in about six months time, they should be able to give you all information. Alvin's personal effects have been forwarded to you and should reach you in the near future.

May God comfort and sustain you in your bereavement and may He crown with speedy victory the cause for which your gallant son laid down his life.

With kindest regards,
Very sincerely yours,
Capt. J. F. Goforth, chaplain.

Barnes Wine Store In City Entered, Some Wine Taken

Forcing the main entrance on Front St., robbers entered the premises of the Barnes Wine Company, 189 Front St., and boldly walked out with five or six bottles of native wine in the early part of last evening.

The main door was found insecure by P. C. Wm. Evans while patrolling his beat shortly after ten o'clock. Entrance had been effected by means of exerting considerable force against the main street door of the wine store. The door jam was broken allowing the door to open and entrance gained.

Constable Evans immediately notified police headquarters following which Mr. H. P. Holway, manager of the store, reported to examine the damage. Following stock-taking today police learned some five or six quart bottles of wine were all that was missing. Despite the fact Front Street pedestrians were passing the premises with regularity in the early part of the evening no undue disturbance was heard to indicate a breakin was being effected.

Army Officer Pays Marked Tri ute To Cpl. R. Ray Killed in Norm ndy

"He was one of the most courageous, daring section leaders in the Battalion, and I was proud to have him with me. I admired his bravery and his helpful cheerful nature. When I think of the ability he showed, I realize how little his battalion and his country can afford to lose him. He had all the qualities we need".

The above is part of a tribute paid to the memory of Corporal Raymond Ray, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Ray, Springbrook, killed in action while serving with the Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry Highlanders before Boulogne on Sept. 6, by Major Jack Petersen, his company commander.

Writing to Mr. and Mrs. Ray, Major Petersen stated that the late soldier is buried in a little French village called Hourquet, with a dozen of his comrades who were killed on the same day. "Every morning, French civilians place flowers on their graves".

Fought With Courage.

"You raised a very brave son", the major wrote, "who fought with great courage and who died that others might know freedom. Doubts about the worth of all this fighting may come to idlers at home, but never to us. For we who do the fighting see the people we liberate. We grasp the outstretched hands of starving, tear-stained French people, we feed hungry children; we see the desolation the Germans left behind them. We see these things and know we are right and that though it cost each one of us his life, we must carry his work to the end. That is way we all feel. That is the wa ay felt".

Corporal Ray was kil instantly by shrapnel while on trol duty with his section near Q ey, a few kilometres southwest Boulogne, Major Petersen wrote. He had been with us for a ve long time and had taken part in the bitter fighting since D-D. He saw the break-up of the G an Army in France and took pa in that wild pursuit that follow At least had the great joy o riumphal entries into cities lik Abbeville, Rouen and Montreuil, w re thousands of crying hyster French people met us as libe ors and paid us homage. General Sales Chart Gives Clearer Picture Of Progress of Loan

With sales results for the first day of canvassing in the Seventh Victory Loan campaign tabulated by headquarters for areas in the immediate Belleville district, the Hastings County general sales chart appears in the Ontario Intelligencer for the first time today.

As will be noticed the chart gives the general sales objective for each sales area, the amount subscribed to date and the amount needed in subscriptions to reach the objective. This, it is felt, will give readers a much clearer picture as to the actual progress of that part of the campaign which the general public is most concerned—the general sales division.

Naturally enough as it appears in today's issue the chart does not list returns for all sales areas in the county as from the outlying points returns of the first day's sales had not been received and that particular column of the chart appears as a blank. Readers are advised, however, as the campaign progresses, to watch the chart for up-to-the-minute information regarding the progress of the campaign in each particular sales area.

Men's Club Hears Talk on England And Scotland

Richness of civilization in England and in Scotland with its colorful historical and literary background was the theme of an address heard by members of St. Andrew's Men's Club on Tuesday evening as during their first meeting of the season they were addressed by Rev. Dr. A. J. William Myers of Tabernacle Church.

Recounting experiences and observations of a pre-war visit in the Devon and Cornwall districts of England the speaker paid tribute to the English people in their ability to enjoy the simple things of life and to enjoy life as it comes. He stated he had been struck by the absence of high-pressure salesmanship, a direct contrast to conditions in Canada and the United States where people were prone to patronise that which received the greatest amount of publicity.

The speaker told of his visits to Chester with its Roman baths as reminders of Rome's control over the island during glory of the Roman Empire. He told of visiting beautiful ancient but well-built cathedrals and of observing old English customs which have been carried down through the centuries.

In closing Dr. Myers expressed a fervent hope that at least some of the ancient historical landmarks which are part of England would be spared as the result of devastating German bombing attacks. "One thing we do know", he said, "is that the English people with all their admirable qualities, will be the same".

President of the Men's Club, Mr. Harry Stock, presided over the meeting with Rev. J. G. Hornsby introducing the speaker and club appreciation being expressed by Dr. Oliver Marshall. As guest vocal artist for the evening, Miss Ethel Smith was heard in "Silver Wings in the Moonlight", with Bill Navan, acting as piano accompanist.

SAN PABLO DROME

Substantial gains west of Palo and Tacloban were made by units pushing ahead from a line of hills seized from the Japanese which dominate the coast between Palo and Tacloban.

Intermittent attacks by few enemy planes continued. American fighter patrols beat them off. At least five Japanese planes were shot down.

Destruction or damaging of 64 enemy planes Oct. 22 and 23 was disclosed by MacArthur. The damage was done by American planes striking Japanese airfields in the western Visayas and northern Mindanao. Six American planes were lost.

Assisted by 4,000 armed guerillas, liberating Americans advanced through the muck and rain of Leyte against outnumbered Japanese defenders.

The guerillas, led by Col. Ruperto Kangelon, a Filipino, with an unidentified former U. S. P.T. boat skipper as second-in-command, aided in preparations for landing of the U. S. forces. They collected detailed military information and transmitted it by secret means to U.S. headquarters.

In turn the guerillas were given a schedule of operations in advance of the landings to enable them to evacuate civilians from threatened areas and forewarn them when to go into action.

MacArthur reported liberation of the following communities since the invasion started:

Tacloban, San Fernando, Sagkahan, San Jose, Marasbaras, Dulga, Palo, Pawing, Guindapunan, Galampanan and Burayan. In addition the three islands of Dinagat, Sulvan and Homohnon adjacent to Leyte were liberated.

The liberated towns are mostly in the vicinity of Tacloban. Dulga, southern anchor of the Leyte front, is the only one in that sector.

Last reports from the southern column indicated the Japanese were in full retreat northwestward from the San Pablo area. To the north U.S. elements advanced three miles north of Tacloban and six miles north of Palo.

Opening Trenton R.C.A.F. Hospital Wing

NAZIS RETREAT

No Details Given.

The German radio admitted British infantry had broken into 'S Hertogenbosch but gave no details of the fighting.

'S Hertogenbosch was at the northern end of a 12-mile front along which British troops were advancing westward. The southern wing of Lt.-Gen. Dempsey's powerful assault force captured the bitterly-defended German bastion of Best.

The British units at Best and those which took Boxtel, midway on the front, were from eight to 13 miles away from the even more important enemy defence centre of Tilburg, a city of 81,000.

Tilburg, Breda and Roosendaal are on a highway and rail line linking 'S Hertogenbosch and Bergen Op Zoom. If British and Candian units drive the enemy from all five Dutch cities the next natural defensive lne for the Germans is the lower Maas (Meuse) River, approximately nine miles to the north.

In their northward drive toward Bergen Op Zoom the Canadians too kthe rail and highway causeway linking south Beveland Island n the Schelde estuary with the mainland. They also pushed down the causeway 1½ miles inside the island to within a few hundred yards of the town of Mairie.

Held by Canadians.

West of Antwerp the ferry port of Breskens, across from Vlissingen (flushing) on largely-flooded Walcheren Island at the entrance to the estuary, was held firmly by the Canadians.

In their drive across the flat canal-laced country British forces were flattening neat Dutch houses and entire villages because the Germans were using each house and barn as fort.

Standing before the ruins of their homes the Dutch cheered on the British Liberators and offered them their pitifully small treasure of food—apples and milk.

The main Allied front largely was quiet. Near the southern end of the line U. S. 7th Army troops drove the Germans out of the French towns of Mortagne and Biffontaine, in the Vosges mountain foothills southeast of Epinal, yesterday after grim house-to-house fighting.

Forces Endangered

German forces endangered in western Holland are known to include patched-up units of eight divisions, the 85th, 59th, 245th, 256th, 346th, 711th, 712th and 719th. About 11,000 of these are sealed off by land on the Schelde estuary islands through Canadian seizure of the neck of the peninsula in a fan-out north and northeast of Woensdrecht.

British forces reported the capture of 1,400 prisoners Sunday, Monday and Tuesday in the 'S Hertogenbosch sector and virtually all were from the 712th division.

On the left flank of the drive into Holland, troops of the 1st Canadian Army slugged closer to Bergen Op Zoom and Roosendaal, and a front dispatch reported the Germans moving north from Tilburg and Breda, other strategic centres in the enemy line.

The Germans have flooded the southeastern corner of 'S Hertogenbosch in an unsuccessful attempt to hamper the attacking infantry, but organized opposition inside the city has ended and the resistance of scattered parties could not delay complete occupation of the city more than a few hours.

Improve Positions

An Allied communique reported slight but steady Allied progress at the opposite end of the west front, with the forces in the Vosges mountains improving their positions, and troops northeast of Epinal making further gains, including the capture of Mortagne and Bifontaine after house-to-house fighting.

From north of Aachen to the area east of Luneville, there were no important changes in the front, said the communique. The German radio reported savage small-scale fighting near Embermen, and indications that the U. S. 3rd Army was preparing to drive northward between Dieuze and Chateau Salins east of Nancy.

Guests are seen being welcomed at the head of the gangway by ship's personnel. In the distance is seen the crack band of H.M.C.S. St. Hyacinthe, who were brought to Kingston for the ceremony. The ship was open for public inspection from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. and many people from this city viewed with more than passing pride their "naval protege." Upwards of $12,000 was raised here to supply comforts for the ship's company.—(Royal Canadian Navy Photo.)

Fate Stalks Japanese

In a very real sense retribution is coming back to Leyte Island in the Philippines for there the Americans are battling the Japanese 15th Division that did "the dirty work" at Bataan. This unit of the Japanese in the wordds of General MacArthur has "been living off the fat of the land for more than two years and I believe they'll be a little softer now. But soft or not we'll get them."

There is not the slightest doubt of the American will and power to bring the war home to the Japs on Leyte. The U. S. invasion of the Philippines is a natural consequence of the evil deeds of the enemy.

Churchill the Traveller

Prime Minister Churchill, that tower of strength in Britain's armor and one of the greatest men of this age, as he has shown himself as soldier, statesman and leader, orator, wit and humorist, writer, a man of intense energy, had added another journey to the many he has made in his life. Recently he was at Quebec and before the world knew he was in Moscow. In many climes he has travelled and met the greatest men of the age in public life. He has been privileged to be one of the gorgeous company of the Allied leaders, whose privilege and duty it has been to direct the cause of civilization in perhaps the most momentous hours of history.

These great duties of today have taken Mr. Churchill abroad many times, and these contacts with the representatives of other nations cannot but have an influence which will be of the greatest effect in molding the course of the future history of the world.

Mr. Churchill is the world's greatest traveller. Others travel but none have travelled so far and often on great missions and borne such burdens and duties as have fallen to this tireless heroic Briton who is also cosmopolitan in his range of interest and sympathy. These journeys far to the west and far to the east and into the south have so far borne fruit and will continue to bear good fruit for civilization.

In the broad mind of Prime Minister Churchill these rich experiences of life and men, this handling of gigantic problems and noble causes relating to the destiny of not one nation or empire but of the world of the free peoples and for that matter of the entire world, are transfused into national and international action in a way the world has rarely if ever before witnessed, for never have so vast problems rested upon the leaders of nations as in these years have been resting upon Mr. Churchill and his associates in the United Nations.

Mr. Churchill's stout British spirit and his intense interest in world affairs recall the lines of Tennyson:

> "Then, drink to England, every guest;
> That man's the best Cosmopolite
> Who loves his native country best."

Travel for School Children

Beardsley Ruml, economist whose plan for "paying taxes as you go" interested the continent of North American, Americans as well as Canadians, over a year ago made a suggestive remark the other day before educators at the University of the State of New York—it was on a travel program for boys and girls.

Boys and girls in their reading take great stock in travel books. Whether they travel little or not at all, the spirit of what is in travel is in them. How they love to explore, to seek out the unknown! And it is well that it is so. It is mother nature's way of building up the human race. Mankind has had a long hard climb up the paths of experience with great leaders marking the way.

Now the child may receive some help by the practical method of travelling. The plan of Mr. Ruml may be surprising to numbers through the extent of travel he suggests. Here it is, "it would be logical to provide that every boy and girl between the ages of twelve and fifteen, who could qualify in terms of a basic school preparation, would have 5,000 miles of travel in various parts of the United States.

"If we can feel at home in our nation it is not too much to believe that we can also feel at home in the whole world, though much such homefulness is experienced at the present time by very few of us."

It may be a long day before such travel is part of the education of youth but Mr. Ruml has suggested something to make the fullest use of time of life of boys and girls to absorb a sense of "homefulness" in the wide world. It should not lessen their love and devotion to their native country but rather widen their sympathies and give a foundation or basis to their views of world affairs. Such travel might well be adopted in a country like Canada where it would serve to widen the interests of the boys and girls who will be the men and women of tomorrow.

The Visit to Moscow

(Montreal Herald)

Whether the Churchill visit to Moscow may be accepted as an indication that the all-out offensive is near, we do not pretend to know. But it seems very clearly indicated that a mighty smash is in prospect, in which Allied armies will endeavor to end the European phase of the war. Allied commanders evidently have been preparing for this blow for weeks.

In an exhortation addressed to German troops defending the Siegfried Line, Field Marshal Karl von Runstedt urges his soldiers to "defend our holy German soil to the last with all your strength."

Evidently Von Runstedt, a professional soldier of long experience, has a hunch that things are about to happen. We believe he's right.

Waste of Food Sacrilege

(From "The Argonaut," San Francisco)

Food is essential to life. When it is wantonly wasted, a sacrilege is committed. Providence is profaned. Needless waste of food is one of America's grossest sins. We throw away enough food to feed the world's starving millions. Even in wartime we are guilty of this folly.

A single orange may save a life. Antoine de Saint Exupery tells about the lifesaving result of finding an orange in his wrecked plane after a forced landing on the Libyan Desert in North Africa. It did more than assuage the pangs of thirst; it gave him courage and hope to carry on until he was rescued.

Every year literally millions of oranges are wasted in California. In order to keep up prices, hundreds of truck loads of oranges have been dumped into dry washes and river beds. The juice thus lost, rich in essential vitamins, meant the difference between health and disease for countless thousands of people who were deprived of its use. Even now, when prices are high and the demand enormous, the ground under the trees in our orange groves is often littered with luscious fruit. It is a crime to pick up and eat one of those wasted oranges.

Doubtless the greatest waste is in homes and restaurants. In our cities the garbage collectors cart away almost enough wasted food to support a second population. Cleaning the platter was the rule with our frugal forefathers. It is a practice that needs to be re-established in American homes. There is an adequate food supply to satisfy the needs of everyone. We must have great salvage and more equitable distribution of life's necessities.

Patriot Returns

(News of Norway)

Thoralf Hultmann, of Kristiansand, was one of the 50 Norwegian political prisoners who were stowed aboard the German ship "Westphalen" in mid-September for transfer to a concentration camp in Germany.

While the ship was passing along the coast of southwestern Sweden there was an explosion, and the "Westphalen" went down. Of the Norwegian prisoners 45 perished, and one of them was Thoralf Hultmann.

Days afterwards a body was washed ashore near Kristiansand, 100 miles or more from the scene of sinking. Friends identified it as the body of Hultmann. Strangely, the sea had tossed it up only a short distance from a point where Hultmann had his summer cottage. At the funeral services Kristiansanders turned out en masse to pay final tribute to their townsman whom the sea had returned to them.

NOW AND SOON

'Twixt Now and Soon a chasm lies
Which youth must bridge with enterprise.

Upon the near side old men stay,
To warn the daring young away.

"Road's End!" the signs they've posted show.
'Tis dangerous further on to go.

Now marked and known is every turn.
There's nothing more to gain or learn.

But, youth, press on. Tomorrow's sun
Will shine on work that's just begun.

Leave Now behind, and dare to see
The wonders that are Soon to be.

Face forward, morning, night and noon
And bridge that gap 'twixt Now and Soon.

ESQUIRE AND SQUIRE

"Esquire," abbreviated "Esq", is sometimes used after a person's name in addressing a letter.

It takes the place of "Mr." before the name.

But the practice of using "Esquire" is dying out in the United States.

Marquis James, in his life of Andrew Jackson, wrote that Robert Crawford, "was called Esquire because of his participation in public affairs."

In "Americanisms; the English of the New World," published in 1871, Schele de Vere wrote: "Esquire, a title in England still given only to certain classes of men and long reserved in the United States also to lawyers and other privileged persons, is now with republican uniformity given alike to the highest and the lowest, who does not boast of a military or other title; the result being that it is strictly limited to the two extremes of society."

In fact the title Esquire is now applied promiscuously in the United States very much as the meaningless designation of Don is in Spain.

The title Squire, a shortened form of Esquire, is still quite commonly prefixed to the names of justices of the peace and even to lawyers in some sections of America.

An esquire was originally the attendant of an English knight, the word literally signifying a shield-bearer.

In time it became a title of courtesy that spread to the classes known as "gentry"—the younger sons of peers, landholders, lawyers and literary men.

As a form of address for letters in Great Britain, Esquire is generally employed in connection with those who are not artisans or tradesmen; it serves as a mark of respect just a little higher than plain Mr.

Many people make the error of using both Mr. and Esq. with a name at the same time; as, Mr. John Jones, Esq. The correct form is either Mr. John Jones, or John Jones, Esq.

Outrageous Ruling

(Vancouver Province)

No class of men has given more willing or more distinguished service to the Dominion or to the cause of the United Nations since the war began than the men of our merchant fleet. They have been in all the disagreeable and dangerous theatres of war. They have endured they have dared. They have triumphed often against overwhelming odds. Many of them have given their lives. Others have endured months in enemy prisons.

These merchant sailors have been gallant soldiers in the battle for supply. Yet they are not treated like the country's other soldiers, like its naval personnel or like its airmen. They are discriminated against and they resent this discrimination—rightly so, too.

When a member of one of the armed services goes outside Canada in the way of duty, he pays no income tax. The merchant seaman pays his on a basic pay, wherever he is. If a member of the armed services is taken prisoner, his pay continues and his freedom from income tax continues. If a merchant seaman is taken prisoner, his pay may or may not continue—it all depends on whether he is a regular employee of a steamship line or is signed on for a single voyage. But, if his pay continues, his income tax continues, too.

It is a fine way Canada has of welcoming home a man who has played his part at sea and spent months in a prison camp to present him, on arrival or soon after, with a demand for income tax. The procedure is one which should make the country blush.

But apparently there are no blushes left in the Department of National Revenue. According to the rules of that department, a merchant seaman is a civilian and civilians pay income tax. So merchant seamen are liable. It is as simple as that. As simple and as outrageous!

SQUAWK FROM A STOOGE

How can I crash the delivery room in the .... Hospital? On Feb. 4, 1942, I spent 12 hours in the men's labor room at .... Hospital, and then was informed by an office girl that my son had been delivered. Then after another hour I was allowed to go up to the maternity ward to see my wife and baby. Our doctor was Dr. . . . . .

I know from your newspaper column that you understand my gripe, and hope that you can inform me what to do when our next baby is born, which we expect will be about the end of next January. We were greatly disappointed when I was excluded—my wife wanted me to remain with her, to share the birth as well as the bill.

(Signed) ....

In a hospital that purports to serve the public the order or wish of the attending physician should supersede any "rule" or quaint custom the hospital may have sought to establish, excluding the father from the delivery-room, if he is man enough to remain with his wife during the delivery.

Probably a good many hospitals ing the purpose of excluding the will try to justify this trick by saying the purpose of ex excluding the expectant father is asepsis—the desire to maintain in the delivery room an environment as nearly germ-free as possible. But I tell you that's a lot of hooey—it is ironical when we consider what goes on in most hospital delivery rooms.

The place for a real man is with his wife when she is bearing his child.

A doctor who acquiesces in the trick of excluding the husband from the delivery room is more concerned about catering to the arbitrary whims of the hospital management than he is about the welfare of his patients. This is my opinion.

There is one way to break up this practice. At the time you engage the doctor's services, if your home is not a suitable place for the baby to be born, have a distinct understanding that the expectant father is to remain with his wife from beginning to end, and then, if the expectant father is not just a stooge, as the comic papers and the second rate hospitals would have him, he will carry on with dignity and decency.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Calcium and Cramps

I have received so much benefit from the suggestions in your pamphlet on Calcium Shortage. Can stretch my arms, legs and even my jaws without getting cramps. Formerly I suffered much from cramps if I stretched myself when asleep or half asleep. (Mrs. A. B. G)

Answer—Adult tetany, of which cramps in arms or legs, particularly at night, are characteristic, is more common than is generally realized. Pamphlet on "The Calcium Shortage" mailed on request if you inclose stamped self addressed envelope. Do not send a clipping. For pamphlet on Adult Tetany and Growing Pains send self-addressed stamped envelope. If you ask for both pamphlets, inclose ten cents

How to Lose Weight

Please send me your pamphlet on overweight. If the instruction therein proves as effective as the advice in your migraine pamphlet I shall be a very happy woman. (W.C.M.)

Answer—You forget—when you sent for the pamphlet "Why Have Headache?" you provided a stamped envelope bearing your address. The pamphlet "How to Lose Weight" is available to any one who asks for it (no clipping) and incloses stamped self addressed envelope. If you ask for both, inclose ten cents.

Horse Sense

Since eliminating white sugar and, as far as possible, white flour from my diet, I have improved greatly in vitality, endurance and pep I do not tire as I did formerly . . . Iowa, as you know, is a great farming state. The farmer feeds his poultry and livestock only the best foods in order to get the best prices. He turns around and puts food into his own system that is not food at all . . . and then goes to the doctor for pills, shots or whatnot, and the doctor seldom inquires about the food he eats. (S.E.R.)

Answer—You said a mouthful. I suppose Iowa farmers grow some wheat, but I betcha not one in a hundred of 'em would eat the stuff unless it has gone through some mysterious "process" to make it fit for dumb human consumption.

Says Canada's Senate Serves Useful Purpose

St. Catharines, Oct. 25 (CP)—A woeful ignorance of constitutional history and the political background of Canadian Confederation were blamed for statements that referred to the Canadian Senate as "useless and a haven for worn-out politicians," Senator J. J. Bench (L-Ontario) yesterday said in a speech before a service club (Lions) here.

Reviewing the record of the Senate in its capacity as custodian of the rights and privileges of Canadian people, Senator Bench said he was not surprised that derogatory comments were made by politicians.

Granting of territorial representation rights during Confederation was tantamount to saying that "without the Senate there could have been no Dominion of Canada as we know it today," he said.

"When these historical circumstances are reviewed...knowledgment must be made of the fact... that one of the pillars upon which our Confederation rests is the existence of the Senate. Without it there might be denied the territorial, racial and economic minorities an equal voice in the government of their affairs.

"Let those who would re-make our political, social and economic order, have regard for these fundamental truths."

LOUIS RENAULT DIES

Paris, Oct. 25 — (AP) — Louis Renault, 63, head of the Renault Motor Company who had been charged with collaborating with the Nazis, died at a hospital here yesterday. Renault was charged with being a collaborationist because his automotive plants allegedly were employed in the manufacture of equipment and material for the German army during the occupation.

Appeal To Buy Bonds Made To Kiwanis Club

An urgent appeal for the purchase of Victory Bonds in the forthcoming campaign was made at the Kiwanis Club's weekly luncheon on Tuesday at the Quinte Hotel by E. M. Pritchard of Brantford. The speaker was introduced by Jack Trudeau, general chairman of the Hastings County committee and Kiwanis appreciation was expressed by Taylor Franklin. The president was in the chair and Harold Carruthers conducted the community singing. Leo B. Riggs was bidden goodbye by the members as he leaves shortly to spend the winter in Florida Archie Harris reported that 3,500 razor blades had been donated to the boys overseas and Mark Vanner asked assistance for the Apple Day to be conducted by the Boy Scouts on Saturday. Jack Marsh announced that the party on Monday was going to be a pippin and wanted all the members present.

Mr. Pritchard stated there were four phases of the war, the first the Phony war phase ending with the escape from Dunkirk. The second was the Blitz phase where the R.A.F. and the people of Britain accumulated great respect from the rest of the world. The third phase was "the too little and too late stage," when the Allies could not muster sufficient strength at one place at the right time to knock out the enemy but that all this was changed by the entry into the war by the United States. The fourth and final stage, said the speaker, "is the invasion and victory phase and that the war is now at its critical stage." He stated that Mr. Ilsley was asking two hundred million dollars more in this loan than the last but to offset this the Finance Minister put 70 millions back in the pockets of citizens by lifting the enforced savings.

The speaker stated that the war had reached the most costly stage and the purchase of bonds will control spending and curb inflation. He stated that some had reasons for not buying bonds and the others had alibis some being that they did not like the government. "Well," said the speaker "this is not the government's war. Some say there is too much waste but that is nonsense and some don't like Canada lending a million dollars to Britain. Well this war is not over by a long way because the Allies are just coming to grips with the main German army.

More and Better Christmas Toys For Santa Claus

Ottawa, Oct. 25. (CP)—Santa Claus received a cheering message from the Prices Board today: more and better Christmas toys this year.

More of the toys in Yuletide stockings will be made of wood and plastic and fewer will be of paperboard, although paperboard has been used to a considerable extent for toys to which it is suited.

Metal toys will not be included in Santa's pack until 1945, the Prices Board said, because it likely will be several months before the toy industry can take advantage of the recent lifting of restrictions on the use of metal, and then only if manpower and materials are available.

The supply of Canadian-made dolls will be adequate to keep little girls happy while there will be plenty of toy soldiers made of plastic.

Chemistry sets will be available and also sets of dolls dishes made of plastic.

There will be some doll carriages and wagons with metal wheels.

Removal of exchange restrictions with the United States will permit importation of toys and games which have not been available in Canada for the last two or three years.

Saw Russian, Polish 'Slaves' in Berlin Making V-Sign

Brantford, Oct. 25 — (CP)—W.O. Arthur J. Cockaday, repatriated prisoner of war, who arrived at his home here yesterday, told of passing through the devastated streets of Berlin where he saw Russian and Polish slaves make the V-sign to the prisoners.

He said the streets of Berlin were filled with debris. "In suburban and surrounding districts we saw literally mile upon mile of shacks — looking like improvised chicken coops — in which, we were told, lived evacuees from the stricken city," he said.

"The Russians and Poles we saw in the city, employed in removing wreckage, were in miserable condition."

Shot down after a raid on Stuttgart in April, 1943, W.O. Cockaday was treated in St. Omer, France, then entered Germany through Aachen.

He received his promotion from sergeant while in prison camp.

Marseilles Port Again Open to R.C. Carrying Parcels

Toronto, Oct. 25 — (CP) — The port of Marseilles is again open to International Red Cross ships carrying food parcels for Canadian prisoners of war in Germany, Norman C. Urquhart, chairman of the National Executive Committee of the Canadian Red Cross, announced today. Railway service from Marseilles to Geneva has also resumed.

"To facilitate movement of food parcels from the central depot of the International Red Cross in Geneva to the prison camps, the Canadian Government has handed over to the Red Cross 50 trucks and spare parts from military stocks in Britain," Mr. Urquhart said. "This will assure an uninterrupted flow of parcels to our men in the camps."

FINDS WAY BACK BY OBSERVING FLIGHT OF GEESE

Kingston Man Had Become Lost, Hunting Deer With Bow and Arrow

North Bay, Oct. 25 (CP)—After spending almost 30 hours in a desolate sector of Blythe township, 17 1-2 miles north of here William MacDonald of Kingston, returned to camp last night. Lost while hunting deer with bow and arrows, he found his way back to the highway by noting the north-to-south annual flight of wild geese.

He was located by John Mitchell, of Toronto, Charles Kotmel, of Oshawa, Skipper Vaughan of Oshawa, and Alderman Jack Grainger of North Bay, who detected smoke from MacDonald's camp fire. Using the flight of the geese as a compass, MacDonald said he walked some distance toward the camp site, but had halted for the night when his rescuers found him.

A radio station (CKWS) employee in Kingston, MacDonald was formerly a North Bay resident and President of the North Bay Archery Club. He was in a party of seven men hunting deer, but got detached from the group Monday afternoon.

He said he discovered an old survey trail which he thought would lead him back to camp, but he continued beyond it and when he discovered he was going in the wrong direction, he could not find the trail again. He suffered no ill effects from his experience and said he would remain with his camp mates and finish the hunting excursion.

Says Bing Crosby's Crooning Saved Him From Adder

Hollywood, Oct. 25 — (AP)—An army officer in New Guinea has written to thank Bing Crosby for saving his life — with crooning.

"Several nights ago, I was sitting in my tent listening to one of your program," Lt. Col. Earle O. Thornton, related in a letter to Crosby. Thornton left the tent briefly, he continued, then—

"On returning, I raised my foot to step into my tent, but suddenly I was paralyzed. Right where I would place my foot was a four-foot death adder.

"He was in a coil and had his head slightly raised and was facing the radio, as if he were listening. There we were, the snake hypnotized and me paralyzed.

"Finally I jerked away and borrowed a machete from another tent and whacked him in two. Imagine—the whole thing lasted three or four minutes, and in all that time that snake evidently hadn't moved a muscle.

"So the next time they throw Sinatra up to you, tell them: 'Well, I even hypnotize snakes 10,000 miles away.'"

France Is Ready For Larger Part In War on Huns

Paris, Oct. 25 —(CP Reuter)—Gen. De Gaulle declared today "there is no question of an administration of Germany without the agreement of France."

Meeting the press for the first time since his arrival in Paris, the French government head added: "It would be inconceivable that the conditions of occupation should be settled without France.

"French troops will occupy the German territory that they capture but there have been no conversations on this question with the Allies," he told newspapermen.

Gen. De Gaulle complained that the French were not receiving enough arms for a large war effort.

The French leader commented that the "government, like everyone else, is satisfied that it now is called by its right name." This was his only reference to Allied recognition.

"France not only is ready but eager to take a large part in the war against Germany," Gen. De Gaulle said. "Until the time when French factories are able to supply our armies, we hope to obtain equipment from our allies. Within a few weeks, we would increase France's contributions on the front.

"Since the landings, we have not received equipment with which we could arm any large unit."

He added that Allied supply difficulties and destruction of ports might explain the lack "to some degree."

Weak Radio Signal Led to Aid of Guerillas And to Invasion

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Oct. 25. (AP) —A weak signal from a radio set on the Island of Panay heard in the late fall of 1942 set in motion machinery to aid the guerillas —aid which culminated in a full scale invasion of the Philippines, Gen. MacArthur disclosed today.

In a special communique issued from his headquarters the General said the inadequately armed patriots, some of them Americans who never surrendered, others who escaped from prison camps and men sent in to carry out specific missions, have fought the Japanese for two years.

"Following the disaster which, in the face of overwhelming superior enemy power, overtook our gallant forces, a deep and impenetrable silence engulfed the Philippines", the General said. "Through that silence, no news concerning the fate of the Filipino people reached the outside world, until broken by a weak signal from a radio set in the Island of Panay, which was picked up in the late fall of the same fateful year by a listening post of the war department and flashed to my headquarters.

Dominion Govt. Plans Training For Actors, Artists

Toronto, Oct. 25 — (CP) — The Federal Government now is making provision for professional training of actors, musicians, artists and writers, under the same arrangements as applied to other students, Ivan Mackenzie, minister of Veterans' Affairs informed the Toronto Heliconian Club today.

The club suggested provision be made "to ensure employment to ex-service citizens desiring to continue their work in those professions" and requested a commission to consider ways and means. With regard to the commission, Mr. Mackenzie said specific approval of all provincial governments would have to be obtained before the Dominion Government acts in a matter of that sort.

STARLING TRAPS PUT OUT

Guelph, Oct. 25 — (CP) — Prof. John Buchanan of Ontario Agricultural College said in an interview yesterday that large numbers of traps would do much to curb the menace of starlings, which cause an "alarming" annual loss in Ontario. He heads a committee established by the Agriculture Department to investigate the starling problem.

Moisture Ample For Fall Crops, Fall Wheat Good

Toronto, Oct. 25 — (CP)—Moisture in most sections of Ontario during September was sufficient for the growth of fall crops, the Ontario Department of Agriculture said today in its monthly crop report. Only exceptions were Essex and Kent counties. First frost damage reported in southern Ontario was Sept. 18.

New fall wheat and rye fields appeared in excellent condition, although growth in some quarters was feared too heavy. Most counties reported that the seeded acreage of fall wheat would be almost the same as last year, but acreage in North Simcoe was estimated at 50 per cent below normal. Eastern Ontario showed a slight increase in the more hardy varieties.

Except in the northern area, farmers who have completed threshing reported splendid yields of high quality grain. A scarcity of custom threshers resulted in a portion of weathered grain. At the end of the month, about 25 per cent of the coarse grains remained to be harvested in Bruce Peninsula while corn, white beans, soy beans and buckheat were the main cereal crops still to be harvested in other sections.

Extreme dry weather was blamed for disappointing crops of corn for ensilage. Leeds county reported a yield of only 75 per cent of normal and lower quality. Renfrew and Stormont 25 per cent and Glengarry about 50 per cent. While the acreage of corn for husking was increased this year, yields and quality were variable with the Kent county crop estimated at 80 per cent of normal.

Intake Into Army Up to June, 1944 Is 936,988

Ottawa, Oct. 25 —(CP)— Intake from the nine provinces into the Canadian armed forces since war started up to June 30, 1944, totalled 936,988—an increase of 23,896 over the 913,092 figure issued Aug. 21 and covering the period to March 31, it was disclosed today.

Compiled by the Wartime Information Board, figures showed that Canada on June 30 had called on 37.9 per cent of her available 2,474,000 military age males. This was an increase of one per cent over the figure given for the period to March 31.

In addition to the new intake total another 15,484 were enlisted outside Canada, bringing the grand total intake to 952,472 compared to the previous total of 938,318.

The intake figure does not take into account discharges and must not be confused with the total strength of the armed forces which is currently given as 764,000.

Prince Edward Island is making the biggest use of her available military manpower in the 18 to 45 age group with a percentage of 46.5, but since the Aug. 21 date when the figures were released for the period to March 31, an unspecified number of enlistments were transferred to this province's credit from Nova Scotia and an accurate comparative table of increases is thus impossible.

B. C. in Lead

Nova Scotia had led the provinces at the last intake survey with a percentage mark of 45.8, but the readjustment has put this province in third place with 45.4 behind British Columbia, formerly with 44.4 and now with 45.8. Behind these provinces in order and with their previous percentages in brackets come: New Brunswick 44.6 (43.6); Ontario 44.4 (43.3); Manitoba 44.4 (43.5); Alberta 41.0 (40.1); Saskatchewan 39.7 (38.9) and Quebec 22.8 (22.1).

Putting it in figures Prince Edward Island, at the top, had enlisted 8,832 of its 19,000 military-age population, while Quebec, at the bottom, had enlisted 159,168 of its 699,000 military-age population.

A study of the army figures showed that in the two biggest provinces, Ontario, with a military age population of 830,000 had 216,040 volunteers while Quebec, with 699,000 eligible males, had 83,858.

Quebec took in 49,039 draftees compared to Ontario's 42,679.

The compilation also showed that in the period since Sept. 30, 1943 when a previous survey was dated the percentage of Canadian manhood of military age drawn into but not necessarily remaining in the forces moved up from 35.1 to the June 30 percentage of 37.9. The new all-Canada total of 936,988 compared with the Sept. 30, 1943, total of 867,590.

WANT FIVE-DAY WEEK

Toronto, Oct. 25 — (CP) — Postal employees across Canada will at once begin a campaign for a five-day week and salaries commensurate with those paid in the United States, Fred Whitehouse of Ottawa, secretary-treasurer of the Association of Canadian postal employees, last night told a convention banquet attended by more than 200 delegates. He said the association will continue to press for a flat increase of $300 per year to postal employees until it is granted.

Rumors of Lifting Or Raising Ration Of Gas 'Foolish'

Toronto, Oct. 25 — (CP) — Oil Controller G. R. Cottrelle said in a statement today that persistent rumors that gasoline rationing was to be lifted or that the coupon value was to be raised from three to five gallons were "foolish and . . started by irresponsible persons."

"There can be no thought of relaxing gasoline rationing until victory is won," said the statement. "There is much bitter fighting facing us and all motorists should remember that it still takes 2,000 gallons of gasoline to move an armored division one mile and over 1,500,000 gallons to carry 1,000 bombers to Berlin. With 3,000 to 5,000 bombers in the air over Europe nearly every day, the motorist should well appreciate what this means to the Allied petroleum supply. Coupled with this is the fact that our armed forces are daily extending their supply lines.

"Rationing will be lifted or relaxed as soon as possible, but any thought that it will be relaxed before the cessation of hostilities is absurd. In fact plans for the rationing of gasoline for the next year are well under way and a new coupon has been developed using a design and type of paper that it is hoped will be impossible to counterfeit."

Hamburg and Hamm Areas Hammered By 1,700 U.S. Planes

London, Oct. 25 —(AP)— Upwards of 1,700 American planes, 1,200 of them heavy bombers, attacked objectives in the Hamburg and Hamm sectors of Germany today.

Germany's largest freight yards were attacked at Hamm, in the Ruhr and Rhineland area 90 miles northeast of Aachen.

Several oil refineries were bombed at Hamburg.

The bombers had been idle for two days because of weather.

The 500 convoying Thunderbolts and Mustangs saw no German interceptors.

WEDDINGS

DAVIDSON—PAYNE

A lovely Fall wedding was solemnized at the manse, in Warsaw, on Saturday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock, when Dora Irene Payne, third daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Payne, was united in marriage to David Davidson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Davidson, of Millbridge, Ont. The bride chose lovely white satin for her floor length gown, made on princess lines, with V-neck, long sleeves and lace trimmings.

The groom's sister, Mrs. Rosetta Storey, of Belleville, was matron-of-honor, wearing a floor-length dress of heavenly blue sheer, with shirred waist-line long sleeves and full skirt. She also wore a corsage of red roses, and a gold necklace, the gift from the groom.

Mr. Irwin Payne, brother of the bride, was best man, and to him the groom gave a leather bill-fold.

Following the supper in Peterborough, the happy couple left for a short honeymoon in the east, and for this the bride chose a green wool suit, blue top coat and hat and accessories to match.

On their return they will make their home at 219 Lake Street in Peterborough.

She carried a white Prayer Book adorned with pink rosebuds. The bride's attendant, Mrs. A. E. Mason, wore a heavenly blue crepe dress, with matching headdress, and carried a nosegay of pink roses. Mr. Earle Millie, of Guelph, was groomsman, and the ushers were Mr. William Thompson and Mr. Chester Ferris. Mr. Allan Ferris sang "O Perfect Love".

The reception for sixty guests was held in St. Thomas' parish hall, the bride's mother receiving in robin's-egg blue, with a corsage of pink roses, assisted by the mother of the groom, who wore navy blue, with a corsage bouquet of red roses.

The couple left for a short trip, the bride wearing a brown dressmaker suit. They will reside at Grace Church rectory, Arthur, Ont.

Women's Activities

YOUNG WOMEN'S GUILD TABERNACLE CHURCH

A meeting of the Young Women's Guild of Tabernacle Church was held Monday evening, October 23rd, at Mrs. A. D. Archibald's home, 180 Dufferin Ave. A short business meeting was conducted by Miss M. Lashbrook during which plans were made to have an auction sale of miscellaneous articles at the November meeting.

Miss Rachel Fox led in a worship period following the thought of the sacredness of human life and the challenge to Christian people to share with all the abundance of the world. Miss Fox recalled the poem Abou Ben Adam and closed with a prayer for guidance and strength.

Miss Tickell was in charge of the program based on the book "Towards an Abiding Peace" by Robert M. MacIver, Professor of Political Philosophy and Sociology at Columbia University, one time professor at University of Toronto. Book shows that to hope for an abiding peace is not an idle dream but an obtainable goal. The peace made this time can be a dynamic peace but all must be willing to pay the price. Professor MacIver says the price is not a material one but a psychological one, "we need give up nothing but illusions, some prejudices, some outworn traditions including some notions about the treatment of defeated enemies.

"We in the North American continent are in the peculiar position of being able to show the world how all races can live together peacefully. The future hangs upon what we think and do. Shall we have the courage to face it? The book tells us what Dr. MacIver thinks we should do and inspires the enthusiasm to do it".

Miss Tickell was ably assisted by papers on various chapters given by Mrs. H. Mills, Miss Jane Smyth and Mrs. Robt. Thompson. Discussion was very lively and continued over the social hour when refreshments were served.

EVENING AUXILIARY TABERNACLE CHURCH

The Evening Auxiliary of the Tabernacle United Church met at the home of Mrs. Wm. Dougherty, Geddes Street, on Friday evening last with a good attendance, including several guests. Miss Delia Johnston, president, presided.

Mrs. Lockyer was in charge of the devotional period—the theme being—"The Law of the Kingdom: Love Thy Neighbor". She was assisted by Delia Johnston, Ethel Horton, Margaret Mason, Mrs. R. Johnston, Jessie Smith, and Mrs. McMillan.

Mrs. M. Austin had the Watch Tower reading which concerned a Chinese girl at present in a sanitarium in Canada and her unselfish thoughts of others.

The Study Book "West of the Date Line" was introduced by Edith Stanton who gave an interesting talk pointing out on a map the geographic layout of the South Pacific Islands which were explored by heroic missionaries years ago and where today Allied soldiers are fighting. She was assisted by Lou Dougherty, Rachel Fox and Clara Matthews.

The meeting was closed with a prayer by the president. A social time was then spent, a contest being enjoyed and the dainty lunch served by the hostess.

Mission in Madoc Anglican Church

Madoc. — "You cannot be good without the help of God". "Jesus Christ is your Saviour". "If we can turn but a little to Him, He makes it enough and makes us new creatures". Such were statements made by the Reverend Northcote Burke, of St. John's Church, Ottawa, before large congregations in St. John's Church, Madoc, at the mission held there during October 8th to the 15th. In the course of the week beginning at 7.30 p.m. October 8th, Mr. Burke presented a connected picture of the essentials of Christianity beginning with the compassion of God as revealed in the Incarnation and following through to the Ascension and Day of Pentecosts, showing all the while the ways by which Christ works today through His Church in saving men and women from destruction. Attendances were large at the Holy Communion services each morning. Some of these services were annotated by the Missioner. Since the mission a week day altar has been provided for the congregation by the institution of a weekly Holy Communion on Thursday mornings.

The children attended the mission daily at 4.30 and Saturday at 10.30. Their instruction centred in the theme, "Five finger exercises for playing a harp in Heaven".

Mr. Burke is to return to the parish next April when a mission will be held in St. James' Church, Tweed.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Tea for a Mutual Friend

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

A friend of mine and I would like to give a tea for a mutual friend of ours when she returns to the city soon, after several months' absence. We are uncertain how this party should be conducted.

1. Since this would be a very informal get-together, would it be permissible for us to do the inviting by telephone?

2. As two of us are giving the tea, should we pour? If so, how would we indicate to arriving guests that this guest is our guest of honor? I know that if this were a dinner party, her place at table would indicate our intended deference, but I don't know how to do this at a tea-party.

M. E. A.

1. Yes, it would be proper to telephone your invitations. However (as a suggestion to your second question), if you write notes or write your invitations on your visiting-cards or Informals, you can, by the wording of your invitations, tell your guests that the tea-party is "in honor of Mrs. . . . . ."

2. Definitely you and your friend who is to be co-hostess should not be seated at the tea-table. Instead ask two of your mutual friends to preside over the tea-table, or only one if you are serving only tea. (Two, if one is to serve tea, and one opposite her, to serve coffee as an alternative.) Then you and your friend will be free to receive your guests and introduce them to your guest of honor. You and your friend and the guest of honor might even stand together (not in a "formal" receiving-line, but in a group, for convenience for the introductions). Then, as you introduce Mrs. . . . . ., you might say, "And I want to have you know Mrs. Robinson, who is our guest of honor." Or to a friend who knows Mrs. Robinson, say " . . . . . and here is Amy, our guest of honor."

The Bridesmaid's Duties

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. My girl friend has asked me to be her bridesmaid at her informal wedding in the parsonage. The only ones present will be the bride and groom, the best man and I, and the groom's son and his girl friend. The bride will wear a suit, and the other girl and I are planning to wear suits also. Is this correct?

2. Do I wear a corsage? If so, do I buy it for myself? What corsage do you suggest I wear with a powder-blue suit, rose blouse and gloves, brown hat and brown shoes?

3. Have I any special duties?

H. P.

1. Yes, it would be appropriate for you and the other girl to wear suits.

2. At this informal kind of wedding, usually the bride and her attendant wear corsages. Your corsage really should be provided for you, either by the bride, or by the bridegroom if he wishes to send you a corsage as he sends one to his bride. A corsage to harmonize with the colors you are planning to wear might be made of Talisman rosebuds, or of Sweetheart roses.

3. You will probably be asked to sign as one of the witnesses. And, if it is a double-ring ceremony, you will have the bridegroom's ring in your care, to hand to the bride when the best man hands the bride's ring to the bridegroom.

NEW HELLCAT SPEEDY

Washington, Oct. 25 (AP)—The navy has thrown a new hellcat into the Pacific which is bringing down Japanese planes on a 3 to 1 ration, a major contribution to the sweeping advances of the past six months.

The new ship, called the F6F-3, supersedes the earlier Hellcat which itself was superior in speed, armor, armament and fire power over Japanese fighters. The speed which already was better than 400 miles an hour has been stepped up.

The new ship mounts six .50 calibre machine guns, also can carry rockets and bombs.

MAKES NON-STOP FLIGHT

Montreal, Oct. 25—(CP)—A Canadian-built Mosquito fighter-bomber today made the first non-stop Atlantic crossing of a Mosquito aircraft from Gander, Nfld., to the United Kingdom.

Mosquito KB492, just off the production line in Canada, flew from Gander to Prestwick, Scotland —2,200 statute miles—in six hours, 44 minutes to establish a "Trans-Atlantic Mosquito record with an average ground speed of 322 miles an hour.

The aircraft had left Montreal less than four hours before its take-off from Newfoundland. It was piloted by 38-year-old Capt. Ernest Gill of Caterhan, Eng.

His radio navigator on the trip was W. E. Francis of Windsor, Ont.

CIVILIANS SHOT

Stockholm, Oct. 25 —(CP-Reuter) — A 15-year-old boy was among five civilians shot by the Germans in the Finnish village of Retorgneo as a reprisal for sabotage, according to a Helsinki report in the newspaper Aftonbladet.

The Marry Go Round

The Business Wife.— And Her Money

"Why is some man always advising me how to invest, save or spend my own money—especially my husband? He is one of those men who think they could have told Hetty Green how to handle her millions," writes a disgruntled young business-wife. "If I have the intelligence to earn a big salary, why haven't I the brains to handle it?"

I don't know, sister; but no matter how much money a woman may be able to make, there are mighty few men who can be convinced that she knows how "to manage it" or spend it or take care of it. And I'm speaking of the kind of men who have her interest at heart, not the kind who have an eye on her bank account.

There is something on their side. Women have had, so far, a great many years more experience in earning money, than they have had in investing it or manipulating it, even though some of them are wizards at buying and selling.

Still, every business woman, single or married, has the right to handle her own money and to decide whether to spend it on a fur coat, buy an annuity, or put it in the bank. How else will she ever learn anything about handling money?

If you have followed this column, you know how strong I am for the fifty-fifty partnership marriage, in which two people pool their interests and share both their work and their pleasures. But the average husband would rather play "Santa Claus" and "give" his wife things that he can't afford, than to share his financial secrets with her. In the masculine tradition, most women are still "helpless" little things, as far as finance is concerned. There, there, now!

A man may look upon his wife as a pet, a luxury, a liability or a cherished possession; but it's pretty hard to get him to look upon her as a partner. He will tell her all about his past, his religion, his sufferings, his digestion and even his sins—but he will seldom tell her anything about his business worries or his money. "She is a woman—how could she understand?"

Naturally, I have known lots of women who have thrown their money away and even more who have been mulcted or done out of it. A fool and her money are soon courted. And parted. I have known a dozen or more professional women, mostly actresses, who have made big money in their day and came upon hard times in the end. But I have also heard of just as many men who "once had it"—but lost it all.

Financial genius is not a matter of sex, and financial wisdom is a matter of experience. To ask if a business woman should be allowed to handle her own money, whether she's married or unmarried, is as foolish as asking if she should be permitted to choose her own hats or use her own toothbrush.

Monty Says Battle Of El Alamein War Turning Point

New York, Oct. 24 —(AP)— Field Marshal Montgomery last night observed the second anniversary of the battle of El Alamein in a message to the troops of the original British 8th Army, now scattered all over the world. Marshal Montgomery spoke from his headquarters in Western Europe over the American Broadcasting Station (Absie) and the talk was recorded by the Blue Network.

"This day is one that will never be forgotten by those who fought at El Alamein," he said. "That victory was the turning point of the war and since then the armies of Britain, the United States and Russia have turned the enemy back on every front. The end cannot be very far distant. Good luck to you all, and God bless you."

Egyptian Envoy Weds Teacher

London, Oct. 24 — (CP-Reuter)— Dr. Haasan Nachat Pasha, 55-year-old Egyptian Ambassador to Great Britain, was married today to a 23-year-old nursery school mistress, Patricia Mary Pansy Priest, of Sparkling Brook, Luppitt, Devonshire.

In one of the most picturesque and unusual ceremonies ever seen in London, witnessed by many members of the London Diplomatic Corps, Sheikh Hafez Wahba, Saudi Arabian minister here, conducted the Moslem ceremony of marriage in an English translation. The ceremony began with the intonation of verses from the Koran but the bride and groom said "I will" in English.

Dr. Nachat Pasha automatically has to resign his post as Ambassador as under Egyptian law no diplomat is allowed to marry a foreign bride.

His wife has adopted the Moslem religion.

Children's Day Services Held At St. Paul's

Marmora.—All available seats were taken at St. Paul's on Sunday morning when the annual Children's Day Services were held, the date having been deferred owing to local circumstances. A corporate communion for confirmed scholars of the Sunday School and other communicants who desired to participate, was held at 10 a.m., with thirty-five receiving the Sacrament. At 11 a.m., Morning Prayer was held with Rev. J. M. Brownlie officiating. A full choir led in the singing of appropriate hymns and the scholars who occupied the front seats rendered the hymn "I cannot tell why He whom angels worship". The rector gave a special address to the children on "The Lord is My Shepherd", and addressed the congregation proper on the text "I am come that they might have life". He mentioned that while much was said of the need of religious education the church needed essentially church folk, who were aware that the task of the church was to teach the gospel of a Living Saviour. The collection which included a special collection amounting to over eight dollars for the work of the G.B.R.E. was taken up by two senior scholars, James Cochlin and Ronald Smith.

Flowers on the altar were in loving memory of the late Mrs. Nathan Mumby.

LONDON LETTER . .

By JOHN DAUPHINEE
(CP Staff Writer)

London, Oct. 25 — (CP)—At first glance this is a country of strange contrasts — a country of war and peace, old and new, light and darkness.

I have just arrived from Canada, 13 1/2 hours non-stop from Montreal in one of the four-motored bombers which have made Atlantic crossings by air commonplace. Naval craft were steaming offshore as we swung in toward the vast military air base at Prestwick, Scotland. Aircraft were everywhere.

But sheep and cattle grazed in a bright green pasture beside ancient farm buildings as we glided down to land.

The route we flew from the north to London was mostly over farming districts. Neat straw stacks indicated a bountiful harvest. The land seemed better-kept than that in Canada, the small fields marked out in their irregular shapes by hedges and the buildings mostly bright as though fresh-painted.

One minute we saw an old stone barn and farmhouse; the next we were over a huge army base. We dropped low under a cloud and down on the wide highway turned into military transport.

The United Kingdom is full of contrasts like that.

The streets of London are full of buses, taxis and military vehicles but the private automobile is seldom seen. Casualties from the forces are more numerous than in Canada, men with a missing arm or leg or eye. Bomb-wrecked buildings are being torn down or repaired here and there, and boards cover the shattered windows in some store fronts. The old scars of the 1940-41 bombings are everywhere, along with the new from the buzz-bombs.

The selections on restaurant menus are narrower and meals cost more. Rationing is more stringent and the range of rationed goods much wider. One small tin of third-grade Canadian salmon takes almost all your ration points for a month. On the other hand, while the pub-keepers complain of a shortage of beer and liquor they have enough beer to stay open longer hours than the beverage rooms in Canada; and the movies are the same ones running in Canadian theatres.

The lights were to go on again in England Sept. 17 and they did go on in most places, but finding your way around London at night is still a problem. A glow through thin curtains is permitted now but there can be no direct shaft of light. Shop windows are dark; street lamps are thoroughly shaded; the taxis run about with only a slit in the glass on their headlights.

Fatal Fall From Rear of R. R. Car

Cornwall, Oct. 24 —(CP)— A man believed to be William Chamberlain of Ottawa, was killed early today when he fell from the rear of a Canadian National Railways passenger train.

The body was discovered on the tracks by railway workmen. Identification was made through a ration book found in the man's clothing.

ST. MICHAEL'S AND PICTON H.S. WIN RUGBY GAMES

St. Mikes Win From Trenton 34-0 and Picton Beats Albert 18-12

St. Michael's Academy and Picton Collegiate won their respective Interscholastic six-man football games in the Bay of Quinte COSSA group Tuesday when the "Irish" walked into Trenton and won by the one-sided score of 34 to 0 in the senior series while Picton took Albert College into camp in the junior group by an 18 to 12 count.

In the senior game Bob Wilson put the "Irish" well into the front, when he raced around left end for an early try, which Fitzpatrick converted. Bob Lacy ran far into the Trenton zone to tackle hard and picked up a loose ball for a second St. Mikes major score. An exchange of punts put Jerry Moher into position to race 30 yards for another Irish try that was converted, Fitzpatrick to George Wilson.

In the second half Gordie Donovan took a long outside hurl from Fitzpatrick to race home for the St. Mikes' fourth touchdown. Duplicating his initial play in the first period Bob Wilson galloped twenty-seven yards for another Irish touchdown, bringing the score to 27-0.

Fitzpatrick's attempted field goal netted the winners a single point and a few minutes later the same player tossed to Doug Green for a 33-0 score. It was converted, Fitzpatrick to Green.

Albert College junior footballers took the short end of an 18-12 score in their first seasonal tussle with the Picton youngsters on the latter's gridiron. A muddy field and wet weather handicapped the squads, but the game was productive of some good football. Holt, flashy Picton halfback plunged over for the homester's first score near the end of the second half. It was converted.

Kleinsteuber intercepted an Albert lateral in the third quarter and galloped across the line for the second score. Ten seconds of the last quarter saw Haggis work a "sleeper" which caught the homesters off guard and raced over for Albert's first score. The collegians failed to convert. A few minutes later, Hepburn galloped around the Albert end for an unconverted touch bringing the count to 17-5. Albert's hopes soared in the last quarter when Merkley heaved a long forward to Kikes for a major score which Albert converted. Both squads kicked for rouges later to bring the final count to 18-12.

"I fear no man," exclaimed Ivan Rasputin when he was told that tonight's Hume Arena wrestling show took on a purely international atmosphere. Rasputin, the bearded Russian badman and exponent of the famed bear-hug hold, meets John Katan, the Palermo Panther. "I'll choke that Russian until his beard falls off," threatened Katan, who claims to have the most powerful fingers in the world. Just what will happen after Babe Zaharias tangles with Pierre DéGlane in the semi-final cannot be predicted, but it's an assured fact two of the most powerful wrestlers in the world, Katan and Rasputin, square off here tonight.

TEETER KENNEDY SCORES 3 GOALS

St. Catharines, Ont., Oct. 25 — (CP)— Red (Teeter) Kennedy, with three goals, led the Blues of the Toronto Maple Leafs hockey colony to an 11-5 victory over the Whites in the second of three pre-season exhibitions last night. The team played their first exhibition game at Owen Sound, site of this year's training camp, the previous night.

Bill Ezinicki of Winnipeg, who counted three times in the first game, helped the Blues with one goal and three assists last night. Other scorers for the Blues were Elwin Morris, Bob Davidson, Nick Metz, who scored two goals and assisted in a pair, Tommy O'Neil, Jimmy Thomson and Weller.

Sweeney Schriner, Mel Hill, Lorne Carr, Reg Hamilton and Bill Chin, one of the three Chinese players, counted for the Whites.

Frank McCool gave a solid performance in the nets for the Blues with Leo Sargent of St. Catharines minding the other nets.

"BABE" PRATT WOULD LIKE JOB OF HOCKEY COACH

Big Defenceman of Maple Leafs Says He Loves the Game

By FRASER MACDOUGALL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

Toronto, Oct. 25 (CP)—Ten years of National Hockey League competition haven't dulled the hockey appetite of towering Walter (Babe) Pratt, defenceman for Toronto Maple Leafs. On the contrary, the 28-year-old native of Stony Mountain, Man., would like to make hockey his life work.

"I just love the game," said Pratt who won the Hart trophy last season, first member of a Toronto team ever to do so, and set a new scoring record for defencemen with 17 goals and 40 assists for 57 points. "I'd like to stay with it after my playing days are over. I'd like to coach a club if someone would trust me with one."

But the six-foot-two, 220-pound veteran doesn't expect his playing days to be over for a few years yet. "Bill Cook used to say that a hockey player wasn't at his best until he was 30 or 32, so I guess I've got a few years to go yet."

Pratt began his hockey career in Manitoba where he played with several junior teams around Winnipeg. Later he moved to Kenora, Ont., where he played with the Kenora Thistles in 1935-36. The next season he turned professional and played with Philadelphia Ramblers in the old Canadian-American League for two months before he caught Lester Patrick's eye.

In January, 1936, he was summoned to Rangers with whom he remained until December, 1942, when he came to Leafs.

Never at a loss for words, Pratt spoke at length of the changes in the style of hockey since he first broke into the N.H.L. nearly 10 years ago. Present-day play made greater physical demands on players and during the war especially a new type of athlete was coming into the game with more youngsters of 18 and 19 moving right up from junior ranks and making good.

A railway switchman, Pratt's home now is in Toronto. Married, he has two children, a boy and a girl, and he "might try" to make a hockey player of the boy.

Football, rugby and field hockey are being played each Sunday in the liberated Netherlands city of Eindhoven between Dutch and Allied military teams. Receipts go to bombing victims.

The unbeaten Philadelphia Eagles of the National Football League are getting their inspiration the way professional athletes like it — in crisp, new $5 bills. The bonus system works like this: for each tackle inside the rival 20-yard line, $10; each pass interception, $5; each pass interception from which the Eagles score without surrendering the ball, $10; each blocked kick, $5; each runback of a punt or kickoff for a touchdown, $5 to every Philadelphia player on the field.

Lorne (Baldy) Northcott, former star forward of Montreal Maroons and Chicago Black Hawks in the National Hockey League, has been appointed coach of Navy in the Winnipeg Inter-Services Hockey League. Northcott coached Winnipeg Rangers when they won the Memorial Cup in 1941.

A newspaper reporter was invited to take his first airplane trip with a stunt flyer for the films. He was filled with dismal forebodings, which increased when a parachute was strapped on to him and he was given careful instructions regarding its use. The stunt man also wore a parachute, and when he put a heavy leather coat on over it the reporter asked, nervously: "How can you use the parachute with that coat on?"

"Oh," replied the pilot, nonchalantly. "I'd have plenty of time to take the coat off when we fell."

They went up and flew for several minutes, until, feeling warm, the stunt man began to remove his coat.

"Hot, isn't it?" he said, genially, but there was no reply. The reporter had jumped overboard.

Puck Pickings.

With the National Hockey League scheduled to open Saturday night when the Boston Bruins, minus Busher Jackson, invade the Montreal Forum to battle the champion Les Canadiens and the New York Rangers meeting Toronto at the Maple Leaf Gardens, we thought it was time to whip up a little local hockey chatter . . . Last week the 10th annual Ontario Minor Hockey Association meeting was held in Toronto . . . The O. M. H. A., which is producing material for the pros. faster than the O. H. A., had 122 clubs affiliated last season . . .. Kingston is the only entry from Eastern Ontario as yet . . . And Belleville wasn't even mentioned . . . However, Tweed, Stirling and Trenton are contemplating a junior O. H. A. group, so maybe Wally Berry's locals will have all the hockey they can handle in this loop . . . At least they experienced more than enough trouble in the same group last puck campaign . . . There'll be more on junior hockey later . . . F/O. Jimmie McCaa, chief sports officer at the Mountain View R. C. A. F. base, was a visitor at the Hume Arena the other night and Jimmie is anxious to continue the Quinte Service League in 1944-'45 with additions from Kingston if possible . . . The No. 1 Command champion "Bombers" are very much intact from last season, while Trenton Main Station still boasts of such named pucksters as Paul Raymond, Mike Dzuria, George Tessier, Voss and others . . . McCaa is contemplating on No. 6 Repair Depot for a stronger entry this campaign and is looking to the Kingston Air Force for a strong fourth entry . . . "The Quinte Service hockey loop has provided the puck fans of Belleville and district with as good a brand of the winter pastime as could be found anywhere in Canada. There is no reason why we can't continue to give the fans what they desire in the way of Hockey," predicted F/O. McCaa after talking matters over with Arena Manager Walt Gerow.

Local Football.

St. Mike's "Greepahiria" again demonstrated their undisputed power on Tuesday afternoon when they walked into Bill Bain's bailiwick on Trenton and rang up a lop-sided score of 34-0 against the local students. It was St. Mike's all the way. Incidentally, Albert's youngsters pried the lid off their football pot in Picton, but the Prince Edward students were too good for the collegians. In both cases, the weather was "against" any sort of gridiron brilliancy, but the four squads showed the faithful few who turned out, their ability to take anything the weather bloke had to offer.

Russian Aristocracy.

Whether Ivan Rasputin, the mad Russian of the wrestling ring and exponent of the famed Cossack bear-hug, is any relation to the Rasputins of the Czarist regime we are unable to say at this time. However, Rasputin makes no bones about the fact that he was born in Russia in 1912, but doesn't know much about the last Great War. It was during the Communistic uprising of 1917-'19 that Rasputin's family fled their native land to settle in the New England States, which of course prompts us to suggest the "mad Russian" may be of Russian aristocratic parentage.

However, tonight Rasputin isn't concerned about his antecedents, but rather in beating John Katan, the Palermo Panther, at the Hume Arena. Seems this is the first meeting between these two powerful grapplers and both have read and heard much of the other's ring prowess. Should be fun.

Remember When.

Joe DiMaggio, whose bat earned him the American League batting championship and helped the New York Yankees to a fourth straight world series title, was voted the most valuable player in his league five years ago today. DiMaggio is now in the United States Army with the rank of a sergeant and rumors have him back on American soil once again. It has been whispered DiMaggio may be discharged from the army through medical ailments, which would be welcomed news to Manager Joe McCarthy.

Hawks Powerful Defensively But Scoring Punch Is Lacking

This is another of a Canadian Press series on the pre-season prospects of the N.H.L. clubs. Today's story covers Chicago Black Hawks. Next: Montreal Canadiens.

Hibbing, Minn., Oct. 25—(CP)—The 1944 edition of Chicago Black Hawks is a combination of something old with something new.

Defensively, Hawks are powerful and experienced from cagey Mike Karakas in goal to the blueline force of Earl Seibert, Joe Cooper, Bill (Red) Mitchell and Virgil Johnson, veterans of last year's club. Joe Bretto, 226-pound Hibbing product, is the only newcomer on defence.

But the scoring punch of the new, inexperienced forward lines, made necessary by loss of George Allen, Doug Bentley and Cully Dahlstrom from last year's squad, is so steeped in mystery that even manager Paul Thompson hesitated to guess at it.

"You can't lose stars like Allen, Bentley and Dahlstrom without suffering a dent in your scoring strength. Whether we will have a fair measure of success in our efforts to form lines with scoring punch, only time will tell," he said.

The most important question is the possible performance of left wingers Pete Horeck, Russell Brayshaw and Joe Paike, all newcomers to the team.

Horeck, obtained from Cleveland Barons, was a high scorer in the American Hockey League a year ago. Brayshaw is an amateur from Vancouver and Paike, from Eveleth, Minn., played last season with Kansas City.

Thompson has three veteran centres: Bill Thoms, apparently recovered from the illness that forced him to the sidelines last winter. Veteran Johnny Gottselig and Clint Smith, obtained from New York Rangers last season.

Another Vancouver amateur, Harvey Fraser, is slated for a right wing berth as are Johnny Harms of Saskatoon and Mush March, both veterans of the 1943 club. Fido Purpur, scrappy little forward, has also been practicing with the team.

Thompson said the club has had the best training session in six years and the players will be in top shape to meet Toronto Maple Leafs in the National Hockey League opener at Chicago, Oct. 29.

He's not optimistic about winning the Stanley Cup — like most other N.H.L. managers he conceded that to Montreal Canadiens on paper—but he feels his team will "put up a good scrap."

N.H.L. Training Camp Notes

By The Canadian Press

Manager Jack Adams of Detroit Red Wings is telling the story of the "Missing Hockey Player." It seems arrangements were made to acquire Gerard Couture of Saskatoon. The 18-year-old winger reported at the Windsor, Ont., Training Camp but left 10 days ago after telling Adams his mother was ill. Since then he hasn't been heard from.

Boston Bruins wind up their pre-season training camp at Quebec tonight in a game against H. M. C. S. Montcalm, the Quebec division of the Royal Canadian Navy. The Bruins defeated the Sailors 10-7 Sunday night in the first of the scheduled two games.

It looks like the Syd Howe hoodoo has been chased — or at least Jack Adams hopes so. Syd, veteran of 14 years professional hockey, has played in the moneyed game for five cities, four of which were bereft of their teams shortly after he linked up with them. He entered professional hockey with Ottawa Senators in 1929-30. They folded up in the 1934-35 season. He also played with St. Louis Eagles, whose life was short; Philadelphia Quakers, another club that distinguished itself by its failure, and Syracuse Stars of the old Canadian-American League. He joined Red Wings in 1932 — and both the club and Mr. Howe have prospered ever since.

The Bruins will head for Montreal tomorrow where they will go through a few light drills before meeting Canadiens in the season opener on Saturday.

Little Grant Warwick, making a comeback with New York Rangers after fracturing his skull in a game at Detroit a year ago, showed plenty of spunk in an exhibition with a Winnipeg R. C. A. F. team last night.

Toronto, Oct. 25 — (CP) — They aren't worrying around Oshawa about the breakup of last year's Memorial Cup-winning Generals, in fact the tone of reports from the cradle of champs is quite optimistic. They have a nucleus of three stalwarts of last year's team, while new blood has been imported from many points of the compass.

Carry-overs from last season are Jack Taggart, rejected by the armed services, Al Chewchuk as his defence-mate, and Freddie Petsura on the forward line. Imports include Jack Gibson of Winnipeg St. James Canadians, last year's western junior runners-up, Tommy Love, Barry Sullivan of Stratford, Ron Matthews of Winnipeg and Toronto Marlboros, and a flock of others.

"Oh, yes," says George Campbell of the Oshawa Times-Gazette, "the Generals will be in the junior 'A' playoffs again this year."

George Sheppard, manager of boxer Joey Peralta, reportedly was quite provocked over a remark of Hugh Fullerton, Associated Press sport columnist, who suggested that the Professional Boxing Managers' Association was affiliated with the I.O.U. In reply, Sheppard was quoted by Elmer (Montreal Herald) Ferguson as stating: "We are an independent organization, not affiliated with any rackets, except our own. We know nothing of the I.O.U. because the managers today have become so tough that no one will lend another anything, not even a fighter."

"The Managers' Association is a fine thing, especially for the managers who need protection, particularly from each other," he added. Sort of a society for the prevention of cruelty to fight managers.

Odds and Ends

Looking for a rich post-war future, horsemen in Nova Scotia are considering asking the provincial government to appoint a racing commissioner, "Gee" Ahern of the Halifax Herald reports. PAIR TO PLAY WITH HORNETS

Toronto, Oct. 25—(CP)—Eric Prentice of Schumacher and Kenny Schultz from Preston will play with Pittsburgh Hornets in the American Hockey League this season, it was learned today. Both players were in the A.H.L. last season, Prentice with Providence and Schultz with Hershey, and both were at the Toronto Maple Leafs training camp at Owen Sound this season.

The arrangement to have them play with Hornets was made by manager Johnny Mitchell and Jim Balmer of the Pittsburgh club who visited Owen Sound last week.

LESSON NO. 514

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Any time you find them handy, bids of one are all the candy. But there is a bigger kick. It's when you have the kind of tickets boding nothing could be finer than a four bid in a minor.

An opening bid of four in a minor suit (clubs or diamonds) shows a hand with (1) a long-strong suit of at least seven cards, (2) a sure outside trick, and (3) nine tricks.

Without exception, such a hand is freakish. It features unusual length in one suit and makes much of short suits. Almost any result may be expected with it.

Consequently, such a hand may pick up a trick not ordinarily considered in advance. Especially if the suit is more than seven cards in length.

At any rate, such a hand often gambles that it may take one trick in excess of its normal count. Therefore, an opening of four in a minor is sometimes made with only eight tricks.

The similarity of this bid with an opening of three in a major suit is marked. An opening three-major also promises a long-strong suit and an outside sure trick.

The three-major opening promises nine tricks and may take a chance with eight.

Now that I have that off my chest, let me give you a word of advice. Unless you are an expert, don't open with a three-major unless you have eight tricks or a four-minor unless you have nine.

Fancy seeing this hand:

♠ K 7 4
♦ 9
♣ A K Q 9 8 6 5 3

This hand has all the earmarks of being a good opening bid of four in a minor suit. Start it off with an opening of four clubs.

If it turns out bad, sue for peace.

Thomas Atkins

All the world knows the British soldier as "Tommy" — short for Thomas Atkins. But how many people know who Thomas Atkins was, and how this name came to be applied to the British soldier? Thomas Atkins is no hero of fiction, but a real solder — hero of former days, who died in battle at Boxtel, a few miles northwest of Eindhoven, where just lately the Second Army fought so bravely to relieve the heroes of the Airborne Division at Arnhem.

In September 1794, General Abercrombie's brigade, which included the Thirty-third Foot under Arthur Wellesley (later to become the Duke of Wellington) was retiring under pressure from the French, and had just repelled an especially savage attack, when Thomas Atkins, a soldier of twenty years' service, and the right hand man of the Grenadier Company, was left lying on the battlefield with a bayonet wound in his chest and a bullet in his lungs. His course was almost run; so he asked that the bearers shouldn't move him but that they should allow him to die in peace. Colonel Arthur Wellesley moved to the side of the dying soldier, but Thomas Atkins, seeing the grief in his young colonel's face, gasped out: "It's all right sir. It is all in the day's work".

Half a century later, the now aged Duke of Wellington stood on the ramparts of Walmer Castle with an Officer who had come down from Whitehall with papers for the signature of the Commander-in-Chief. One of these was a pro-forma document relating to soldiers' pay, which as a matter of courtesy was being referred to the Duke with the request that some name, typical of the common soldier, should be inserted as a specimen signature. "Could His Grace suggest a name?", the Officer enquired.

The Duke moved forward to the edge of the ramparts, and stood for some time in silence gazing out to sea. What a panorama must have passed before those dimming eyes as he looked back beyond the blood-drenched slopes of Waterloo, the broken mountains of the Pyrenees, the tawny plains of Spain, the olive groves and cork woods of Portugal, and the torrid flat lands of India! But it was on none of these things that his memory lingered. As so often happens with old soldiers, the mind of the aged Duke went back to his early days of campaigning. After a long pause, he turned to his interlocutor and replied, "Private Thomas Atkins".

Briefs From Britain

(By The Canadian Press)

Machrihanish, Scotland, (CP)—A "monster" washed up on the shore of this Mull of Kintyre town has been identified tentatively as an outsized polar bear. Twenty feet long, with huge feet, the bulk of an elephant and a coat of long white fur, the headless derelict was at first believed to be some kind of previously unknown sea serpent.

London, (CP)—Canadian Military Headquarters disclosed that the Canadian army overseas is comprised of 68.5 per cent privates, or their equivalent, 21.6 per cent non-commissioned officers, 7.2 per cent officers and 2.7 per cent nursing sisters.

Queensbury, England. (CP)—Two old age pensioners from London, evacuated to escape the flying bombs, were married in this Yorkshire town. Strangers until they came to Yorkshire in August, they were Ernest Baugham, 73, and Mrs. Jessie Nash, 74.

London, (CP)—Britain's temporary postmen who in the past have had to provide their own waistcoats and dye them regulation blue, in future will have them issued by the government.

Brierley Hill, England. (CP)—Walter Launcelot Larkham, 65, retiring after 39 years as publican of the Dog and Partridge, has never tasted beer, never smoked since an early attempt at the age of 15, and hates 'blondes' who loll on pub counters sipping gin and smoking.

London. (CP) — Maj. Viscount Long of Wraxall, 33, was killed in action in northwest Europe. His father, Brig.-Gen. Walter Long, was killed in action in 1917.

Blackpool, England. (CP) —James Ratcliffe, chief of Blackpool Information Bureau who was known in this seaside resort as "Mr. Blackpool", has died.

London, (CP) — First British troops to penetrate into Germany were the "Sherwood Rangers", more formally known as the Nottinghamshire Yeomanry.

East Grimstead, England. (CP)—An unused Methodist chapel has been converted into a grocery shop to replace a store destroyed by fly bombs.

London, (CP)—Among 155 civilians known to have been blinded by enemy action, 32 lost their sight during flying bomb attacks.

Malvern, England. (CP)— An 83-year-old farmer was committed for trial on a charge of growing canary seeds without a licence.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

New York; Oct. 26 — (AP)—The rumor department has it that the Pacific Coast League is threatening to branch out as a third major baseball circuit . . . from this distance it doesn't look like a serious threat —maybe a big stick to persuade the majors to grant that $15,000 draft price . . . The Coast League, with a record attendance last summer, averaged under 300,000 per club — hardly a get-rich-quick total . . . and what would they do about the world series, anyway?

Bouncing Check

A clipping from an English paper reveals that Barry Nieuwenjuys, South African soccer star who had been playing for Liverpool, has been suspended for "asking a league club for payment in excess of the regulation." . . . The item explains further: "Nieuwenjuys admitted having done so and expressed his deep regret to the management committee." . . . And we thought Branch Rickey still was in Brooklyn.

Calling his Shot:

Bobby Hicks, Piedmont League umpire, tells this one about shortstop Tom Brown, who moved up from Newport News to the Dodgers late last season . . . "I called a second strike on the kid that was pretty close," says Hicks. "He gave me a look, then took a tie hold and faced the pitcher. 'I can spot you one strike and that sore-armed pitcher another and still hit,' he growled . . . then he blasted the next pitch for a triple."

Most British of All Seas

The Irish Sea is the most truly British of all seas. For if by British you mean something pertaining to the Isles of Britain, the Empire of Britain and so on, the modern meaning of the word, in fact, which takes no account of Celtic origins, you could not find a more representative concentration of Britannic elements anywhere. The shores of the Irish Sea are parcelled out as if by some impartial arbiter into holdings of almost equal size for all parties —the Welsh, the English, the Scotch, the Ulstermen, the Free Staters, the Manxmen. Or, if by British you mean it in the stricter sense of Brythonic, the statement holds good, for it is by the sea of the ancient kingdom of Strathclyde as well as the sea of North Wales. In fact the ricness of the Celtic twilight in the Irish Sea is only surpassed by the richness of its material sunsets. Turner was a regular visitor to the Dee estuary for the sake of the sunsets in Liverpool Bay, and there is an afterglow in Morecambe Bay which fires the whole assemblage of the Cumbrian mountains and throws their image, beacon-red —but showing every outline, on the wide shallow waters and desolate miles of sad wet sand-flats.

The Irish Sea is the most enclosed and, at the same time, the most picturesque of all our seas. The six countries which surround it and the one which lies mid-most in it have nearly all contrived to throw up the grandest and wildest of their mountains along its shores. Here muster the Snowdon Range, the Clywd Hills, the Lancashire Fells, the mountains of the Lake District, the Galloway mountains (Cairnsmore of Fleet is the wildest and most imposing mountain in the Scottish Lowlands), the Manx Mountains, the Mourne Mountains, and the Wicklow Mountains. . . .

The Mediterranean has hardly a finer ceremonial entrance than the Irish Sea. It would be a mistake to compare Gibraltar and Holyhead Mountain too closely. There is, however, one identical thing about the two, lying in the idea which each inspires: an idea which is one of the most inspiring if indefinable in all geography—the parting of the ways of two seas. By 365 steps you may walk down the face of the great precipice of the south front of Holyhead Mountain, which is made of the oldest known rock in the world, pre-Cambrian quartzite. By a little suspension bridge you may cross over the surging sea gully and gain the South Stack Island. Here you will feel that you have arrived at a place which has a force of character quite dynamic. From the sound of the sea to the aspect of the horizon it gives the impression of a wedge between destinations, a place of passage. For the birds who crowd every inch of ledge on the furrowed cliff, as well as for sailors all over the world, Holyhead is one of the principal landfalls and departures.—From "The Seas and Shores of England", by Edmund Vale. (New York: Scribner, 1936.)

Australia Sponsors War Orphans Scheme

Sydney, Australia, Oct. 25. (CP) About 500 applications have been made in New South Wales alone under the proposed scheme to bring orphan children from Britain and Allied countries for adoption in Australian homes. The plan is sponsored by the British War Orphan Adoption Society.

It is hoped to bring out French, Dutch and Norwegian orphans up to seven years of age as well as orphans from Britain. They will be handed over to approved foster parents here for permanent adoption. Plans call for the establishment of a permanent home in Sydney and clearing houses or welcome homes in other state capitals.

Aussie Cowgirls To Play in Film

Brisbane, Oct. 25. (CP)—When a film is made depicting the great Australian cattle drive of 1942 during which thousands of cattle crossed the top of the continent from the Kimberleys into Queensland the Zigenbine sisters are expected to have important roles.

The cowgirls are famous among cattlemen of the north and have been droving for years. Their father has one or two aboriginal stockmen and his daughters to help him and on their treks they are accompanied by Mrs. Zigenbine and the younger children who travel in a covered wagon.

The family's treks are so long that few white people are encountered. The girls are shy with strangers, but out on the plain with the cattle they are in their element.

London, Oct. 25 (CP)—Probably the most remarkable performance in the history of the world-famous Grand National steeplechase was recalled with the recent death of famed race-horse trainer, Capt. Percy Whitaker, at the age of 74.

He nearly won the Grand National on a horse with one lung. The mount was The Lawyer III, which he not only rode, but also owned and trained. The Lawyer, finished third to the 66-1 shot Rubio in 1908. The horse dropped dead shortly after completing the gruelling course and examination revealed the animal had only one lung.

It was the ambition of Whitaker's life to train and ride a Grand National winner. He continued to try until he was 50 but never succeeded in his nine attempts. The closest he came was with The Lawyer.

His final three attempts were made on Arravale which failed in 1922 when he jumped on a dead horse at the fence before Becher's Brook. For the following two years Arravale balked at the same fence.

Vince Hawkins, Britain's latest boxing sensation who never has tasted defeat in his 61 professional bouts, will meet veteran Ernie Roderick of Liverpool for the British middleweight championship. Jock McAvoy, 36-year-old butcher, held the title until a few days ago when the British Boxing Board of Control declared it vacant. McAvoy held the title 11 years and hadn't defended it since war began.

Hawkins, a railway fireman on a southern England run, came into prominence during the last six months and has been hailed by some experts as the greatest boxing prospect in years.

Roderick has held the British welterweight title since 1939 and decided several weeks ago to jump into the middle class.

Date and site of the championship bout have not been announced but it probably will be held in London.

Britain's Amateur Boxing Association revealed that during a championship program at London's Selhurst Park a flying bomb passed almost directly over the ring amid the heavy anti-aircraft barrage.

Boxers, referee and judges carried on, the crowd rushed from the grandstand to get a better view of the buzz-bomb—then a novelty.

Grey-haired W. J. Hobbs celebrated his 70th birthday by swimming six times across Torquay harbor—a distance of 750 yards—in water temperature that could be compared to that of Lake Ontario on a chilly September day.

In his younger day Hobbs won more than 100 swims, including the Australian three-mile race in 1903, and trained the Australian "All-Blacks" in 1924-25.

NAVAL AIR TRANSPORT SERVICE TO PELELIU

Honolulu, Oct. 24 —(AP)— Establishment of a regular Naval Air Transport cargo and passenger service to Peleliu in the Palau islands, was announced yesterday. This is the 25th link in the widespread Naval Air Transport Service Pacific Network over 27,000 miles of ocean routes.

LOSES LIFE TRYING TO SAVE PARROT

Miami, Fla., Oct. 24 (AP)—Mrs. Ruth Robbins lost her life in a futile effort to rescue a parrot from a water-filled rockpit. Acting Lieut. L. E. Estes of the fire department emergency squad said the 30-year-old woman drowned or suffered a heart attack when she plunged fully dressed into the water.

Boy Hunter Accidentally Shoots Himself Leaving Car

Wadena, Ia., Oct. 24 —(AP)— When Johnny Philip heard a shot, he asked his hunting companion, Jerre Murphy, 16: "What did you shoot?" Jerre answered: "Myself, I guess," and fell dead. He had been hit in the breast when his rifle discharged accidentally as he was taking it from a car.

Women's Institutes of Belleville Area Convene in City

Discussion of Rural-Urban Relationship Features First Session Women's Institute

Every Branch in Belleville Area Represented at Convention

"As The Home Is—So Is The Nation," the theme chosen by the Belleville Area Women's Institute for this year's nineteenth annual convention was graphically and vividly painted with wide sweeps of the artists' brushes to the delight of the large assemblage in the introduction to the two-day convention on Tuesday in the Collegiate Institute Auditorium. Delegates, together with members and friends, came in enthusiastic numbers from the combined districts of Hastings, Northumberland and Prince Edward. Codrington, Pine Grove, Melrose, Bloomfield, Cherry Valley, Mountain View, Wellington, Demorestville, Grafton, Plainfield, Castleton, Chatterton, Stirling, Phillipston, Elon, Cobourg, Rednersville, Hilton, Hillier, Roseneath, Madoc, Consecon, Uniondale, Marmora, Rylestone, Ivanhoe, Brighton, Bannockburn, Eldorado, Holloway, Bobarlaw, Wellmans, Grafton, York Road and Roslin were represented with not only delegates but also members and friends.

Mrs. Bush Presides.

Mrs. Ross Bush, of Consecon, Area Chairman, presided for the morning session, and in her opening remarks extended a warm welcome to the women. She stated, the first indication of the value of any organization is the response to attend meetings. Mrs. Bush said that there was a tinge of sadness in her welcome because it would be the last time she would be welcoming them as Area Chairman since her term of office ends this year. "You are a very important part of your convention," she said to the women, "so let us have honest discussion." She expressed thanks to Mayor W. H. Rollins and to Mr. W. S. Turner, Principal of the Collegiate Institute. She paid tribute to the executive for its most considerate and wonderful co-operation. "The year's work reveals progress" continued Mrs. Bush. Knitting, jam, cigarettes and boxes have gone overseas reminding servicemen everywhere, that we stand behind them. The Institutes have been active home and abroad. The governments are planning for peace, but it is not only their concern and work but also that of the individual. The record of the Women's Institute war work is to be commended. Mrs. Bush expressed the hope, that next year would bring even greater progress.

Three-Minute Talks.

The roll call of the districts was conducted in the form of three-minute talks on ways of promoting rural-urban relationship. Mrs. A. Beckwith, of Cherry Valley, reporting for Prince Edward, said that the Collegiate Institute is one of the primary factors in promoting this relationship in regards to boys and girls. The organization of the Boy Scouts is another one for the boys and the Girl Guides for the girls. "However," said Mrs. Beckwith, "it depends largely on one's self whether he wishes to make friends or not." "The Young Peoples' Association in churches is another good thing," she said. In regards to the older people, the Red Cross promotes among its members a friendly relationship, as it is with hospital work and the St. John Ambulance. In conclusion, Mrs. Beckwith urged, that the women join the Women's Institute. She also mentioned the idea of Pen Pals as a stimulant to promoting urban and rural relationships.

Start With Children Claim.

Mrs. Rutherford, of Colborne, representing Northumberland W, said that for so long there had been a division between town and rural people. "I do think," she said, "that a good place to begin to promote a good feeling between town and country folk is to start with the children." If rural teachers could point out to their pupils the advantages which rural pupils have and enjoy and thus make them feel a pride in their own surroundings, they would not look with envious eyes on the town people. The mothers, too, can cultivate that good feeling. "If we could so train our family to see and love and put a proper value on the worthwhile things of life, we have gone far in establishing a better relationship between town and country."

Get Better Acquainted

Speaking for Northumberland E., Mrs. F. Wolfraim, of Castleton, said that there are many problems that press upon the W. I. for solution. In touching on the relationship of rural and urban communities, she stated that one depends upon the other. They should get together therefore and compare notes at various periods. Staying apart will not be effective. They can tell each other their problems. Mrs. K. Bateman, of Eldorado, on behalf of Hastings N., said that she felt the rural communities in North Hastings had become better acquainted with the urban people through meeting together in the local leading training schools. She spoke of the town of Almonte which boasts a fine public library, many of the readers being rural ones. "Again we must not overlook the youth movement which is gaining such prominence in Canada".

Mrs. Bateman also mentioned the Girl Guides, and particularly the Lone Guides who in the isolated sections carry on by mail and meet once or twice a year. She touched, lightly on the yearly conference at Geneva Park on Lake Couchiching, which presents an opportunity for rural and urban people to attend and discuss problems of interest to both. "Surely," she said, "Those people living in urban centres, who have volunteered to help the farmers with the harvesting in these critical times cannot help but link up a friendship, which is likely to be hard to forget between rural and city dwellers."

Co-operation Needed

Mrs. B. Mitts, of Holloway, reporting for Hastings W., stated that farming holds the key to prosperity and the basis of promoting rural and urban relationship lies in co-operation. She continued in saying that Canadian farm life will have to be more attractive to the younger generation. The farm is basic and the urban people should be educated to appreciate the contribution of rural Canada. Then the rural people should use the contribution of urban population to improve their equipment by purchasing from the urban manufacturer. Mrs. Mitts spoke of the farm service force as one of the greatest factors in the establishment of satisfactory relationship of town and country people.

Advocates Debates

Mrs. W. White, Roslin, representing Hastings E., said that she thought the Area Convention exemplified one way for the urban and rural relationship to grow. She expressed the idea of having debates on the advantages and disadvantages in city and country homes. Mrs. White also spoke of the Red Cross and other such societies in regards to her subject. She mentioned the victory garden as giving everyone in the city an opportunity to put into practice some of the ideas that they had learned from their country cousins.

Mrs. Bush introduced the guest speaker of the afternoon in the person of Mrs. H. Wicks, Cobourg, Board Director, who delivered a most interesting address on "Highlights of District Annuals". She stated that she had attended all the six district annuals in the Belleville Area. The Provincial President, Mrs. Holmes, was present at five. In speaking of her impressions received at the annuals, she began first in remarking on the very cordial welcome she had received. Decorations for all occasions were always beautifully arranged. Most places had girls' work on display as well as Red Cross work. One district had a very fine remembrance book. "There are 52 institutes in the Belleville Area and two new ones in E. Northumberland," continued Mrs. Wicks. The attendance was good, an average of about ninety at each meeting. Three institutes were not represented by delegates. She congratulated the district officers for the parliamentary way in which the meetings were conducted. Five out of the six had printed or mimiographed programs and the meetings were harmonious throughout.

Reports Discussed

Mrs. Wicks made special mention of the report from E. Hastings on the subject of their district project, which was a health educational program. The other was the report given by the Federation Agricultural representative in N. Hastings. She congratulated the women of all districts on the fine war work they are submitting. "There were also splendid reports by the conveners of girls' work," said Mrs. Wicks. Mrs. Holmes spoke briefly to all meetings and the superintendent and department representatives explained and discussed the co-operative program. The Agriculture representatives were present at some of the meetings. Mrs. Wicks spoke too of the musical numbers, the devotional periods and the splendid dinners at all the meetings.

In regard to suggestions, Mrs. Wicks stated that to have a good annual meeting one must give it a good deal of thought, and preparation. She suggested, that the district executive get together at least once a year and discuss their district work and plan their program for the District Annual. Also appoint committees to take charge of the different jobs in connection with the District Annual. Mrs. Wicks expressed the hope that the districts and institutes would take more advantage of the projects and help offered by the department. She urged the ladies to carry on their war work as they had in the past and said in conclusion, "Let us all put our best into the year ahead and the best will come, back to us".

Financial Statement Given.

Mrs. H. Ketcheson, R.R. 1, Holloway, as Area Secretary, gave the financial statement and reported a good balance in the bank. Mrs. H. Murphy, of Shannonville, giving the auditor's report stated that the books were all correct. Mrs. W. I. Simmons, in giving the Resolutions report stated that there had been no resolutions handed in to her during the past year.

In the report of Mrs. B. Baxter, of Bloomfield, on the subject of Citizenship, she said that it was a major activity of the Women's Institute. "This is what our boys and girls are fighting to save for us—our rights as free people to enjoy the privileges of citizens". Mrs. Baxter stated, that she had received reports from five districts and the many splendid papers showed an increasing interest in this subject. "We must", she said, "live and participate intelligently in our country's government—it is the duty of every citizen to vote". Several have defined the word citizenship as the ability to live in harmony with our fellow beings, to think and act according to the principles of justice and truth. One of the distinguishing marks of a good citizen is obedience to law and respect for authority. We must plant into the hearts and minds of young Canadians the important things in modern democratic life. We must also develop the spirit of international good will. Mrs. Baxter said that several branches had reported addresses by special speakers.

"The responsibility of the home cannot be overestimated in the training of citizens", she continued. The child must be taught to train himself to the utmost of his ability and to be prepared to accept his full responsibility both now and in the future. Mrs. Baxter stressed, that the religious education of the child not be neglected. Closely following the home training comes the school influence. Now is the time to put ideas into action. With war brides coming to our country, refugees seeking shelter here, probable immigration in the near future, and our own men and women coming back, we have every opportunity to act citizenship—to give them a welcome and make them feel that there is a home for them in Canada. The hand of friendship and better citizens means a better Canada and a better world.

Publicity Helpful.

Mrs. C. Hall, of Plainfield, reporting on Publicity, stated the publicity conveners saw to it, that a great deal of publicity had been given the different branches throughout the year. Community events sponsored by the Women's Institute were well advertised and brought splendid results in public interest and financial gain. Mrs. Hall said that another branch reported advertising their meetings in advance resulted in a better attendance. "It would be well to impress on branch Institutes", said Mrs. Hall, "the need to choose a publicity convener with care, so that she will be one who is interested in and familiar with all phases of the Institute activities, one who is capable of presenting these activities in an attractive way. Above all let us have a vision of the part Women's Institutes may have in the life of Canada, and of the part Publicity may take in achieving this place".

At all the sessions Mrs. H. Harrison, of Latta, led in community singing, with Miss G. Weese, of Belleville, acting as accompanist.

FREAK STORM CUTS LIGHT

St. Thomas, Oct. 25 — (CP) — Motor car headlights came to the rescue when a freak electrical storm extinguished lights at the nearby R.C.A.F. Technical Training School as a concert in the drill hall was in progress. The cars were driven inside the building and their lights turned on.

REQUISITION BLANKETS

London, Oct. 25— (CP-Aneta) — The Germans in the Hague, Holland, have "requisitioned" 60,000 winter coats and an equal number of blankets from the civilian population in preparation for a winter campaign, according to word received here yesterday from underground sources.

Women's Institute Force In Bringing in New World Of Tomorrow Convention Told

Mrs. C. Holmes Delivers a Thought - Compelling Address — Mayor Rollins Welcomes Members

"I can see in your organization great work in the future", said Mayor W. H. Rollins in his address of welcome to the members of the Women's Institute in the afternoon session on Tuesday. Mayor Rollins stated that it was an honor to be able to be present to extend a welcome to the Women's Institute. "I feel a great deal about the W. I.", he stated. "What we are associated with in childhood days stays with us when we grow old. We are now closer to a world peace, and I trust and hope that the W. I. will always remain the steadfast and worthy organization that it has been in the past. It will be your task to assist the English war brides to establish themselves in the communities. Mayor Rollins commented on the theme of the convention. "As the home is—so is the nation", and recited that common saying, "the hand that rocks the cradle rules the world". "If we all had a program for life and lived up to it, we would have a fine future." In closing, Mayor Rollins extended a welcome on behalf of the citizens of Belleville to the Women's Institute Convention at this their Nineteenth Annual.

Co-operation Rural and Urban

Mrs. W. Tufts, of Holloway, on behalf of the W. I., expressed to Mayor Rollins the very heartiest thanks and appreciation for his welcome extended to the Institute. "We must work in complete co-operation, rural and urban," she said. "We must also take an active part in good government—British justice is a priceless jewel."

Mrs. W. A. Hoskins, of Cobourg, was the presiding officer for the afternoon session. A Panel Discussion on the theme of the convention was conducted by the presiding officers. Mrs. Bush, Mrs. Hoskins, Mrs. R. Badgley, Shannonville, and Mrs. K. Paul, Belleville, each took a part of the discussion which was divided into four distinct items, the physical, mental, moral and economic side of the theme. This was the first time such a discussion was conducted at the convention here and the presiding officers and the women present should be highly commended for the fine way they joined in the discussions at hand.

Home Nucleus of Training

Mrs. Bush, in the discussion on Education, stated that due to lack of discipline in the home comes a great deal of delinquency on the part of both the children and the parents. Mrs. Hoskins, who conducted the discussion on the physical aspect of the problem, said to the women "The health of the nation is our responsibility, particularly the parents in the home. Co-operation and democracy are the best basis to build our national life. We should build strong bodies and never forget that the home is the nucleus of training and the foundation of the nation." Mrs. Badgley in speaking of education, laid particular emphasis on rural education. "It starts in the home, of course," she said. "Impress these words on the children", 'I can' or better still, 'I must'. At school our children are taught to work together.

Mrs. K. Paul, in leading her discussion on the economical viewpoint, told the women that to have contentment in the home there must be financial security. There should be order and co-operation also in the home. The glory of the home is hospitality and the blessing of it is contentment. Compliments to the women for the part they had taken in the Panel Discussion were paid by the Provincial President, Mrs. C. Holmes. A delightful interlude of music followed with Mrs. Hoskins rendering a solo accompanied at the piano by Mrs. L. Patterson.

Assuming Responsibilities

Mrs. C. Holmes, in her address to the assemblage, expresed her pleasure at being present for the occasion of the convention. She stated that the Belleville Area measures well up and does surpass many other convention areas. "When we come to a convention we think of two things. We compare our work with that of the other districts, and we have time to plan new projects." Mrs. Holmes said that she was pleased with the attendance at the conventions throughout the province. Speaking for a few minutes on citizenship, she said that it teaches the individual to learn to shoulder responsibilities. If we are the proper type of citizen we also have responsibilities as well as privileges. That training must begin early. The study of citizenship trains us to take part more aggressively and more intelligently in public affairs. In peace time, there will be more opportunities for women. We have to be ready, informed and educated to meet the challenge.

Spiritual and Mental Vitamins

"Citizenship," said Mrs. Holmes, "is a broad subject." The training of it begins first in the home where characters are moulded. Character training is given our children through our own everyday living. It is important today in the national well being of our country that there be a satisfactory home life." The speaker spoke briefly on the topic of good foods and their benefits. But she asked, "Are we concerned with spiritual and mental vitamins?" At a meeting of the Ontario Association of Education, the members advised that we consider the highest unit of education. They suggested that a few subjects be taught and greater attention be given the individual. They also suggested that our schools be community centres. "Are we making our rural schools community centres?" asked Mrs. Holmes of the assemblage. They tell us, too, that we as parents are not interested in our children's education, that child delinquency is the result of parent delinquency and that more adult education is needed.

True Value of Home-making

Girls today need to be taught the true value of home-making, so they can be prepared to meet the situations that arise in the future. Mrs. Holmes expressed her belief that instruction in elementary sociology be given to children. In the study of Citizenship we must think of the people from other lands, for example, the war brides who are coming to Canada to live. We must stand for the preservation of our own Canadian ideas, and we must continue to support the associate country women of the world. "Are we ready for the reconstruction era?" asked Mrs. Holmes. "It is the citizen's responsibility as well as the statesmen's and the Government's. Men are dying today for democracy — tomorrow we must live for democracy. We will have hard work to do and we will have to continue to make sacrifices. "Start improving ones' self before the new world order comes," stated the speaker. "Be practical in bringing about new reforms. Let us support reform, let us be intelligently informed of the situation and then we can wisely use our franchise.

"Are we instilling into our children in the home the love of high ideals and of home life? We must be courageous and unafraid to campaign against the wrong practices that are going on around us. Then when we do, the Women's Institute will be the greatest force in bringing about the new world of tomorrow." Mrs. Holmes compared the Institute to a machine, all geared and ready to go forward. The people in it serve as the lubricant in making it go forward in promoting home and country.

Institutes' Accomplishments in Area

Mrs. S. Foster, of Hillier, gave a summary of the work done in the area as presented in the reports of the district conveners on the subject of social welfare. All branches report the ways and means they had employed to carry out the idea of social welfare. Nearly all branches supported the country hospitals and Christmas boxes and parcels went regularly to the boys overseas. There were addresses, roll calls on health subjects, child welfare interest shown in schools and first aid kits refilled. Bloomfield Institute held parents' day at the school. Demorestville reported holding 17th annual meeting at Old Folks' Home. Wellington donated money for children's books at the library. Wooler branch held children's day. West Northumberland District gave contributions to fund for British children and to the Tuberculosis Association. Several held a Grandmothers' Day. The Bay of Quinte Branch had a speaker on community activities. Several branches assisted with the cemetery upkeep. The Chatterton Branch had a first aid kit in the institute. Rylestone Branch had a convener who introduced some phase of her topic at each meeting. Ivanhoe answered a roll call with war savings stamps. Bonarlaw had as its motto: "How may we spread responsibility among our members to help discover the talents of others". Bannockburn and Eldorado had as their mottoes, "Do something for others, always whatever may be our creed."

Living in Family Group

The topic of Home Economics was ably dealt with in the report submitted by Mrs. J. Frederick, of Halloway. She said that it has been stated home management means the utilization of the home's resources of money, goods, services, time, energy, and the personal abilities of members to provide development of the society. Living successfully in the family group is the best preparation for democratic living in the community. Mrs. Frederick listed some of the things that women of the home can undertake from a home economics standpoint. Prevent the smallest waste of food, clothing, time or energy, study the family income, conserve food and food values by proper cooking, build and maintain health at home, help business of the country by buying Canadian and British goods, study the reason for taxes, and see the other side of the picture as well as our own. Mrs. Frederick listed some of the mottoes used by the different institutes in regards to this particular subject. Some of the institutes arranged to have some phase of home economics at each meeting. "We feel", said the speaker, "that too many homes are neglected in these hurried times and children are being neglected by being left alone while their mothers are away from home." Mrs. Keyes, home economics convener for the Belleville Area, in her letter, suggested that we as Institute women study cooperation this year.

Value of Community Histories

Mrs. C. Griggs of Roseneath, giving her summary of the reports from all districts in regards to historical research, pointed out to the Institute women the importance of keeping an accurate record of the community histories. "To understand the present, we must know about the past," she said. All the districts were reported as holding historical research meetings, and members brought something that belonged to their grandmothers. Since the historical research book passes from one branch to the other, a meeting was arranged using the book as the centre of attraction.

Many splendid papers were given concerning the subject of historical research. Current events are not overlooked in the reports. Many interesting articles were found in current magazines. Each branch is asked to have a Lady Tweedsmuir Village History and keep in it a complete record of all enlistments of men and women together with pictures of the personnel, records of decorations awarded and Honor Roll casualties.

The records of all war plants in operation in the community should be preserved. The information should be tabulated and kept up to date. This information should be accurate as it is for the benefit of those who come after us.

CANTEEN TO CELEBRATE 5th ANNIVERSARY

Toronto, Oct. 25 — (CP) — The Toronto Active Service Canteen which has served nearly 3,000,000 men in the armed forces since its establishment Nov. 11, 1939, last night announced plans for a week-long celebration of its fifth anniversary. The canteen now caters to an average of 70,000 to 85,000 men a month, the 2,781 volunteer workers working in shifts from eight a.m. to midnight.

Work of Women's Institutes Adds to Nation's Strength Says Supt. W.I. Branch

"As the W. I. is—so is the nation" was the subject chosen by Miss Mary A. Clarke, Superintendent of the Women's Institute Branch, in her very inspiring address to the women of the Institute on Tuesday evening. Miss Clarke compared the Institutes to a chain stretching across Canada from west to east. The number of links in a chain does not mean its strength but it is the links themselves that give it character. The links are in groups and there are nine different groups of links. The Provincial Federations are all different but that fact does not weaken the chain. Instead, it gives individuality. Fundamentally, all links are the same. If one link is missing, the chain loses some of its value, or if one institute is progressing poorly a link is tarnished.

"What responsibilities have we as W. I. members to keep the links shining?" asked the speaker. "We must have belief in the objective of the Institute. Put our beliefs into action through co-operative effort." Miss Clarke paid tribute to the good leaders of the Institute. "If you have in your area women who would make good conveners see that the Board Director Mrs. Bush knows about them who in turn can tell the Provincial Board," she said. Speaking briefly on good membership, she urged for a regular attendance at meetings. There is an inspiration in being all together. There should be support of enterprises undertaken by the Institute and also a loyal support of the will of the majority by the will of the minority.

Urges Good Programs.

Miss Clarke urged the leaders to plan good programs. They should be timely, though provoking, sufficiently varied and well balanced. Every member of the Institute should be used in the activities of the Institute during the year. The speaker asked that the Institute keep up its fine record in regards to war work and said, "You learned to work together through the Women's Institute. Your organization speaks for all rural women. Your biggest challenge today is for the post-war world. Women must take their responsibilities as citizens in that world. The proportion of women in Canada is high, and we influence life in the country no matter what we do. "In our institutes we need a little more thinking," the speaker continued. "We can help formulate ideals on which post-war world will be built. We want a better living for everyone. Practical problems will be our responsibilities. We all will be sitting at the Peace Table in our own way. If we try to understand other nations, we will get along with them better and the future will be brighter for everybody. In closing, Miss Clarke expressed her wish to the assemblage, "I want the chain of Women's Institutes to be strong."

Compares Educational Courses.

Mr. W. S. Turner, Principal of the Belleville Collegiate Institute and Vocational School, conducted an inspection tour for the Institute members through the school rooms of the Collegiate at the beginning of the evening session on Tuesday. Following the inspection, he addressed the women and expressed his realization that the women carry the burdens of the home. "The women," he stated, "are responsible for all the finer things of the home." He commended the Institute for assembling for the purpose of discussing problems. Mr. Turner, knowing the interest of the Institute in the subject of education, discussed clearly and concisely by means of a chart the various courses being offered in the Collegiate today and of their various advantages and disadvantages in regards to different types of student material. The General, Industrial, Commercial and Home Economics are listed courses available for students entering the Collegiate.

General Courses Popular.

"There are", he said, "263 beginners in grade nine and two-thirds of them have chosen the General Course." Mr. Turner expressed the hope that in the future more interest would be diverted towards the other courses than there is at the present time. He said that vocational guidance is seriously being planned. Enrollment in the day school is 785 and at night classes 500. Mr. Turner spoke of the rehabilitation period and of the great need for education when that particular time comes.

Mrs. R. Bush was in the chair for the exercises of the evening session. Miss Thelma Arkles contributed to the program several vocal solos accompanied at the piano by Miss G. Weese. She received an ovation and was brought back to her listeners in a number of encores. An interesting highlight of the evening was a three-act play "A Woman With a Vision," presented by the Wooler Branch. This depicted the founding of the Women's Institute by Mrs. Adelaide Hoodless at Stony Creek, Ont. Collection and the National Anthem brought the session to a conclusion.

The War Today—

War in Pacific Reaches Crisis, Major Naval Battle Under Way

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press War Analyst)

While details of the sea-air battle off the Philippines between strong Japanese forces and units of the U. S. 3rd Fleet leave much to the imagination, it's clear that a major engagement is under way.

An official communique from Pearl Harbor also indicates that the advantage rests heavily with the American fleet—sweeping Japanese claims notwithstanding.

Will It Develop Into Great Naval Battle?

Whether this may develop into the great naval engagement for which the world has been waiting remains to be seen.

The significance of this battle is that the Mikado's forces were aiming to deal a death blow to Gen. MacArthur's invasion of the heart of the Philippine archipelago. They hoped to destroy the convoys of supplies and troops which are pouring in, and then to smash the American expedition which already is ashore and getting ahead well with the job of overrunning Leyte, strategic key to the whole archipelago.

A decisive American victory in this battle would vastly expedite the task of reclaiming the Philippines. The corollary to that must be that it would greatly shorten the war with Japan, for loss of this great archipelago will so divide the Mikado's empire and his conquests that his war effort will be crippled.

Pacific War at Crisis.

The Allies have every reason for complete confidence in the fighting forces in the Pacific. Admiral Halsey, upon whose fleet appears to rest the weight of this engagement, is daring but not rash, and is one of the most inspiring leaders of this war.

Actually Halsey's 3rd Fleet has been hunting the Jap fleet—trying to taunt it into coming out to fight —for a long time.

Whether the Japanese War Lords have at long last decided to risk a sizeable part of their main fleet, the fact remains that the Pacific war has reached its crisis. It's now or never for Japan.

Tax Treatment Of Co-operatives Will Be Studied

Ottawa, Oct. 24 — (CP)—A Royal Commission will be appointed to consider the tax treatment of co-operatives in Canada, Finance Minister Ilsley announced last night.

Mr. Ilsley made the announcement while commenting on a statement in which John Bracken, leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, opposed the taxation of co-operatives.

(Mr. Bracken in the statement made in Winnipeg Sunday night said that savings effected by a co-operative on behalf of its members are not income and therefore not taxable. When these savings were returned to the members, they were then subject to personal income tax).

"As to the first part of this statement, there has never been any disposition on the part of the taxing authorities to question that general principle, but the real problem is as to its application," Mr. Ilsley said. "For instance, the questions that have arisen relate to such points as what is a co-operative, what are savings, and what constitutes an allocation.

Consumers' Cooperatives

"The second part of the statement would indicate that Mr. Bracken has given no thought to the position of consumers' as distinguished from producers' co-operatives. It is news to me that savings returned to members of consumer co-operatives are subject to personal income tax or should be.

"The statement indicates that Mr. Bracken has little knowledge of the difficulties of definition and otherwise with which this subject bristles. The difficulties and importance of the matter are so great that snap judgment by persons obviously unfamiliar with all the considerations involved are to be regretted."

Why Commission to be Appointed

Mr. Ilsley said he decided a Royal Commission should be set up to consider the tax treatment of co-operatives after he came to the conclusion that only such a body could deal with the problem properly. W. C. Wood, president of the Co-Operatives Union of Canada, was notified by letter last week that such a commission would be set up.

It was hoped and expected that the report of the Commission would be available in time to allow introduction at the next session of legislation that would clarify existing tax laws relating to co-operatives.

In the meantime, the test case to be taken to the courts by three western wheat pools, seeking certain tax exemptions, will be held in abeyance.

Reports Conflict Of Armed Clashes Within Spain

London, Oct. 24—(CP)— Conflicting reports of armed clashes in Spain reached London today and it was not yet clear whether the action involved only frontier skirmishes or an organized and formidable revolt against Gen. Franco's Falangist Regime.

An authoritative source cautioned against overestimating the extent of the hostilities. Official quarters said they had no information confirming reports of a general uprising.

Reported Near Border

It was pointed out, however, that strong, well-equipped Maquis forces including a high percentage of Spanish republicans were in Southwestern France near the Spanish border.

A responsible source stated it had not been learned how many of these Spanish Maquis had been crossing the border into Spain or to what extent they were in contact and collaborating with guerilla forces of the Spanish Republican Junta.

Franco's Spanish National Radio told of clashes between regular Spanish troops guarding the frontier and "several groups of Spanish ereds" from France, but sought to create the impression that the situation was well in hand, with most of the rebels surrendering or fleeing back across the French border.

Scotswoman Sailed In Invasion Armada

Renfrew, Scotland, Oct. 25. — (CP) — Kathleen MacCormack found working as a nurse "too dull" so she joined the merchant marine as a stewardess and was probably the only woman to sail with the invasion armada.

Working aboard the hospital ship Naushon she arrived off the French beaches on D-Day plus one and after that made 14 trips back and forth as the first wounded were moved to Britain.

Torpedoed once, she seldom mentions it and because of this and other narrow escapes her shipmates call her "Lucky Kath".

UNKNOWN CANADIAN DIED THAT PALS MIGHT LIVE

By FREDERICK GRIFFIN
War Correspondent

A British Invasion Port, June 17—Members of the crew of an infantry landing craft which took the first wave of western Canadian troops ashore from its mother ship early on D-Day, told me an incident of immortal courage performed within five minutes of the landing by an unknown Canadian soldier. It is to be hoped that members of his unit also witnessed and recorded it, for single-handed he made that landing easy and almost bloodless.

On this particular strip of beach, the enemy fire was withheld until the first troops had touched down. Then, according to my informant, a withering machine-gun fire broke out from one low-set nest near the sea. There was also mortar fire, but this one point was beginning to have a deadly effect as it ripped bullets at the landing craft.

Marking this down and sizing up the situation cold-bloodedly, this Canadian soldier did not hesitate. Without waiting to count the consequences, this lad presumably under fire for the first time, jumped out over the side of the landing craft into water waist high. He waded ashore on the lee side and, crouching down, started running towards this venomous nest.

As if bearing a charmed life, he was not hit as he went ducking towards his objective. In his hands were two grenades and as he ran, timing every step and every moment of space precisely, he loosened the pins on both. But he did not even at last hurl them and throw himself flat with some hope of escape. Instead, carrying them during those last seconds when he might have escaped their explosion in order to make sure that he made a direct bullseye hit, he flung himself and them right on the machine-gun nest.

Thus he died, this untried soldier, packing all his courage, all his duty into this one compact act. He silenced the machine-guns and his comrades landed with little hurt. Some day no doubt his act will be officially told.

He may have been a boy you knew...

He was brave, young, strong ... needed to build the greater, grander Canada of tomorrow. But—

He is gone. And the tragedy of it is that more of his like will fall.

But how many more?—how many, before our boys can return to peace, to safety, to home?

You know the answer. It depends greatly on whether we on the home front live up to our responsibilities to our fighting men, as so many of them have fallen in discharging theirs. It depends much on what we do in this 7th Victory Loan. It depends much on what you do.

Buy Victory Bonds. Buy them as you never have before. Buy more of them. Buy them with your savings and buy them on the instalment plan out of your earnings. Buy more ... and More ... and MORE!

You'll get the money back—all of it—with interest. But—far more important—we'll get our boys back ... sooner!

CHAPTER 6

"Hello men," he said now, and his voice was quiet and unobtrusive. He was greeted by the group.

"What's new?" Cux asked. Chet puffed his pipe. He smoked a pipe now and again though he didn't like it, didn't get as much satisfaction as from a cigarette.

"Eddy's joining up."

"Not Eddy?" Cux said. "As what?"

"He's getting in the Airforce. Pilot."

"Lucky dog." Gus said. "Boy, it's sure hard to get in the AF."

"Guess he's got a little drag." Cux said, and Jimmy scarcely listened. The Airforce in the Fall of '39 was a name that the public was little aware of and it was just about the furthest thing from his mind. He let the conversation roll on as he thought again of Verna. She was sure one lovely hunk of girl.

"Dad was saying they're really going to turn them out in Canada. They're calling it the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan — they announced it October 10th. Going to be quite an affair he says, twenty-five thousand aircrew from Canada, New Zealand and Australia."

"What the hell," Cux said. "How're they going to do it?"

"Dad said—he was telling me all about it last night—they're really going to build, boy. Airfields, hangars, everything."

"About time," Punchy said, and Jimmy wondered about Punchy taking an interest in things like that. Airpower's what smacked Poland." Poland. Oh yeah. Hitler invaded Poland. Verna's eyes were green right through practically. And that red hair. Brother.

"Eddy's sure getting in on the gound floor alright."

"Yeah, he should go places. That's th kind they need, I hear." Eddy was reckless and no other word. He didn't give a damn for anything. And an athlete. And still Jimmy didn't give it a thought. Dragging the last few puffs from their cigarettes the crowd started to dissolve, wandering off into the corridors to the next lectures.

Jimmy strolled back down one of the corridors with Punchy. The next lecture was Constitutional, dry as dust, and Jimmy said, "Going in?"

Punchy said, "Why not?"

"Hell. Constitutional's one boring period if I ever saw one."

"Where'll we go?"

"Doc Gagnier will be up in the Anatomy Lab—he said drop in whenever I feel like it."

"Won't the Meds be there?"

"No, just Doc. He's doing a little postrade and he'll be alone."

They went outside and down the shady lane beside the Arts Building and across the Campus to the big Med Building. Inside it was cool and a bit dark, the stone stairs hollowed sightly at the centre from generations of Med Students since the Faculty had been endowed. Notice boards lined the walls around the Porter's Lodge and the Faculty offices were closed doors with crinkled glass and names on them. They went up two more fights of stairs and then turned left and went through the Museum. Jimmy always felt a little squeamish when he saw the embryos in formaldehyde in the big jars. One of them, the last in the series, was practically a full-sized baby. They went into the Lab and the sudden bitter smell of the corpses, brown with preserving fluid, met them. Doc was a graduated Med student with six months internship. He was working at a table near one of the big sunny windows and they strolled over.

It was brown and stiff and didn't look human but Jimmy didn't look at it very long. The table was built on a slant and had grooves cut in it converging on a centre trough that ran down to a receptacle at the end of the table.

"What's that for Doc?" Punchy asked after greetings had been exchanged. Doc laughed.

"To catch the gore, fella. Weed?" They lit cigarettes and listened to Doc making a few bored and crude remarks. He took the stiffs' as a matter of course.

"What're you working on, Doc?" Jimmy asked him finally.

"Doing a little work on limb articulation. May have to use it soon."

"Medical Corps?" Punchy asked.

"Uh huh. After Christmas."

"So soon?" Jimmy asked.

"Hell Jimmy," Doc laughed. "There's a war on."

"Umn." Jimmy looked at the corpse again. And for some reason he thought of Verna, very alive and very lovely. He wondered if this had been beautiful. Fort the first time in nineteen years Jimmy had a thought that was very serious, all of a sudden. H wondered about death. Punchy and Doc went on talking and he listened to them half-heartedly. It was about the war again and after a while it was time for lunch so they left and Doc went back to work. As he closed the Lab door Jimmy could see Doc lifting and bending an arm, unconcernedly dribbling smoke from his cigarette through his nose.

It was late Fall and snow was a dull and whispered promise that ran on the rest of the winds across the Campus. On Friday he decided to get a date. The dances at the Vic were tops — all the gang went to them. That afternoon Punchy had thrown a note across during the lecture.

"Well, hello there, James me boy —how are you? Say, how about lighting a match or doing a buck and wing? I'm dying and not slowly of oppressive boredom. What's cooking re. tomorrow night? I suppose you've got all sorts of stuff, including V.P., all lined up. The gang's going to the Vic. Shall I meet you there, old man? Will have in all probability the pater's hack."

Jimmy had grinned back and nodded. He picked the phone off the cradle after supper and dialed a number, heard his father and mother in the parlor talking to Charlie. Katherine, his oldest sister, ran past him upstairs, ruffling his hair.

"Give the lady a break, wolf," she laughed gaily and then slammed the door of her bedroom. Big time with that droop of her's he reflected. The voice on the phone was low and husky.

"Hello?"

"Hello."

"How're things?"

"Just fine, and you?"

"Solid."

"Say who is this, just for the files?"

"Jimmy."

"Who?—oh, Jimmy? I didn't recognize your voice over the phone."

"Small wonder. First time."

"Uh huh. That's right too, isn't it?"

"How's the beautiful?"

"Fine and you — oh stop it." Jimmy laughed. Then he hesitated. Friday was pretty late to ask a girl out for Saturday. "I suppose you're dated up for tomorrow."

"Oh, Jimmy. Yes I am. I'm terribly sorry." Somehow he felt she just said it and nothing more.

"Oh — that's too bad. Had the Vic in mind."

"But that's where we're going. I'll see you there."

"OK. save me seven hundred and three dances." She laughed.

"I've really got to go. I'll see you there. Goodbye Jimmy." He hung up. Hell. Dated tonight too by the sound of it. Kate came down the stairs and mussed his hair again.

"Wish me luck, Jimmy," she whispered breathlessly and then went into the parlor.

"Luck? What do you mean?" he called but she was in the room now and he could hear his mother's voice and Charlie's—Kate had had been going with Charlie for a year now. He was a nice guy but pretty slow as far as Jimmy could see. He could hear them all talking downstairs so he went up to his and fooled around with some Law notes for a while. They were dry as dust. He sat at his desk with the notes in front of him for a while and toyed with a pencil. He read the first line of the mimeographed release and then he thought for a while. Law? That was some subject. He wondered how he'd ever chosen it. It was funny, he liked it now and it wasn't too bad really as a career once you looked at it. He had to choose something and Med was hard as hell, while in Engineering you worked liked a slave and became a regular automaton. The Engineers were funny. Cold and scientific and once you had about a year of Engineering you forgot all about girls practically and became as cold and scientific as the stuff you dealt with. But Arts now, that was different altogether. Some of the Arts men were practically depraved. It was funny the way the subjects affected you.

V.P. that's what Punchy had written and those were her initials. But he didn't have a date with Verna. She had red hair that shone like copper and he remembered the night of the Football Dance. That had been close. Brother, if that hadn't been the first time he'd met her, he would have kissed her. She would have let him, he was willing to bet, Lord she was lovely. But cold. Well, that called for tact and diplomacy. Make yourself felt. In a little while everything would be under control and he'd be right in there punching. All he needed was a few dates and then he'd be solid in there with her. She was sure nice. Fascinating. That was it. Those eyes, grey-green, and under the light practically straight green. Her face was oval and just like a kitten's.

Margaret. There was a good kid. But who likes kids. Hell, she sure didn't pack a wallop like Verna. She was nice all right, but sort of soft. No fire, and he wondered if she loved him. Probably did, the way she acted the other night. He phoned Margaret. Eddie, fifteen and awkward came up the stairs. The phone was on a little landing near the top.

"Hey butch, how's for lending me your bike, eh, come on. I'll buy it off you once I get started."

"Started on what?' ' Jimmy asked, listening to the bell ringing in Margaret's house.

"Papers. I'm getting a route. Ninety-six customers. I need a bike."

"Sure, sure, go ahead." He hadn't used a bike in over a year.

"Hello, Margaret, this is Jimmy."

"Oh, hello, Jimmy, how are you?"

"Right in there. Busy tomorrow night?" She probably wasn't but there was always a chance. . .

"No, I'm free."

"Good. We'll take in the Vic. The gang'll be there."

"Oh, I'd love to, Jimmy."

"OK, usual time."

"Alright Jimmy, goodbye."

"So long." He waited till she hung up and then he put the receiver back in the cradle. Margaret was a good kid alright.

He went back into his room and stared at the notes again. They didn't even make sense. He switched on the little white bakelite radio on his desk and listened to a band and then to part of a comedy show. The guy was good. He lit a cigarette and went downstairs and into the parlor when he heard Kate and Charlie leave.

Mr. Riley was tall and lean even at forty-eight years of age. He had thin brown and grey hair and a well-preserved face. He looked quite stern most of the time but when he was as he was now with Elaine, eleven, on his knee, he was almost pathetically gentle looking.

"And I've simply got to have a dress, father, after all it's not just for me. It's Eleanor's birthday party and you don't want me to look dowdy, do you?" Mr. Riley roared Elaine was his favorite and precious, and when she came out with words like 'dowdy' it tickled him immensely.

"We'll have to see what we can do," he chuckled finally. He turned to Mrs. Riley. "Anne. See that this young lady has a new frock for this all-important party. He laughed again and Elaine, having won her point, kissed him goodnight, ran over and kissed her mother and skipped out of the room.

"Goodnight Jamesy," she called, and he gritted his teeth. If there was anything he hated it was being called Jamesy.

"Goodnight kid," he said and ained a little satisfaction knowing that to her grown-up (practically) mind, 'kid' was almost as bad as 'Jamesy'.

He walked over and slumped into the big chair beside the radio and switched it on, continued listening to the Hope man. He was good all right. Quick on the trigge.

He glanced through a magazine idly, looking at bored-looking tall girls, some with more clothes on than others, which wasn't difficult, but all modelling the latest. One of them looked a lot like Verna. She had on a two piece bathing suit, white sharkskin. He looked at the date of the mag, feeling a little chilly all of a sudden and relaxed again when he saw it was from last summer. He threw it down then and glanced idly around the room. His mother, a plump typically nice-looking, ordinary middle-aged matron was sitting on the Chesterfield, remotely occupied with some kind of needlework. His father continued to read his paper from behind a pair of spectacles, smoke curling up from his pipe through the lamp-shade over his shoulder and funnelling out, blue and gray, in the light.

"Have you finished your work, dear?" his mother asked, gently, and he knew she didn't know whether he had any, let alone how ling it would take him to fininsh it.

Little Benny's Note Book

I was taking a walk with pop for his figure and we stopped to watch some man looking inside the hood of his car with a doubtful expression, pop saying, I wish I could fling him a few airy words of expert advice. It would make him feel grateful and make me feel pleasantly superior, but unfortunately there's no place I get lost quicker than under the hood of a car, he said.

But jimminy, pop, maybe he knows even less about it than you do, I said, and pop said, Well of course in that case I could speak freely. And by gollies I dont believe he knows very much, or else he'd be using his fingers for some practical purpose instead of standing ther scratching his chin with them, he said.

And he started to talk to the man, saying, I see you're having a little trouble, do you know much about the personal gizzards of a car?

Not a confounded thing. I'm like a babe in the woods when I come up against these gadgets and wires, the man said, and pop said, Oh I see, well perhaps your percolakter cap is jammed.

Do yo uthink so? the man said, and pop said, Well, I wouldn't like to say for sure after just a casual glance, because it might just as possibly be your bivalves. Have you had your bivalves checked lately? he said.

Not that I know o, the man said, and pop said, Then again your ground feed may be losing altitude, I'll tell you what you'd better do. You'd better have a mechanic from the nearest fas station come and check up for you, he said.

That's just what I'll do, thanks a lot. I'm sure glad you happened along, qou've been a big help, the man said, and pop said, Dont mention it.

And he kept on going as if he thought he was great.

Which he is.

NO CASUALTIES

London, Oct. 25 — (CP) — The Germans struck at southern England and London with their flying bombs last night for the second night in succession, but the Ministry of Information said today the raids apparently caused no casualties although some damage was done.

KNOCK SNIPERS OUT OF TREES

Palo Beachhead, Leyte, Philippines, Oct. 25 — (AP) — A navy lieutenant who wasn't assigned to killing Japanese knocked two snipers out of a tree, with three shots, and then apologized to a rifleman for wasting his ammunition. Lieut. J. P. Syttong of Lawrenceburg, Tenn., went ashore as a member of a mine explosion investigation unit. He was pinned down by the snipers and borrowed a carbine from the rifleman.

TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE

Toronto, Oct. 25 —(CP)— Prices drifted downward in quiet trading this afternoon on Toronto Exchange. Volume was moderate at 305,000 shares.

Some of the cheaper western oils developed marked weakness. British-Dominion cracked down to 61 and was holding around 67 at early afternoon for a net loss of 21 cents. Mid-contingent slipped off 6 cents, Home Oil 10 cents and Vermilata ½.

A gain of 6 cents for Labrador was the main change in the base metals and in golds prices were lower for Dome, Frobisher, MacLeod-Cockshutt, Upper Canada, Wasa Lake and others.

Bell Telephone and Brazilian were stronger utilities and stronger prices ruled in steels for Burlington and Canadian Foundries A. Senior oils were firm and the banks a bit stronger.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

New York, Oct. 25 —(AP)— The stock market today was a narrow drifting affair with most leaders inclined to sell off a little.

Minor gains, fairly well distributed at the opening, quickly disappeared under the blight of buying apathy.

Key issues in slightly lower ground near the fourth hour included U. S. Steel, General Motors, Chrysler, Kennecott, Texas Co., Santa Fe and Chesapeake & Ohio. A few coppers and specialties were resistant a good part of the time.

Canadian issues were dull and showed only minor changes.

Bonds and commodities were mixed.

Creamery Butter Cheddar Cheese Production Down

Toronto, Oct. 25 (CP)—Production of creamery butter and cheddar cheese in Ontario during September was down considerably from the same time last year, the Ontario Department of Agriculture said in its monthly dairy report issued today.

The output of butter in September amounting to 7,194,800 pounds, was down 13 per cent from the 8,270,000-pound total in September, 1943. This brought the cumulative production of creamery butter for the first nine months of 1944 to 60,479,900 pounds as against 68,536,000 pounds in the same period last year, a decrease of 11.8 per cent.

Cheddar cheese production for September this year was 12,767,000 pounds compared with 14,564,000 in September last year. Production for the first nine months of 1944 was 84,867,000 pounds, compared with 86,794,000 last year.

Toronto warehouses had on hand at Oct. 1 butter stocks amounting to 8,430,000 pounds, considerably higher than the figure a month ago when stocks totalled 7,415,000 pounds, but lower than the 8,888,000 pounds a year ago. Dairy factories throughout the province had 5,290,000 pounds of creamery butter in stock at Oct. 1, compared with 5,497,000 pounds at Sept. 1, this year, and 6,764,000 pounds at Oct. 1, 1943.

26 JAP WARSHIPS BAGGED

Large Enemy Task Force Cornered South of Formosa

Attacked by Concentration Of Ships for Day and Night

Pearl Harbor, Oct. 26 —(AP)— Here is the box score of Japanese losses in the three-pronged Philippines sea-air battle:

	Sunk	Probably Sunk	Heavily Damaged	Total
Carriers	2	1	—	3
Battleships	1	2	7	10 x
Cruisers	5	—	4	9
Destroyers	?	?	4	4 xx
Total	8	3	15	26

x—Two battleships reported yesterday by Admiral Nimitz as damaged by bombs in the Sulu Sea may not be included.

xx—"Several" others were damaged; the 4 in the box were "either sunk or heavily damaged."

By CHARLES H. McMURTRY, AP WAR CORRESPONDENT

Pearl Harbor, Oct. 26 —(AP)— More than 26 Japanese warships were sunk or heavily damaged in the three-pronged battle of the Philippines, incomplete reports of the most crushing defeat ever administered the modern Nipponese navy disclosed today.

Wreckage strewn waters marked the possible end of the Imperial Fleet as a major obstacle in the path to the coasts of Japan and China, and probably shortened the Pacific war by months.

Combined reports of Admiral Nimitz and Gen. MacArthur on the three major engagements involving the bulk of the Japanese fleet listed these known results:

Eight Japanese ships sunk—two carriers, one battleship, five cruisers.

Three probably sunk—two battleships, one carrier.

More than fifteen damaged—seven battleships, four cruisers, four destroyers, and "several" more destroyers.

Both commanders made it clear that their final reports will show heavier Japanese losses, particularly in ships sunk. Today's combined total compared with Admiral Nimitz' first report of the three way action listing one carrier sunk, two damaged, and five or six battleships and a cruiser torpedoed. All of these, with the possible exception of two battleships, are included in the combined total.

Stripped Jap Navy

The crushing three-fold defeat stripped Emperor Hirohito's navy of the greater part of its known carrier, battleship and cruiser power, necessary to engage the Allies in another major action or seriously check their further incursions into the western Pacific.

During the three-day battles, the fate of Gen. MacArthur's invasion hung in the balance. This was the touchstone that brought the Japanese fleet out of hiding and precipitated one of the greatest engagements in naval history involving almost every type of warship from battleships to motor torpedo boats and submarines, and sea-borne and land-based planes.

By comparison, in the greatest previous Nipponese defeat, 11 Japanese ships were sunk and 9 sunk or damaged in the Battle of Midway in June 1942. Five of these were transports.

Known American losses in the running battles around the Philippines were two small carriers and a number of torpedo boats sunk, plus an unannounced number damaged.

Adm. Nimitz' report today was limited to two engagements — an overwhelmingly one-sided victory over the largest Japanese task force, trapped south of Formosa by U. S. carrier planes, warships and submarines; and a crucial air-sea engagement fought northeast of Leyte off Samar Island and in the Sibuyan Sea.

Gen. MacArthur previously reported on the third action at the southern entrance to Leyte Gulf.

Archbishop Of Canterbury Dies Of Heart Attack

London, Oct. 26 —(CP)— The Archbishop of Canterbury, the Most Rev. William Temple, died today after a heart attack. The Primate of all England was 63 and had been enthroned in bomb-pocked old Canterbury Cathedral since April 23, 1942.

Formerly Archbishop of York, Dr. Temple was elevated to Archbishop of Canterbury in 1942, succeeding Dr. Cosmo Gordon Lang, who retired to make way for a younger man to carry on in preparation for the post-war period.

Dr. Temple was considered by many churchmen as a philosopher more than a theologian and with an intellect alive to new ideas.

The Archbishop was confined to his bed in September with a gout attack. Later it was announced that on medical advice he had cancelled all his engagements until the end of November. It was said then that he was suffering from an infection which was slow in responding to treatment.

Dr. Temple, enthroned April 23, 1942, at Canterbury Cathedral, became the 98th Archbishop of Canterbury and Primate of all England. The new Primate dedicated himself then in the words spoken by his father when he was enthroned 45 years before:

"I would rather that my intimate friends knew me as one who thought nothing of himself in comparison with the work he had to do, rather than that they knew me as a great scholar or a great saint."

The official announcement of the Primate's death said:

VISTULA RIVER BRIDGEHEAD NOW SIX MILES DEEP

Warsaw Outflanked And Passes Another Threat to E. Prussia From the South

By DANIEL DE LUCE
(A.P. War Correspondent)
Sign of Weakness

By DANIEL DE LUCE
Associated Press War Correspondent

Moscow, Oct. 26 (AP)—Russian troops drove deeper into Norway today beyond captured Kirkenes in Arctic storms which tumbled the temperature several degrees below zero, in a supreme effort to annihilate up to 130,000 Germans being herded before Red and Finnish forces.

In local engagements just north of ravaged Warsaw, the Kremlin at midnight announced the capture of a dozen satellite towns on the east side of the wide and swift Vistula river which bends sharply west northwest just above the ravaged city.

The pace of the Red army offensive in East Prussia slackened before ferocious German resistance, explained in part by the dependency of Berlin and other Nazi cities on foods produced on East Prussian farms.

All northern Transylvania was behind Russian lines in the Balkans and Romania was cleared of hostile Germans. In Czechoslovakia, the Russians virtually isolated the big highway town of Mukacevo, pushing within nine miles of the city.

Clearing of the towns on the northern flank of Warsaw increased the threat of capture of the Polish capital.

The Soviet communique described the Warsaw successes as "battles of local importance," but they seemed the first real sign of German weakness in Central Poland since the Red Army summer offensive faded out at the end of overstretched supply lines.

(The Germans yesterday reported the Russians had launched a powerful offensive north of Warsaw.)

If Rokossovsky has built up a new punch in recent weeks—and there seems good reason to believe he has done so—momentous operations may be developing that will overshadow anything else on the eastern front.

While the capture of Warsaw itself would have only psychological value now, a major break-through in the area would represent the double threat of an advance straight at Berlin as well as northward to East Prussia.

Meanwhile, the invasion of East Prussia ran into a storm of fanatical Nazi counter-attacks around Gumbinnen and Goldap, and while the advance continued, it brought gains of less than two miles on a separated front.

The occupation of Transylvania was completed with the capture of the important city of Satu-Mare, the railway town of Carei and 200 other populated places. Romanian troops participated in these actions.

Lighting of Cologne and Duesseldorf Oct. 18, 19 May Be Sign of Rebellion

By LOUIS P. LOCHNER
(A.P. Staff Writer)

New York, Oct. 26 (AP) — The lighting of Cologne and Duesseldorf, which surprised and amazed Allied reconnaissance fliers on the nights of October 18 and 19, may well be the sign of far-going rebellion within Germany against the regime of Adolf Hitler.

I can at least assert that the plan for turning on the lights as a sign that revolutionary elements are in control was considered seriously by the German underground of 1941 as I then knew it.

Late in October, 1941, I, as chief of the Berlin bureau of The Associated Press, was invited to the home of a Bavarian attorney living in Berlin. He had been certified to me by various reliable German democrats as a bitter anti-Nazi.

This man had been one of the earliest followers of Adolf Hitler, as well as one of the first to leave him—at least seven years before Hitler became Chancellor. He was the father of a plan then being developed for turning on the lights as city after city turned against the Nazis.

He pointed out how nothing could be so dangerous as a premature attempt at revolution, for then Gestapo oppression would become all the more severe.

"If and when we are ready to strike, we must do it in a manner that will capture the popular imagination," he contended.

"What our country needs is light—the light of freedom and expression, the light of free interchange of information with the outside world, the light of untrammelled inquiry. 'Let there be a light' should be a catching slogan for our underground, a slogan that will seize popular imagination.

"What better evidence could we give to our adversaries that Adolf Hitler and his clique do not speak for the German people, than that of lighting the streets of the cities which we wrest from the Nazis? . our present adversaries will then know in what direction to move and where they may count upon collaboration in their effort to cleanse the earth of the scourge of Nazism."

John Bracken, Progressive Conservative Leader, Heard In Stirring Address at Marmora

George S. White, M.P., Unanimously Nominated as Candidate in Next Federal Election

Marmora, Oct. 26.—The unanimous election of George S. White, M.P., as the candidate for the next Federal election and a rousing sixty-six minutes speech by John Bracken, leader of the National Progressive Conservative Party were highlights of the convention of Hastings-Peterborough Association held in Marmora Town Hall on Wednesday afternoon. The hall was packed with supporters of the party of both sexes and the 150 odd delegates seemed relieved that no voting would be required.

Annual Meeting Held.

Prior to the convention the annual meeting was held. Due to indisposition of the President Richard Dean, of Norwood, Past President George West, of Madoc, discharged the chairman's duties. Reeve Linn welcomed the convention after which George White, M.P., Gordon Fraser, M.P., George Stokes, M.P., Earl Desmond, M.P., W. E. Tummon, ex-M.P., R. D. Arnott, M.P.P., Harold Scott, M.P.P., and Richard Bell, National Director for the Progressive Conservative Association were given seats on the platform. Mention was made by the chairman of the loss to the Association through death since the last convention of John Sexsmith, ex-M.P., George Bailey, past president and R. A. Elliott, past secretary. C. H. Buskard, acting secretary since the death of the latter, gave his report to be followed by the presentation of the Treasurer's report by James Moore.

Introduces Speaker.

To Gordon Fraser, M.P., was accorded the pleasant duty of introducing the speakers on the platform, who by this time had been joined by John Bracken and his son, Flight Lieut. Gordon Bracken, D.F.C. Two delegates were then named for the Ontario Progressive Conservative's convention—C. H. Buskard and the incoming president. Next in the agenda was the election of officers, which resulted as follows:

President —Dr. S. S. Lumb, Bancroft.

1st Vice President—Isaac Anderson, Belmont Township.

2nd Vice President— Wilfred Spencer, Springbrook.

3rd Vice President—Donald Robertson, Marmora.

Secretary—C. H. Buskard, Deloro.

Treasurer—James Moore, Queensboro.

Mrs. George S. White and Mrs. John Bracken were then called to seats on the platform, with rounds of applause.

R. D. Arnott Heard.

R. D. Arnott, M.P.P., called upon to speak deplored the fact that the Prime Minister of Canada had not seen fit to call together a conference of provincial representatives on the matter of rehabilitation. "We are not going to be ready to deal with the problem and will be in one awful mess", he declared. "This problem is not provincial. It belongs to us all. In order to deal with it properly, we are in our right to ask for this conference". He concluded with a tribute to the late R. A. Elliott and the suggestion, that a letter be sent to Mrs. Elliott, expressing the loss the Association felt in his passing. Harold Scott, M.P.P., urged voters to get out at the next election whether provincial or federal and vote. George Stokes, M.P., referred to the creditable representation of the men of Hastings-Peterborough, in the Armed Forces and expressed his approval of the choice of John Bracken as leader of the party.

The convention then opened. Nomination papers for George S. White, M.P., were five fold.

Proposer, C. Watts, Seconder, Stewart Clysdall.

Proposer, Floyd Post, Seconder, Allan Caldwell.

Proposer, Walter Whytock, Seconder, Fred Curry.

Proposer, C. H. Buskard, Seconder, James Moore.

Proposer, R. A. Dean, Seconder, George West.

Declared Nominated.

The chairman having declared him duly nominated as candidate, George White, M.P., referred to the meeting in the same hall six years ago when he received the nomination and had later been successful in redeeming the seat for his party. He appreciated the confidence and trust imposed in him and said it was an honor to represent the loyal British riding of Hastings-Peterborough. At that convention of six years ago he made no promise except one and he would renew it now. "I will endeavour to serve you all to the best of my ability in what I consider is in the best interests of the country as a whole". He felt he represented all the electors of the riding and acted accordingly. He would be happy to serve in the next parliament under the able leadership of John Bracken, who offered a new deal and a new plan, whereby agriculture would be best served . He, Mr. Bracken, had three sons in the Armed Forces, so matters relating to the men of the Forces were of considerable interest to him.

INVADERS CLOSE SOUTHERN END OF LEYTE TRAP

Tighten Stranglehold on Enemy Communications With Adjacent Islands

By MURLIN SPENCER
(AP War Correspondent)

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Leyte, Philippines, Oct. 26—(AP)—Mud-caked invaders today slammed shut the southern door of strategic Leyte Valley, a potential Japanese death trap, and tightened their stranglehold on enemy communications with adjacent islands.

As naval and air units beat off the Japanese fleet threat, the entire American land front moved forward through mud and rain, beneath the cover of supporting aircraft and growing artillery fire.

The southernmost of three columns driving into Leyte Valley, where Japanese defenders are being crowded, captured Burauen, a key road junction nine miles inland from Dulag. Armor-led infantrymen broke into the town, after taking nearby San Pablo and its cluster of airfields.

On the extreme northern front, another unit completed shore-to-shore movements, which seized the southern coast of nearby Samar island and thrust American units to the northern tip of Leyte. The landing on Samar, fifth Philippine island to be invaded, was reported Monday and confirmed in today's communique.

T.L.C. FAVORS ENFORCING UNION SHOPS IF VOTED

Resolution Asks Labor Code Amended to Provide Extra Clauses

Toronto, Oct. 26 — (CP) — The Trades and Labor Congress of Canada at its 60th annual convention today gave unanimous approval to a resolution asking amendment of the Federal labor code to provide for mandatory introduction of union shops where they are demanded by a majority of the employees.

The resolution also asked that signing of contracts between employers and employees be made compulsory when a union has been certified as bargaining representative of the workers and that company unions be outlawed.

The resolution accepted the Federal code as "The minimum requirement for employer-employee relations and asked that the Dominion government seek to have all provinces accept it as a permanent measure.

(The code, providing compulsory collective bargaining, became effective last March as a wartime measure.)

Percy R. Bengough, president of the Congress, said while the code was not perfect it was good legislation and had resulted in thousands of new members being brought into the Congress.

MAY EXTEND PLAN OF DEMOBILIZATION TO 3 SERVICES

First-in-First-Out Scheme Adopted For R.C.A.F. May Apply To Army and Navy

Ottawa, Oct. 26 — (CP) — The "first-in-first-out" demobilization plan already announced for the R. C. A. F. probably will be applied to the army and navy as well, it was reliably learned today.

The first-in-first-out principal will have general application, but will not be mandatory and there will be ample provision made for special cases.

A sort of compassionate court likely will be established to deal with cases of married men with urgent responsibilities who might not qualify under the general plan, of farmers' sons needed to keep farms operating and of specialists needed by industry.

The plan is closely linked with Canada's Pacific effort, which will be on reduced scale compared with the European war plan. A partial demobilization likely will follow the end of the war against Germany and it is then that the first-in-first-out program will be launched.

Gradual Process Seen.

Air Minister Power announced the general demobilization program at a recent press conference, but he did not say when it would start. It was suggested, however, that it would be a gradual process as far as the Air Force was concerned and spread over many months. Great problems of distance and transportation have to be solved.

He emphasized he expected no trouble in raising the re-volunteer squadrons he is going to send to the Pacific.

British Partial Demobilization.

The British Conference has already announced a program of partial demobilization to follow the end of the war in Europe, coupled with special Pacific campaign pay. However it is believed here that the Canadian Government will not provide any special pay for Pacific service. Canadian service pay already is on the highest scale among Allied fighting powers whereas British pay is among the lowest.

'Britain Should Be Proud of Canadians In Schelde Estuary as of Own Sons'

London, Oct. 26 — (CP Cable) — "Britain should be as proud of the Canadians fighting for the Schelde Estuary as of her own sons," war correspondent Noel Monks wrote today in the London Daily Mail.

"I don't think the people of Britain or of the Empire for that matter fully realize the magnificent job the Canadians have done and are doing in France, Belgium and Holland, or the significance of the task the Allied Command has assigned them — the opening up of the port of Antwerp," said Monks, who has recently been assigned to the 1st Canadian Army.

"There will be no Berlin for us this winter, militarily speaking, if the Canadians' present operations are not successful. It is a great tribute to the Dominion of Canada that her sons should be given the key role in this operation.

"From the day the first convoy sails into Antwerp, I believe you can really start reckoning when the war will end. That is how the operations on which the Canadians are committed can be assessed."

Monks said he was in New Guinea, Salerno and Normandy and nowhere has there been tougher fighting than in the Schelde Estuary. Canadians, he added, "are dying every minute of every hour in the Schelde pocket."

Allied Forces Land On South Shore Of Beveland Island

Strike to Clear Nazi Guns Blocking Ships to Antwerp

By WILLIAM FRYE
(AP War Correspondent)

London, Oct. 26—(AP)—The German hgh command announced today that Allied forces, striking to clear the last Nazi guns blocking Allied convoys from Antwerp had landed on the south shore of Beveland Island.

"Countermeasures are in progress," the communique said, indicating the amphibious forces already had made good a bridgehead on the north side of the Schelde estuary. Berlin did not identify the forces landing in south Beveland but they were presumed to be Canadian.

Earlier Berlin broadcasts that Walcheren, another island north of the estuary, had been invaded by Allied land and sea forces were not borne out by the communique.

The landing apparently was made under the protection of a dense morning fog which swept in from the North Sea and came as Allied forces, fighting through hip-deep water, forged slowly ahead to clear the sea approaches to Antwerp.

Pincers Tightened

Field Marshal Montgomery's pincers tightened relentlessly on Germans clinging to the water-logged deltas and islands of southwest Holland, with the enemy giving ground all the way from Bergen Op Zoom to 'S Hertogenbosch.

Driving in from the east on 11,000 Germans trapped on Walcheren the Canadians fought through thick fog and traversed half the length of the two-mile-wide, 10-mile-long neck to the connecting island of South Beveland. They captured Rilland on the way.

The progress was along single roads raised over wastes of water left by the flooding of the islands.

South of the railway the Canadians were fighting in the streets of Oostburg, four miles southeast of Cadzang where the enemy's last guns block the estuary from the south. They also recaptured Fort Frederik-Hendrik and reached the outskirts of Groede, 4 1-2 miles northeast of Cadzand.

BRITISH SHIPYARDS HOLD RECORD FOR PRODUCTION

London, Oct. 26 —(CP)— British shipyards, despite achievements in the United States and aCnada, have still the highest output per man in the world. Two million tons of merchant shipping and 500,000 tons of warships have been built in one British centre since war began and a big war construction program still is in hand. This centre, although important, is by no means Britain's largest.

$70,508,450 IS COLLECTED 3RD DAY OF LOAN CAMPAIGN

Accumulated Total So Far is Standing at $216,038,550

Ottawa, Oct. 26 — (CP)—A total of $70,508,450 was collected yesterday for Canada's $1,300,000,000 Seventh Victory Loan and the accumulated total for the first three days of the three-week campaign stood at $216,038,550.

The amount collected yesterday is just about the daily average which must be maintained if the minimum objective is to be achieved but well below what must be recorded if the all-time high of $1,407,000,000 reached in the sixth loan is to be exceeded. The loan is now about $20,000,000 ahead of the third day of selling in the sixth loan.

Of yesterday's total $37,913,000 came from individual purchasers bringing the amount they have bought to date up to $83,399,100. In the sixth loan individuals purchased $643,700,000 worth of bonds or an average of about $37,500,000 a day.

Subscriptions Monday amounted to $68,260,300 and on Tuesday $77,269,800 was raised.

"While the loan, at the moment, appears to be going well, it should be remembered that the minimum objective is $100,000,000 higher than the last loan and that canvassing started in the armed forces as early as Oct. 12," a loan official said. "There are still 15 days of canvassing and still more than $1,000,000,000 in bonds to be sold before this loan can be declared a success. Every salesman and canvasser must continue an all-out effort and every Canadian must buy to the maximum."

Last night, the three armed services announced a total to date of $24,267,050 for just better than 50 per cent of their final total of $47,853,200 in the last drive. Organizers expressed confidence that the service total this time will reach at least $50,000,000.

Officials at loan headquarters described the leadership of the armed forces as "a splendid inspiration for Canadians generally."

POLICE COURT

Eighteen Thurlow residents were summoned into County Police Court, held before Magistrate A. B. Collins K.C., today, charged with failure to procure their 1944 township dog licences. The charges were preferred by Bruce Martin, township tax collector, after initial warnings and tax notices had been properly served upon the parties in question. However, today there was a marked absence of such defendants in the court. His Worship ordered the personal service of summonses be issued following which the cases will be disposed with regardless as to whether the defendants are present in court or not.

Pleads Guilty to Theft.

Mrs. Violet Hindmarsh, Toronto, pleaded guilty to breaking and entering the home of Mrs. A. Adams, Huntingdon Township, and stealing a quantity of silverware and linen. She was given a three months suspended sentence upon the payment of the court costs. "This woman was a companion of the party we have charged with the actual offence", said Crown Attorney Donnan, after Provincial Constable Don Carruthers told of recovering some of the goods taken from Mrs. Adams' home in Mrs. Hindmarsh's Toronto home. The offence is alleged to have taken place last July.

Cecil Levely, also of Toronto, was arraigned on a similar charge, but his case was not heard today. Levely is being held in custody pending a medical examination, Mr. Donnan added.

Traffic Cases.

Gordon Waterson, Mountain View, admitted to a charge of speeding, preferred under the War Measures Act, and contributed $17.50, including costs. Failing to give a proper signal on a highway, cost Robert Galloway, Trenton, $5, while the same fine was assessed A. H. Bonisteel, also of Trenton, after being convicted of the improper passing of motor vehicles on the highway'. Two minor L.C.A. cases concluded the morning's proceedings.

Pheasant Shoot Reported Good

Point Traverse, Oct. 26—The two-day pheasant shoot held in the township of South Marysburgh on Friday and Saturday last, brought out a horde of hunters to that game preserve.

The armed invasion of the English ringneck pheasant coveys, brought heavy casualties among the birds the first day, and many a fine cock bird fell before the two-day pheasant season closed on Saturday night.

Guns boomed from dawn until dusk, and the attacking force of hunters moved alertly through the township's square miles of marsh and brushland.

Cecil Bongard of Milford was the first man to fill his bag with the three birds the law allowed for one day's shooting.

While hunters from Picton, Bloomfield, Wellington, Belleville and north Hastings participated in the shoot, game overseers kept a check on bag limits and confined shooting within the allotted hours.

Happy Reunion of British War Bride And Husband Fails to Materialize

Immediate happy reunion of husband and wife who have not seen each other for several months does not always follow as result of the hundreds of English war brides who in past months are coming to Canada to establish new homes in an adopted country.

True, with possible exceptions, trains are met on schedule and the returned soldier husband meets his wife and children as happy reunions at railroad stations frequently testify. But occasionally something goes wrong.

One of those unfortunate incidences when well-laid plans went awry with subsequent anxiety on the part of a strange young war bride was enacted in Belleville early Wednesday morning when an expected husband failed to meet the train.

Enroute to Princess Lake, near the Hastings-Renfrew border, the young war bride, Mrs. Julius Gorgerat and her two small children, Annie aged 2½ and Gordon, only a few months old, detrained at Belleville at three o'clock Wednesday morning. But the soldier husband, who received his discharge from the army last June and was returned to Canada, had not met the train.

Met by Mayor

Previously informed, that several war brides and their children would be arriving on the train, Rev. Beauchamp Payne and Mayor Harry Rollins were at the station as a welcoming committee and assisted in getting several of the travellers off to their various destinations. Although the husband was momentarily expected hotel accommodation was found for Mrs. Gorgerat with plans later made for her to continue on to her destination by way of the Bancroft bus on Wednesday afternoon.

In the meantime local Red Cross officials were informed from Bancroft that the husband had definitely left to meet his English wife in Belleville.

Journey Delayed

Come Wednesday afternoon and bus time, courageous Mrs. Gorgerat and her two restless children were on hand at the bus station to start her journey north. Again, however, a telephone conversation assured, that the husband was on his way to Belleville and the bus was permitted to leave without the English mother and her two children. Another night at the hotel followed but Thursday morning the husband had still failed to put in appearance.

Speaking with the Ontario Intelligencer Mrs. Gorgerat told that her husband expected to take a farm to provide a home for her at Princess Lake. Coming from Sussex county where her father worked as a farmer, she said she was looking forward to farming in Canada. "It will be nothing new to me" she confided.

Keeping a brave heart despite the fact her husband had for the time being failed to meet her in Belleville as expected, the young English war bride and her two children will go on to Bancroft today, there to await further developments.

At the close of this enjoyable program the chairman called upon Miss Lorna Mikel who read an address to the bride and groom, signed on behalf of their friends by Mrs. Harry Montgomery, Mrs. Lloyd Hanna and Miss Mikel. The happy couple were presented with a miscellaneous shower. Gifts ranged in great variety both useful and ornamental. Mr. and Mrs. Morrow both expressed their thanks for the kindness of everyone in giving them such a lovely shower of gifts. "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows" was sung. Lunch was served and a social hour spent.

Previous to the wedding Miss Jean Morrow entertained a number of Mrs. Morrow's girl friends to wish Donna joy and happiness on the eve of her marriage. A cup and saucer shower was tendered her on this occasion.

Mrs. P. E. Bonisteel had charge of the program, reading the Scripture lesson, Luke 10: 28-37. A responsive reading from the Missionary Monthly was conducted by Mrs. Sine and Mrs. Dickson. Mrs. Lackey led in prayer. Mrs. Morrow sang "God's Hand is Everywhere." Former Queen Victoria Eugenie came from Switzerland by air to be at her mother's side. A son, the Marquis of Carisbrooke, also was in London. Two other children are dead.

Princess Beatrice died at Brantbridge Park, near the Balcombe, Sussex, home of Lord Athlone and Princess Alice. She had been in residence there since 1940.

The official bulletin announcing her death read: "Her Royal Highness died peacefully in her sleep at 5:10 a.m., this morning."

It is expected the King will order a period of court mourning.

Christened Beatrice Marie Victoria Feodore but known all her life simply as Princess Beatrice, she was Governor and Captain of the Isle of Wight since the death of her husband, Prince Henry of Battenberg, in 1896.

Had Title of Coroner

As Governor, she had the title of coroner for the island, the only woman in Britain to hold it. She never held inquiries, however, the duties being discharged by a deputy coroner.

Princess Beatrice spent much of each year in Carisbrooke Castle. She was an enthusiastic autograph collector, her albums containing the signatures of most European rulers and celebrities of the past 50 years. She also collected phonograph records of classical music, and was noted for her paintings.

She was married to Prince Henry in 1886 on the Isle of Wight. Prince Henry died of fever aboard a British warship off the African coast after taking part in the Ashanti campaign of 1895.

Princess Beatrice was an aunt of the late King George V, the late Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany and Queen Marie of Rumania.

T.L.C. FAVORS

The Congress approved the sending of congratulatory messages to Prime Minister Churchill, Marshal Stalin and President Roosevelt.

The convention now is in its third day and officials are attempting to have business completed by the weekend but a number of resolutions and other business has yet to be considered.

Among numerous resolutions considered earlier were those asking mendments to the Ontario hours and vacations act; legislation prohibiting the establishment of home workshops by any industry; the elimination of daylight saving time; extension of provisions of the workmen's compensation act and unemployment insurance to employees of hospitals which have a schedule of rates.

The congress urged that subsidies be granted to assist in the construction of homes for workers in low-income groups, and that an adequate building code and inspection plan be established.

Delegates criticized the government's cost-of-living index on the ground that it aws "not a true and accurate index of the cost-of-living for the vast majority of Canadian workers. By resolution the congress asked for revision of the index and establishment of regional indices to reflect differences in living costs in various parts of Canada.

The congress called for mandatory legislation providing two weeks' annual holidays with pay and pa for all statutory holidays, and proposed also collective bargaining rights and payment of time and one-half for overtime to all government employees.

The convention requested the Ontario Liquor Control Board to allow beverage rooms to stay open from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m., and called upon the government to make adequate supplies of beer available.

"...over and above the call of duty"

AB. Michael Kerwin of Billings Bridge, Ont., who has served on H.M.C.S. HAIDA since this famed Canadian destroyer was commissioned.

Wounded, burned and temporarily blinded, Able Seaman Michael Kerwin dashed back into the blazing gun turret from which he had escaped . . .

THE night of August 6th, Canadian and British destroyers patrolling the coast of France, opened fire on a seven-ship German convoy escaping from St. Nazaire.

All seven German ships were sunk, but a gun turret on H.M.C.S. HAIDA suffered a direct hit. Through searing flame and blinding smoke, Able Seaman Michael Kerwin staggered to safety. Then, though wounded and burned, fought his way back through the blazing inferno to rescue a shipmate.

Who can read of such heroism without quickened heartbeat, a feeling of pride, that this is a man of Canada . . . one of the hundreds of thousands who are daily risking their lives . . . on sea, on land, and in the air?

These fighting men of Canada, and thousands of women too, look to us at home to support their efforts until the very last shot is fired. Though the part we play is small in comparison, can any one of us turn our backs on them and say, "I've done my share—you don't need my help."

They do need your help—and the more you help, the quicker they can get their dangerous part of the job over with and be back home again.

Every dollar you invest in Victory Bonds is helping a fighting man. At the same time, every dollar you invest in Victory Bonds is helping you to create a nest-egg of savings for the future.

An Example

Under the shadow of the solemn Peace Tower on Parliament Hill, a 23 year old veteran of this war appeared before the microphone ready to signal the launching of a new warship at Lauzon, Quebec.

Before a huge crowd, gathered to take part in the inspiring opening ceremony for the Seventh Victory Loan Campaign, he was being briefly questioned by the Master of Ceremonies about his record overseas. He was Lieutenant Erskine Grant Travers of Summerside, Prince Edward Island.

"And you're wounded?" said the Master of Ceremonies.

"Yes," replied Travers modestly, and then added quickly with a note of thankfulness in his voice, "but I've got one good eye left and that's better than none."

There were many in that crowd on Parliament Hill whose throats were tightened by a sudden realization of the tremendous significance which lay behind the simple words of this repatriated soldier. And his statement remains significant as the Seventh Victory Loan Campaign proceeds.

An eye cannot be replaced. Money can. If Canadians are imbued with the same spirit as this repatriated Prince Edward Islander has displayed and people in all provinces can be thankful that they have a great deal more money left than is necessary for the minimum success of the Seventh Victory Loan Campaign, there will again be a huge over-subscription.

Thermopylae

The pass of Thermopylae where 300 Spartans and King Leonidas with 1,000 supporting troops held back the Persian invaders in the fifth century before Christ and saved western civilization by giving up their lives has seen the passage of two and a half milleniums of time since those immortal deeds were enacted there. Now it has just witnessed the ignominious flight of the world's vilest soldiery, the occupation Huns who had dominated as far as they could the classic land of Greece. The Spartans died at Thermopylae to win an eternal fame, but the present day enemy of humanity raced for his life past this scene which fills any man possessing true instinct of courage with the glory of the deeds of Leonidas and his men.

The Huns made no Thermopylae in Greece. They couldn't because the Nazi Hun is without principle, he is a sort of another Hitler, or Himmler or Goering. Not so were the Spartans of 480 B.C., whose deeds live forever. No soldier made in the stamp mill of Hitler, Himmler, Goering, Ribbentrop, Ley or Goebbels can be guided by such noble instincts as the Spartans of old, for everything of the Hitler regime is founded on lies, brutality, dishonor and treachery. From such vile roots have grown the Nazi horrors. From their very name the world will shrink in future as if feeling the contamination of anything that was associated with Hitler and his henchmen.

Today the descendants of the same race as produced the Spartans of Thermopylae are coming out victorious over the Nazi war machine. They are still inspired by the deeds of Leonidas and his three hundred warriors. Hitler's Huns do no illustrious deeds.

Now the Huns who came like rats are scurrying away to save their hides. Their every deed but adds ignominy and dishonor to their name. No memorial will mark their passage. Like a curse which has been removed the Huns depart. Greece feels already the eternal sunshine of her spirit again as she faces the future. In many a place in this land of heroes Thermopylaes and Marathons have been fought, battles of the guerillas against the oppressor, many a Salamis sea battle has been waged with Greek seamen and mariners in the Allied cause. With a heritage such as this land which first lighted the lamp of civilization in Europe possesses, Greece will recover from the years of domination of her land which failed to touch her spirit.

Everyone recalls how Lord Byron, one of the greatest spirits in England in the cause of liberation of Greece over a century ago and who died as a result of his services in the Greek cause of freedom spoke of the coming day of liberty for Greece. He saw the light of freedom returning to Greece. True prophet as well as true poet Byron said:

"The mountains look on Marathon,
And Marathon looks on the sea;
And musing there an hour alone
I dreamed that Greece might still be free.
For standing on the Persians' grave
I could not deem myself a slave."

Greece was freed over a century ago. But three years ago the Hun oppressor came from the north. She has survived through her true greatness, her courage and fortitude in danger and trial.

Penicillin Eats Poison

(Australian News Letter)

An officer on night patrol in New Guinea was bitten on the upper arm by an insect or spider, he thought. He felt a burning, stab-like sensation.

A lump rose on his arm to the size of a cricket ball. It was cut away and drained, but the patient went downhill quickly. The poison spread, his hair fell out, and he lost more than three stone in weight. His blood disease defied diagnosis.

His life was ebbing away, and then came penicillin. In a letter to his father the officer said:

"I was very ill when treatment began, but after the first dose of pencillin I never looked back. A fortnight later I was out of the wood in spite of weakness and debility—at times in spite of myself.

"I watched other patients responding to 'the magic soup.' Eyes quickly became clear and bright, color crept back into wan cheeks, appetites returned, feverish temperatures fell, pulse and respiration approached normal.

"The weather during my treatment was hot and muggy. Jungle heat. Any breeze that did find its way through the wards reeked of the mould and slush of the jungle and its insect-infested swamps.

"Mosquitoes did not wait until night to attack, but buzzed about in the middle of the day. There were sudden changes of temperature, which had us calling for blankets. But some nights were hotter than the days. A hell of a country.

"Through it all our medical men, nurses and orderlies fought not only the disease of their patients, but infection themselves.

"So you see that penicillin, on a far from satisfactory battleground, is winning a war against the most dreaded tropical diseases. It has saved scores of lives already.

Short on Clothes

(George Slocombe in London Express)

It is time somebody exploded the myth that when we came to Paris we found a city of beautifully dressed women and prewar elegance.

The fact is that ninety-nine per cent of the women of Paris have had practically no new clothes to wear for four years. A pretty girl in a light colored frock on a brilliant summer day—such as that of the liberation—may pardonably look elegant to a dusty soldier fresh from country villages where the normal dress of the peasant girl is drab and sombre.

But no Englishwoman would for a moment be deceived by the illusion of sunshine and brilliant color and graceful design.

Petitions

Signing petitions means little these days, The Charlottetown Guardian observes. The Government once undertook to analyze a monster one presented to them, and discovered (a) many of the names were in the same handwriting, (b) some of the subscribers repudiated their signatures, (c) others declared they signed merely to oblige the canvasser but otherwise were uninterested.

The discoverer of penicillin which has saved thousands of lives, has been awarded the Nobel Prize for Medicine. Sir Alexander Fraser has earned the deathless gratitude of the world for what he has achieved.

JUST FOLKS

(Copyright, 1944, Edgar A. Guest)

By EDGAR A. GUEST

ANTIQUE COLLECTOR

Well, I suppose, no worse it looks
Than search of man for ancient books,
But man will go his way alone
For folios he wants to own,
While hubby's company woman seeks
When she goes prowling for antiques.

"Come with me!" such a wife implores,
"To treasure hunt the moldy stores.
Come with me! howsoe'er you tire,
To find old andirons for the fire!
Today I know of auction sales
Of Duncan Phyfes and Chippendales!"

But man who vowed that he would die
Her fondest wish to gratify
Says: "Nothing doing! On your way!
At home I much prefer to stay.
No love have I for ancient dust,
Worm-eaten wood of metal rust!"

Thus man and wife, though one at heart
Pursuing hobbies draw apart,
For seldom any married pair
Enjoy a sport that both can share.
Alone she goes on wanderings
Whose passion is for ancient things.

YOU'D BE SURPRISED

By GEORGE W. STIMPSON

Protected, 1944, by The George Adams Service.

WHEN IS EVENING?

"Evening" has been applied to different part of the day at different times and places.

The term is derived from Anglo-Saxon "aefen," which is akin to "after" and which signified after, late or behind.

Originally the evening was merely the latter part of the day.

Strictly speaking, according to modern usage, evening is from sunset to dusk. The word, however, is also commonly used to mean the close or latter part of the day and the beginning of darkness or the earlier part of night; from five to six o'clock, for instance, until the average bedtime.

In some parts of the United States as well as in the British Isles the early significance of the word is retained and the entire afternoon until dark is called evening. Where this usage prevails there is no afternoon; the entire time between dinner (or luncheon) and supper or sunset is evening and immediately after that it is night.

Writing in 1871, Schele de Vere said: "Evening, in the South and West, takes the place of the afternoon—the time between dinner and supper being evening, and after supper night. Persons meeting at two or three o'clock, wish each other 'Good Evening,' and speak of a 'fine night' or promise to 'come tonight,' although the sun may but just have sunk below the horizon."

In the Hebrew version of the Old Testament the phrase "between the two evenings" occurs several times. This probably referred to the interval between sunset and the end of twilight or complete darkness.

In Genesis 3:8 this period is called "the cool of the day" to distinguish it from "the head of the day" or midday.

According to the Talmud, the "first evening" began about three o'clock in the afternoon when the sun started to decrease, while the "second evening" began at sunset, which was the beginning of the day as a twenty-four hour period.

The Romans divided the night into four watches—evening, midnight, cock-crowing and morning.

SPLITTING HAIRS.

Hair grows at the rate of about one-half inch a month, faster in summer than in winter. The life of a hair when it has grown to full length is from two to four years. Then it falls and a new hair grows in its place, one always hopes.

It is doubtful whether any local remedy has any effect on falling hair, except suitable remedies for dandruff if there is much dandruff.

Nails, hair and skin are much the same material, likewise eyebrows and eyelashes. To imagine any locally applied chemical, drug, food or substance will in the slightest degree increase the growth or change the vitality or physical condition of brows, lashes, nails, hair or skin is just plain silly.

Splitting of hairs indicates some deficiency of or interference with the nutrition of the hair (through the blood stream of course, just as skin, nails, eyelashes and eyebrows are nourished), such as a scalp disease, general nutritional deficiency, impaired health, or the harm done by the use of hot curling irons or extreme heat in putting an artificial wave in the hair or excessive heat for drying the hair after shampoo or wave or the quaint process of singeing the hair—as the ignorant hair dresser says "to prevent bleeding from the cut ends". Of course nothing of the sort occurs.

The habit of thrusting sharp pins through coils or braids of hair accounts for many split hairs, for such a pin thrust may split a dozen hairs at a thrust.

When general nutritional deficiency is the cause of splitting hairs (as it is of splitting, fragile, thin, ridged or spooned nails in many instances) the individual should supplement his or her daily diet with an adequate ration of vitamins D and B-Complex, as explained in the pamphlet "Old Folks and Young Folks", mailed on request if you provide stamped, self-addressed envelope.

If the scalp is too dry or if there is much dandruff suitable skin oil or pomade should be regularly applied, to the scalp, not to the hair, as directed in "Care of the Hair and Control of Dandruff"—this pamphlet mailed on request if you provide stamped self-addressed envelope. If you ask for both, enclose ten cents. Do not send a clipping of this item.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Pyorrhea.

I am told you had an article stating that pyorrhea can be treated with diathermy. Is there a doctor in. . . . (H.P.)

Answer—No. On request, if you provide stamped self addressed envelope, I will send you a pamphlet describing the best treatment I can suggest for the condition. Please do not use a clipping in lieu of your own request.

Breathing

Some time ago I obtained Rodriguer's Secret of Breathing, but, like yourself, I do not think it consistent to tighten the lower diaphragm too much.

(Miss L. M. A.)

Answer—There is no lower diaphragm. There is just one diaphragm, and that stretches smack across the middle of the great body cavity, separating the chest cavity from the abdominal cavity. Many vocal instructors, athletic coaches and mail-order merchants teach absurd methods of breathing. No matter whether it be for general health, voice, athletic endurance or improvement of circulation, there is but one right way to breathe and that is natural breathing, belly breathing, as the untaught savage breathes, as the animal breathes. Just remember that the belly expands as you draw in air. That's all. If you want to learn how to breathe send twenty-five cents and stamped envelope bearing your address, for booklet "How to Breathe" —you must ask for it, not send a clipping.

MacDonald May Leave Federal Political Theatre

Ottawa, Oct. 26 (CP) — Navy Minister Macdonald has told Liberal organizers in his Kingston, Ont. constituency he will not run in that riding again and the likelihood is that he will leave the Federal field altogether and either return to Nova Scotia politics or accept an important government post—possibly a judgeship — it was reliably learned here today.

It was understood that Mr. Macdonald, former Premier of Nova Scotia, feels that his work in Ottawa is just about finished and it is known he is anxious to get back to his native province.

When Prime Minister Mackenzie King was re-organizing his war cabinet in 1940, he called on the slim, deep-voiced Maritimer to take the new naval portfolio. The lawyer-college professor resigned his premiership and ran in a Kingston by-election resulting from the death in an airplane crash of Hon. Norman McL. Rogers, then Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Macdonald has given a guiding hand in the development of the Canadian navy from a small force of a few ships and 1,700 men to its present strength of nearly 800 ships and 90,000 men and women.

With the possibility of the Federal election being held in the spring, Mr. Macdonald is said to feel that the navy's role will be clearly defined and of diminishing importance by then and a demobilization plan will be well advanced. Hence he feels he can leave his post without adding any weighty responsibility to a successor or his war cabinet colleagues.

Brig. Tom Lewis Killed in Action

With the Canadians in Holland, Oct. 26 (CP Cable)—The body of Brig. Tom Lewis of Montreal, one of the most popular commanders in the Canadian army, has been found on the battlefield in the Scheldt pocket.

Here the Montreal Brigadier, who formerly commanded the 17th Duke of York's Canadian Hussars, a reconnaissance unit which was among the forces to land on D-Day, led his men in some of western Europe's bitterest fighting.

He was the first Canadian Brigadier killed in action in this theatre.

A Lieutenant-Colonel and acting Brigadier, Brig. Lewis left his headquarters a week ago in a jeep to visit one of his forward units. En route, he met machine-gun fire from an enemy position and with his driver scrambled into a ditch, after which artillery fire came down on the German positions. When the artillery lifted, the driver scrambled from the ditch wounded and Brig. Lewis was dead.

With Canadians on the Adriatic.—He didn't want to have his name mentioned, but he is the Hasty Pee that gave a Nazi paratrooper sergeant directions to Hell— with emphasis.

Rowdy Lads.

It happened when two platoons of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment got trapped in a house completely surrounded by Germans in the village of Maria di Scacciano, eight miles south of Rimini, on a noisy day not so long ago.

The position was pretty black when the tall, thin infantryman invited the sergeant and a stretcher bearer into the house for "what the Jerries thought was a peace talk". The German NCO said in excellent English: "You English gentlemen would be wise to surrender". He was told: "We're not English. We're not gentlemen. And we ain't going to surrender".

That's only one of the many stories that the men of this Ontario regiment tell of the day—September 4—when war along the Adriatic combined the fairness of a cricket match with all the uproar of a free-for-all in a dark room.

The Canadians got so close to Jerry among the houses and in the shot-filled alleys of the little town that they could have shook his hand. And at one stage of the game it almost came to that.

Scacciano commanded the last high ground before the Marana river. On the night of September 3, a patrol made contact with the enemy. Then, under the changing light of a moon made fitful by low clouds, two platoons went in at 0430 hours the following day to lock for eight and one-half hours in violent street fighting with 60 of Hitler's best paratroopers.

A machine-gun post went out like a light under the Bren gun fire of Pte. Jim Staats, Niagara Falls, as the attacking force moved into the village.

Last Dance.

Soon after, both platoons were forced to take shelter from machine-gun fire in the same house. And that was when Jerry was told to go and do the rope trick. They were pinned in for six hours before they fought their way free, but not before Lieut. Krone, the paratroop officer who "danced around the house yelling for us to give up", was shot by Pte. Ed. Lafranvoise, Windsor, Ontario.

A handful of one of the two platoons later got caught in another house. They were upstairs, Jerry was down below. Sgt. Cliff Burnell, North Hatley, Quebec, escaped and went back to tell the company commander what the set-up was. Support couldn't be given them at the time so the men made a mad dash for freedom across a field—and made it.

Ptes. Bernard Arthurs, Lindsay, Ont., Glen Love, Toronto, and Pee Wee Matheson, Matheson, Ont., hid in a German-occupied house for 24 hours. "We could hear them moving around downstairs", Arthur said. Meanwhile, L.-Cpl. Norm Warner, Grimsby, Ont., was taken prisoner in the rooms below. His friends overhead heard him moving around and labelled him hostile game along with the rest. Not until the next day did they find out that he, too, had taken them for Jerries.

"They took my pay book and boots", Warner said. While his captors were otherwise occupied, he pulled bricks out of a wall to make an escape route, but halfway through the operation seven Germans came in and caught him at it. "They said that they were going to kill me, and so when they left again I enlarged the hole in a helluva hurry and crawled through into another room where I buried myself under a vino barrel".

He was rescued the following morning when he heard one of his regiment talking outside. "Then I had to walk two miles in my bare feet to headquarters".

Used As Decoy.

The only wrong move during the whole show that Sgt. Burnell saw the Germans pull was when they poked a Canadian around a haystack as decoy. "I thought the Canadian was doing the firing on us that had come from that direction so I told him to cut it out", he said.

In a stretcher party with the sergeant were Ptes. Len Homnick, Transcona, Man., and Andy Furto, Toronto.

Among the prisoners taken early in the game by the Hastings and Prince Edwards were a few Turkomen who had been shoved in to the fray apparently much against their will. They had taken a dim view of working for the Nazis.

The hard-pressed infantrymen had things pretty well under control in Scacciano but they were down to their last bullet when the British tanks showed up about 1330 hours.

"But those paratroopers still had fight in them", Cpl. Jimmie Barclay, Meaford, Ontario, said quietly. "They were a great bunch of soldiers. In fact, we ought to get a return game with them. Two out of three and we'd really take their pants off".

ESCAPES FROM JAPS

Above is a close-up of the Rev. Clifford J. King, of Detroit, Mich., recently returned from Mindanao Island, in the Philippines where he escaped after nearly 30 months as a fugitive in swamp and jungle. The priest was an eye-witness to terror and suffering, which he said, will startle the world.

Dog "Works" In Press Room

(By Frederick H. Kimball in "Our Dumb Animals".)

Printer's ink must surely flow in the veins of "Sox" a black and white mongrel dog of beagle-spaniel breed, owned by John P. Pattengill, of Watertown, N.Y. Eight years ago, Sox strayed into the press room of the Watertown Daily Times, liked the atmosphere and the roar of the press, and has returned daily except Sundays ever since.

Every morning Sox follows his master to a certain street intersection. That is the parting point. Here Mr. Pattengill bids the dog farewell for the day and Sox makes his way along several blocks to the Times Office. Though he is now nine years old, he still keeps rigidly to schedule. He arrives in front of the Times office at 8:15 a.m., always one of the first to report for "work". Upon arrival, he places his paw against the plate-glass window of the press room to attract attention of pressmen who then let him into the building.

The hustle of men at press time fascinates Sox. He is always on hand when it comes time to unload the heavy rolls of newsprint into the warehouse at the rear of the building.

At noon, Sox moves into the sterotype room where some of the men share their lunch with him. On cold afternoons Sox crawls into an ideal spot in the boiler room. Nobody worries about him, as his routine is known to his owner.

After the paper has gone to press, Sox knows it is time to quit. He usually gets back to the Pattengill residence about five o'clock.

While the dog is known as Sox, the animal was named "White Sox" because each of his four paws is white.

Weather or Not

(Christian Science Monitor)

This is about the weather—not about how changeable it has been but about weather reports. In Washington, D.C., there is a forecaster who, for a couple of weeks or so, has had the copy editors on the newspapers agog with his utterly different prognostications. Every time they called him to check the forecasts he'd answer that he meant exactly what he said.

Supposing, for instance, you picked up your paper this afternoon and in scanning the weather report this caught your eye. "Topcoats will be in order this evening, as it will be much colder than last night", or "Ladies, don't hang out your wash today, for it will not dry". This is the way Washingtonians are being told, "Fair and Cooler Tonight", or "Rain Today". Now there's a forecaster we can not only understand, but enjoy reading.

Oh, lest we forget—it will be a crisp, sunny day tomorrow with a big yellow moon flooding the sky all evening. Grand night for a walk, eh what?

SAVIO RIVER BEACH-HEAD WIDENED

With the Canadian Corps on the Adriatic, Oct. 25 — (CP Cable) — The Canadians' Savio river bridgehead was further enlarged today and the situation there is generally easier. The enemy has given up counter-attacks and was believed retiring to the next river barrier, the Bevano, which runs into the Adriatic four miles to the north.

War's Progress Eagerly Watched By Foch's Widow

Madame la Marechale, Now 85 Years Old, Keeps Posted on Allied Gains—Lives in Small French Town

With the U.S. Army in France, Oct. 26.—(CP)— A small 84-year-old lady in black, her sight dimmed but her other senses alert, is following the progress of the war battle, mile by mile, city by city, as the Allies march towards Berlin.

She is Madame la Marechale, widow of Ferdinand Foch, Commander-in-Chief of the Allied armies in the First Great War, and she leans forward and speaks rapidly when she talks of her husband and of his beliefs—beliefs which she feels have been proved wise by world events.

Temporarily a resident of a quiet town in liberated France, Madame Foch's presence is unknown even to most of the community's citizens. She follows the war by radio, when power is available. Other times she gets the news by word of mouth. Places which pop into prominence are familiar to her; she appears to know the terrain like a tactician.

One might imagine that it would satisfy a woman of Madame Foch's years to know that the Allies were advancing. But no; she wanted to know what was the farthermost town taken, and what were the distances with reference to the Belgian and German frontiers.

A Cordial Hostess.

Those Americans who have had the privilege of meeting her have found her more than cordial, and as eager as the folks at home for a guess on when the war will end. On the table by her armchair is a single handsome portrait of the late marshal. When a guest arrives and leaves she insists upon rising to shake hands.

The arrival of American troops has heartened her, she said, just as it gladdened her husband in 1917-18, to welcome the men in khaki, "so young, so fresh, and so vigorous". She knew, she added, that "America would not let France down".

Recalling General Pershing, she asked about his health. Marshal Foch accompanied him to Brest when the American leader sailed home, and on General Pershing's most recent visit to France he called on Madame Foch in Paris and in Brittany.

On the broad aspects of the war, she placed her opinion squarely behind the late marshal's—whose views are in his memoirs. The graying lady has a sage and mellow answer to the tremendous question "Can this troubled world prevent another war?"

"Something could be done", she said, "if the Allies will do as much for peace as they have done for war".

FRENCH FUNDS FROZEN

The funds were frozen after Ottawa broke off diplomatic relations with the Vichy Government.

Delegates to W.I. Convention Asked To Take Back Interesting Reports

"Begin with something inspiring in the very first sentence," said Miss Mary A. Clarke, superintendent of the W.I., at the morning session on Wednesday when she addressed primarily the delegates of the Women's Institute on the preparation of their reports of the convention which they take back to their various institutes for the benefit of their members.

Miss Clarke's audience listened to her in rapt attention when she spoke to them on this particular subject on the last day of the two-day convention which is being held in the Collegiate auditorium by the Belleville Area W.I. "You as conveners," she said, "should make out your own individual reports and take back to your institute members highlights of the convention which you think of special interest to them." The purposes of the reports are to give all institutes a picture of what the whole area is doing as expressed at the convention; to take back with you the information that will appeal and be most valuable to that individual institute; to promote more interest in institute work; to include new ideas; to inspire the leaders and members for the coming year and to record information for future reference."

Selection of Material Important.

"In preparing your report," continued Miss Clarke," you must remember that even if your meetings do not come for a month yet, the time for you to prepare that report is this coming weekend when everything is fresh in your minds." When beginning the report, try to crystalize into words the spirit of the convention. Then when you come to the body of the report, selection of material is important. The included musts are the main speakers and the theme of their addresses, the outstanding suggestions from conveners of standing committees, resolutions of convention, any changes in the organization of the area, report of elections and social functions, the program being the most interesting part of that particular phase.

Leave Out Routine Matter.

Finally comes the conclusion. "Go right back to your opening if you want ideas." You can finish with the same thought as you began. In the conclusion remarks, you should always try to return to general impressions. Speaking briefly on the matter of Group Discussions, Miss Clarke suggested that next year the conclusion of the discussion tie up all the ideas brought to light during the entire discussion. "The close is important," she stated. In telling the delegates not what to do, Miss Clarke said that the report should not sound like minutes. Meaningless adjectives should be avoided. The happy side of the convention should be mentioned also.

Touching on the subject of Standing Committee reports, she said that they should be concise and compiled in an organized manner. They must present suggestions for the future besides the resume of the past year's work. The one who gives the report moves its adoption. The members of the committee should watch carefully all year for material to include in the report and not wait till the last minute to prepare it.

Should Broaden Reports.

Mrs. F. M. Rutherford, of Bonarlaw, gave an excellent summary of Agriculture and Canadian Industries. She regretted that the districts had stressed agriculture and had almost forgotten the other industries. "Let us be broader in our scope," she urged. The reports as far as agriculture was concerned were excellent. One district appointed an agricultural representative whose duty it was to report at their district annual the activities of their County Federation of Agriculture. One institute had an address "Farmers' Wartime Problems" prepared by an official delegate to the Ontario Crop Improvement convention held in Toronto. Mrs. Rutherford read a sample program of one institute in its interest towards Agriculture and Canadian Industrials. She stressed the subjects of several reports which were given as part of these programs.

Mrs. Rutherford suggested that the women study the subject of Chemurgy of Agriculture. It is the amazing study of science whereby the products of agriculture are being transformed into innumerable products of industry. Examples of some of these are the products made from the casein in milk such as cloth, glossy paper, glue and plastic buttons.

Farming Brings Close Association

In closing, Mrs. Rutherford gave a few suggestions to the assemblage. She said that in no other industry does a man's wife take as prominent a place beside her husband as in farming. "Financial returns should be fair and adequate," she went on to say. "Agriculture is the foremost industry in Canada, and it gives employment to the largest number of people. Yet for years, it has received the smallest proportion of the national income. To solve this question, we must present a unified front. No mention was made in the district reports concerning Farm Forums," she said, "but yet the Farm Forum has been described as the most dynamic and effective instrument for adult education yet developed in Canada." She urged that Farm Forums be organized if the communities did not already have them. "Attend your County Federation Annual meeting, and send your women delegates to the annual Provincial meeting in Toronto," also suggested Mrs. Rutherford.

She also asked that the women study the Veterans' Land Act so as not to allow the mistakes of the last rehabilitation program to happen again, and to study too, the Credit Unions. Commenting on Mrs. Rutherford's resume was Miss Clarke who highly commended Mrs. Rutherford, particularly for her thought-provoking suggestions which are of so much interest to the rural civilization today.

War Services Report

In her report of War Services, Mrs. B. Tanner, Madoc, said that money had been raised through the medium of card games, dances, tagging, quilting quilts and raffles. Besides the quantities of sewing and knitting done for the services, 127 articles were donated to Russian Relief. Some branches reported sending books to the navy; some sent boxes to civilians in England; some helped in salvage drives and others aided the I.O.D.E. by sending papers and magazines. Mrs. Tanner suggested that a printed sheet be given each institute and each district convener and a similar one to the Area Convener in order that the reports be more uniform.

Contributions

From the Belleville Area with 40 branches reporting, total cash donations to War Charities amounted to $1337.39; knitted articles, 2792; sewn articles, 1960; quilts, 848; pounds of honey and jam, 2382; certificates and bonds bought, 195; money spent on supplies, $372.48; money spent on boxes sent overseas, $624.95; ditty bags $172.61; money raised for war work, $1,488.80; money spent on war work, $1,625.73; afghans, 8.

Thanked for Mobile Canteen

Appreciation to Mrs. Tanner was expressed by Mrs. Clarence Holmes, who commented briefly on the report. She also read a letter received from Mrs. Prescott, Provincial President of the W.I., in New Brunswick, who extended thanks to the Ontario Federation of the Women's Institute for the mobile canteen sent to the New Brunswick federation in the interests of the servicemen at the coast.

Mrs. R. Badgley presided for the morning session on Wednesday. A Question Box was conducted by Miss Clarke who answered in her most capable manner the questions of the Institute members at the convention submitted to the Box. A delightful diversion from the general routine of exercises was the community singing, led by Mrs. H. Harrison of Latta, and Miss G. Weese, of Belleville, as piano accompanist. A novel idea of the singing was the chorus of ladies picked from the assemblage who rendered as a choir several well known melodies.

Junior Branch Of W.I. Presents Splendid Program

Exemplifying an excellent year of training as members of the Sewing and Garden Clubs, the girls from the combined districts of Hastings, Northumberland and Prince Edward displayed, to the delight of the Women's Institute, horticultural and sewing exhibits at the Wednesday afternoon and concluding session of the W. I. convention in the Collegiate Auditorium. Through the efforts of Miss Jean Scott, Home Economics Coach, assisted by Mrs. G. A. Helson, the girls are learning the art of homemaking which will serve to prepare and equip them for the future essentials of life. Each and everyone of the girls in the sewing and garden clubs are proving enthusiastic students and are progressing "in fine stride" under the excellent teaching of their leaders.

Skits and Exhibits Presented.

The Ivanhoe Group in Hastings County had on show its club exhibit, "Clothes Closets Up-to-Date", which was commented on and discussed by Marion Mitts, one of its group members. The Plainfield group, also of Hastings County, presented a skit, "The Well Equipped Clothes Closet", demonstrating at the same time the sewing its members had done during the year on this particular subject. Margaret Davis, of the Maple Leaf Garden Brigade of North Hastings, spoke on her first experience as a club member, at the same time displaying vegetables the club had grown during the year. The Centre Garden Brigade, of Prince Edward County, enacted a skit "Let's Grow a Garden". This took the form of a club meeting with the leader, Mrs. Elmer Young in charge. Enid Hay, of Seymour East group in Northumberland County explained her exhibit "Cotton Accessories For The Club Girls' Bedroom". Shirley Harnden, of Grafton, and Muriel Jean Rutherford, of Wicklow and Vernonville, each displayed her bedroom accessories. Shirley had already completed eleven Homemaking Clubs and Muriel Jean, three sewing clubs and three garden clubs.

Girls' Work Report Given.

Prince Edward provided some variation as they studied a nutrition project "The Supper Club". Two Garden Brigades were active in Northumberland County. Hastings had several successful Warden Brigades this year as did Prince Edward. During the year seventy certificates of achievement and twelve county honor certificates were presented to club members.

YOU'D NEVER BELIEVE SHE IS 48 . . . .

She's one of the peppiest, happiest-spirited women you ever saw. At the time when most women think life is passing them by—she's right in the midst of things—always ready to go places and do things . . . as popular with the men as girls half her age. To look at her you would never believe she was a day over 38.

How does she do it? She gives the credit to Dr. Williams Pink Pills . . . for well she knows how important it is to have plenty of rich, red blood during those years when so many women are "pulled down" in health by bodily changes.

If you feel "always tired", if you look pale and dragged out, if you are suffering from a feeling of nervous exhaustion, are jittery and irritable, you may be paying the price of poor blood make-up. Don't wait—start Dr. Williams Pink Pills today. They contain an easily assimilable form of iron—fortified with a generous amount of Vitamin B₁—and are wonderfully effective in helping to build the rich, red blood so necessary to vigor and energy. It is en- ightening to get the viewpoint of member of the stern sex concern- g the appearance of the sisters. "I like to have good looking men in my offices, and by that mean, trim, neatly groomed, well t up women. But I do not want m beauty conscious; they are a turbing element. The girl who ncies herself a charmer seems to agine that every man around the ce is in love with her or about be. She spends a good deal time getting out beauty props d rearranging her hair. She y be efficient, do her work all ht, but she just doesn't belong th people who have their noses the grindstone. A capable wom- n buckles down to the job, has cial affairs outside the place of ployment".

Considering how many good look- g young women there are in this oubled world, it doesn't seem as a fair appearance is anything to steamed up about. The smart man who is thus blessed takes r good looks for granted. They y be an inheritance for which e cannot very well take credit. course good features and a raceful figure are just the foun- ations of beauty. The trimmings me through fastidious grooming, rupulous cleanliness, fine regard r the details for the toilette.

Vanity is as plain to the behold- r as is the color of a girl's hair or he lines of her figure. It is an notion that is out of date, does ot belong to our modern era. It is expected that a girl will look her best, then forget about appearance. If she is continually looking in mirrors, there is something wrong inside her head.

Because of lack of the power of observation many a smart girl has kicked herself out of a good job. Consider the one who carries with her the offensive odor of perspiration. She may bathe daily, but that isn't enough in some cases. She should use a deterrent, a deodorant, have her frocks and coats cleaned frequently. Wool fabrics have a stubborn way of hanging onto the nauseating evidence of exudations from the sweat glands. And the sweater season approaches!

Well kept hands are an asset. Nail polish should not be too brilliant if one is a stenographer; some men don't like to see blood red claws, and one might as well bear with them. Tone down the glimmer.

The click-clack of high heels on an uncarpeted office floor is a disturbing element. Don't think the boss doesn't hate it. The giggling, chatty girl who sits on men's desks turns on siren charms, is a pest. Also, it is not a good idea to get into office politics, criticizing the higher-ups. Word gets around.

The career girl must be efficient, look efficient. Her frocks should be smart and plain—plain ones are smarter than fussy ones.

FASHION FLASHES

A RETURN VISIT is being paid by the high, intricately-draped turban. Pearl gray and mauve satin is twisted with almond brown velvet to make a very high turban beautifully draped in front.

Plenty of use for a long, long Ascot of pale blue satin with a deep border of nutria. Grand as a scarf and even better as a sash. Nice in pink, too.

Beating the cold, yet looking pretty, is always an interesting problem. One solution, for wear with afternoon or evening things is a long, very wide stole of black or white jersey spangled with big multi-colored sequins, which are also used in solid formation to make a deep border.

Most beautiful frock for evening wear seen in a long time is a soft, fluidly graceful model in shimmering gold tissue. The long, tight bodice has wide shoulder straps that serve as sleeves, and the skirt falls long and full from a hip-cuff of cartridge pleats.

A deft hand had mixed this season's color schemes. A splendid color combination is a coat of bright red woollen lined with soft, brown nutria and worn over a simple jumper dress of wool jersey in deep pink.

It's wonderful to spice up a black coat or simple suit with a colorful hat. Sapphire-blue satin is used for a small padre trimmed with glycerined ostrich in wood-brown fading to smoke-gray.

Reducing by the Kilowatt

Leslie Brooks has a beautiful figure.

By HELEN FOLLETT

MRS. PLUMPIE wants to be as thin as a shadow; she is tired of lugging around adipose baggage. But, sometimes the idea of any muscular effort more strenuous than lifting an eyebrow is more than she can endure. Let her pull out the old check book, toddle to a reducing salon. She can fight her fat by the kilowatt system.

She will be put to bed between electric blankets. Much more comfortable than sitting in a blistering cabinet as happened in the past, looking like a turtle, with head protruding from its shell. She will sweat. Perspire is not an adequate word. The old steam room in the Turkish bath to which ladies retired to get rid of their cushions was chilly compared to these electrified blankets.

Brisk Rub Down.

She will have a hot bath with a brisk rub down, then the shower. A strong-armed amazon will pummel her from neck to heels. She may emit screams of protest at being handled so roughly. And a lot of good it will do her. Operators are out to demolish fat cells, and gentle pats will not crush them. At this stage of the treatment, the patient may wish that she had minded her diet not permitted herself to take on curves.

She will mount the electric horse that trots and gallops, the purpose being to put blood streams through their paces, to weaken the adipose load.

Exercise on Normaliser.

Then comes exercise on the normaliser, a device consisting of straps with loops hanging from the ceiling. She slips her hands through the loop and, while she is suspended in mid-air, her body is turned and twisted at the waistline.

There is a pleasant rest period during which face, neck and arms receive professional attention. Ice is used freely, then a fragrant astringent, after which the poor exhausted dear is permitted to take a nap. And does she need it? She does!

GOOD MANNERS

How to Reply to "I'm Glad to Have Met You"

We read and hear so much about how to make a good first impression. Perhaps not enough about how to make a good last impression, particularly on people to whom you've just been introduced.

[illegible] you reply to the gracious person who [illegible] an introduction and perhaps a chat with you, "I'm very glad to have met you". What do you reply? Just "Thank you"? That's not enough. And yet that's just what we hear any number of people saying in too-casual reply.

Your reply to this friendly "I'm very glad to have met you" MUST have two parts (1) a "Thank you" for the kindly words; and (2) some words that "return" this expression of interest in the meeting. In other words, it isn't enough just to say "Thank you", for this doesn't tell the person that you too enjoyed the meeting. So, remembering that you want to make a good last impression, say, "Thank you. I'm so glad to have met you".

And, to tuck in your memory for future use, there are nice variations of this reply, graceful and easy to say, pleasant word-souvenirs of you for your new acquaintance. For example, add the person's name, either to your "Thank you", or to the succeeding sentence. Or vary your reply a bit, "Thank you, Miss Allen. I've enjoyed our meeting so much, too, and it was a great pleasure to have a chat with you" . . . "Thank you. I'm so happy to have met you too, and I do hope we'll meet again (or 'soon', or 'very soon')." A helpful suggestion: see if you don't find it easier, certainly more original to reply with a different word from "glad", if this is the word the other person used; for example, try the word "happy".

These gracious replied are mighty important'. . . . they may be lines to the starting of a fine friendship!

Gift is Not Necessary.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

When I go to pay a visit to a person who has lost some one in the service, should I take a gift of some kind? If so, should I take it on the first or second visit?

A. B. G.

If you mean when you go to make a call of sympathy on this bereaved woman, the answer is that it is not necessary for you to take a gift, although for you to take her a box of flowers would be a sweet and kind way for you to show your thoughtful friendliness. If you mean when you go to visit her for some days in her home, it would be appropriate for you to take a gift, as most guests do when they go for a visit; or take some simple gift when you go, and, when you send your thank-you note, send a more important gift to show your appreciation of her hospitality.

White also mentioned that had been lack of training as ced in the troops sent to Kong and even more recent- ung men had been sent to ont without proper training ll as soldiers, who had been wounded two or three times being sent back to the fighting areas. Through the plebiscite, restrictions had been removed from the Government so they could send men where they liked. 70,000 men had been trained in this country who remain here for what. He also closed with a tribute to the late R. A. Elliott.

Weighs Questions Well.

In introducing the guest speaker, Gordon Fraser, M. P., said he first met him at Churchill Junction, when taking a trip with his family. "The more you known him, the more you'll like him", he told the audience. "He weighs each question well, was the premier of Manitoba for twenty years, and is a man who is a statesman, and not a petty politician". John Bracken commenced his speech by referring to his early connection with Leeds County. He felt no regrets since he had decided two years ago to lead the party. He commended the delegates for their decision to re-elect a native son of the riding and warned them against being over-confident over the result at the polls, "give him the best majority you can give him. The election is not won because you have a convention of this kind. Feel that you are working for a policy you can be proud of. There isn't very much that is satisfying in public life but it is satisfying to be associated with men of high purpose."

Three-fold Challenge.

Coming to the tasks of the present, Mr. Bracken declared that we were facing a three-fold challenge. The greatest war of all has to be won. The peace to follow must be made enduring, our world is to be made more acceptable. "We are in the most challenging period in the long history of the human race," he said. "I would speak to you on the position this party takes on the vital public issues of the day. There are five different groups who together make up our population.

1. The Armed Services.

There must be no forced demobilization of returned men until they are assured of a job. Those who have suffered physical handicaps have the right to expect from the state, the fullest measure of restoration to health that medical science can give—and for any permanent impairment in health such monetary compensation by way of pension as will make up for any handicap resulting from war service, those whose education or training has been interrupted must have the opportunity to resume it with generous assistance from the State; and those who are capable of taking on their old jobs, must have the opportunity to do so.

2. Wage-Workers.

We stand for full time employment for all—every man a job and fair pay. We stand for the legal right to collective bargaining and the machinery by which that right can be enforced.

3. Farmers.

Our objective for them is a squar deal, not just what is left over. A fair share of the nation's income, nothing less, nothing more. To reach this objective and to realize our basic aims, we propose a guaranteed price announced in advance, and sufficient to give farmers, as a class, their proportionate share of the nation's income. As the farmer's costs increase through higher costs of his labor, his equipment and other necessities, the price of his products must increase also. If those engaged in agriculture constitute one quarter of our total workers, they should receive not less than that proportion of the nation's income.

Business Men.

The proposition we have for them is the presentation of the right to enterprise, the right to make a legitimate profit in fair competition and the accordance of fair treatment which excludes threat of expropriation and slow destruction by excessive taxation.

Dependents.

For the Aged.

Old age pensions at 65 instead of 70 and the rate increased.

For the Young.

Maximum provision for health, nutrition, education and training regardless of the finance of the parents and opportunity for employment when of age to work.

The Sick and Disabled.

Adequate attention to meet the need regardless of ability to pay.

The Unemployed.

Prevention rather than cure.

Government cooperation with employers to assure maximum employment.

The speaker then referred to the general economy saying "We stand for an expanding economy, not a restrictive economy. We do not owe every man a living, but rather we owe every man the right to make a living."

Speaker Asks Question.

Coming to the matter of the Home Army, I ask the government again as I have asked many times before, Is this army of 70,000 men to be sent where the fighting is to be done, or is it to be demobilized and take the jobs that fighting men deserve? Or is it to be left here at home doing nothing at a cost to the taxpayers exceeding $150,000,000 a year? The time for equivocation and political manoeuvring is past. The people of Canada are demanding a straightforward answer to straightforward questions.

Continuing, Mr. Bracken touched upon Dominion Provincial relations. He said that one of the first actions of the new government if he should be its leader, would be to call a Dominion Provincial Conference where a national readjustment of Dominion Provincial relations could be brought about. The attitude of the party towards co-operatives, international trade, and peace and agriculture were outlined by the speaker. Ending a discourse that was followed with keen interest, he expressed the hope that George White would be re-elected and used as his closing words, "My best hope for you is that it may be said of you what Winston Churchill said of the airmen who saved England, "This was their finest hour."

Mrs. Bracken Greeted.

Following the applause accorded the leader, Mrs. F. E. Birdsall extended greetings to Mrs. Bracken on behalf of the ladies, as the presentation of a basket of roses was made by Miss Ann Nickle of Madoc. Mrs. Bracken graciously replied. W. E. Tummon, ex-M.P., extended the sincere appreciation of the convention which had admired the clean cut manner in which Mr. Bracken had put before them the issues of the day. "Mr. Bracken has the ability to think clearly and to say what he thinks clearly and courageously." It may be said of him as of the late Sir James Whitney "He is bold enough to be honest and honest enough to be bold." He then read the following resolution, "Be it therefore resolved that the Hastings Peterborough Progressive Conservative Association here assembled, declare and affirm their approval of the policies of John Bracken and the Honorable George Drew."

White Spearheads Group.

Earl Desmond, M.P., called upon for a speech, spoke of one quality possessed by the candidate, namely horse sense. He said he had noted that George White had battled for every group of his constituents. He is the spearhead of the group of soldier M.P.'s who are standing for the rights of veterans of the last war and the boys and girls who are over there now. Richard Bell, the final speaker, said there were three things which called for careful attention:

(1) Poll organization, (2) organization among men on active service, (3) women's organizations.

Don't let us say "Let George do it," but rather "Let us do it for George," that having done all we can, we elect John Bracken as first farmer prime minister.

INVADERS CLOSE

Supply Line Severed

The manoeuvre gave the Americans control of San Juanico Strait, the narrow, crooked waterway dividing Leyte and Samar. The main Japanese supply line for supplies and reinforcements from the north thus has been severed.

Liberation troops have swept 30 miles northward of Tacloban," the communique reported. Apparently they will curve around the northern tip of Leyte to drive a wedge in Japanese communications with Masbate, main island to the northwest.

Japanese forces in this sector "are disintegrating," the announcement added.

Carrier planes turned back a large-scale Japanese daylight assault Tuesday on American shipping in Leyte Gulf. Fifty-three enemy planes were shot down, and anti-aircraft fire destroyed three more.

Repulse Attack

LARGE ENEMY

Japanese naval communiques admitted the loss of one battleship. Two cruisers, one destroyer and substantial damage to another battleship.

Most of the destruction was inflicted on a Japanese task force caught south of Formosa, Nimitz said, "with no damage to our ships."

U. S. Escort Carrier Sunk.

Previously Nimitz had reported the loss of the light carrier U. S. S. Princeton and MacArthur announced the sinking of an escort carrier from the U. S. 7th Fleet covering his amphibious landings on Leyte.

The Imperial task force caught near Formosa in the Philippine sea "was attacked by a concentration of aircraft, surface ships and submarines" for a day and a night. Enemy aircraft flew out from the Philippines in a futile attempt to rescue the trapped Japanese task force. The Japanese finally escaped under cover of a black night.

Nimitz's communique amplified his earlier report yesterday so that much of the damage announced today duplicates his earlier figures.

However, he said this report still is incomplete and will be amplified as further details become available. Thus there is the possibility that even greater destruction may have been wrought on the Imperial fleet which dared — at long last — to leave its own quarters and engage the U. S. 3rd and 7th fleets and squadron of the Royal Australian Navy.

Major Force.

The greatest of the three naval engagements was fought southeast of Formosa where carrier pilots routed a major force of the Imperial Navy with these losses:

One large carrier exploded and sunk (previously reported).

One large carrier severely damaged by bombs and torpedoes and believed sunk (previously reported damage).

One light carrier definitely sunk (previously reported damaged).

Two battleships probably sunk (previously unreported).

Two light cruisers definitely sunk (previously unreported).

Two battleships, three cruisers, and a number of destroyers which withdrew northward in a damaged condition (previously unreported).

Additional Details.

Additional details of the Monday - Tuesday battle of the Sibuyan Sea gave these figures:

One heavy cruiser sunk (previously reported damaged.)

Four battleships heavily damaged by bombs and left the scene at low speed trailing oil (previously reported damaged.)

One cruiser sunk by naval gunfire (previously reported damaged under general statement regarding light units.)

Sinking of these two cruisers and damaging of four battleships and a destroyer was believed to duplicate damage reported a few hours earlier in a MacArthur communique.

Nothing further was reported regarding the Sulu Sea engagements in which Nimitz previously said two battleships were damaged and one cruiser and four destroyers were strafed.

All of these figures would give the combined 3rd Fleet under Admirals Halsey and Mitscher and the 7th Fleet under Admiral Kinkaid a three-day toll of six vital warships sunk, three probably sunk and 17 plus "several" destroyers damaged.

Sinking of these light Japanese carriers increased to 14 the number of enemy flat-tops sent to the bottom in this war against seven lost by the United States. That seven includes the escort carrier previously announced by MacArthur as sunk.

Actions Started Monday.

The three-day series of engagements began late Monday afternoon and continued into Wednesday morning until every Japanese ship still afloat had turned its stern toward its conquerors and was fleeing in a crippled condition.

Yesterday in Washington Admiral Ernest J. King, commander-in-chief, said "practically all the Japanese fleet" was taken on in the engagements.

Though it is an historic victory, for one hour Wednesday morning as two enemy battleship-led groups emerged on the east side of the Philippines and approached Leyte Gulf, the fate of Gen. MacArthur and his men hung in the balance.

Then it was that Vice-Admiral Kinkaid, despite numerical inferiority as a group, boldly divided his 7th Fleet and a Royal Australian naval squadron, sent them in different directions and won both battles.

Within 70 Miles.

Kincaid's orders were executed off Leyte gulf and off the east coast of Samar.

(Gordon Walker, in a Mutual network broadcast, said Japanese warships got within 70 miles of the Leyte beaches "and I can tell you there were some very worried men here in the central Philippines at that time."

(Walker pointed out "if the enemy fleet had been able to break through our naval blockade and enter Leyte gulf they could have wiped out every ship in San Pedro Bay.")

One Japanese force of at least two battleships, a heavy cruiser, a light cruiser and four destroyers, after moving across the Sulu Sea, passed through Surigao Straits to move against Kinkaid from the southwest.

One half of Kinkaid's 7th took on this group first Wednesday.

Exchanges Broadsides.

For 25 minutes, the opposing warships exchanged broadsides and American destroyers darted in for close assaults.

MacArthur jubilantly announced the enemy force was "completely routed," and added:

"Every hostile ship was either sunk or heavily damaged".

Surviving enemy remnants turned back through Surigao "under continued air attack from our escort carriers.

Kinkaid's move on this end was carried out with "extremely light losses"—several P.T. boats sunk or damaged and one destroyer damaged.

The other battle broke out a little later off Samar, newly-invaded island just north of Leyte.

Moved Toward Leyte.

A Japanese naval force which included four battleships, several cruisers and destroyers, after crossing the Sibuyan Sea, slipped between Luzon and Samar, then moved down toward the Leyte scene and started shelling one of the escort carrier groups. Carrier planes combined with carrier planes of another group in such fierce attacks that the enemy armada had to turn back north.

Kincaid's cost was heavier this time. One escort carrier went down and other carriers as well as destroyers were damaged, according to MacArthur's account.

Eyewitness broadcasts from Leyte told how planes of the sunk and damaged escort carriers landed on Tacloban and Dulag airfields although those strips haven't been in American hands long enough to accommodate many planes.)

'Tack Trick' Fails to Interest John Katan Who Defeats Ivan Rasputin in Straight Falls

Mad Russian Loses First Fall on Foul and Second Trying Ruse

Ivan Rasputin's old "tack act" proved a boomerang and bounced right back at him for a loss when John Katan, the Palermo strong man, refused the ruse and after winning the first fall by disqualification sent some 1,000 rabid wrestling fans from the Hume Arena quite satisfied as "Honest John" hurled the hulky Russian for a ten-yard loss and won last night's main scrap in straight falls.

Katan hurled the bearded and hairy Russian hither and thither with gusto and abandon, that was when Rasputin wasn't trying to appease his hunger by attempting to chew off Katan's thumb. However, Rasputin must be slowing up, or maybe he's lost his sense of acting because his attempts to prove Katan was gullible fell far short of its usual success. It was something like 19 minutes of the second and final round before Katan harkened to the pleas of the fans and refused to have part or parcel of Rasputin's "tack act", despite the fact the Mad Russian did come up with a tack and presented it gracefully to Referee Bert Maxwell.

But not "Honest John". No sir, the finger-pulling champ entertained different ideas last night and picking Rasputin up with a crotch hold hurled him forecefully to the mat. As Rasputin lay there disgusted with his lot in life and trying to remember whether or not a good steak tasted better than Katan's meat hooks, "Honest John" leaped upon the prostrate Russian and that night's work was done. But good.

Rasputin Over-Zealous

Rasputin must have been overzealous last night as he attacked Katan long before Referee Maxwell hove into sight to start the main hostilities, which naturally made "Mister Fingers" the favorite. Big John wasn't at his best early in the show simply because he isn't accustomed to hearing rasslin' patrons shout sweet words of encouragement into his good ear.

Sensing an opportunity Rasputin staged one of his magician tricks and produced a cord from the confines of his trunks and proceeded to strangle Katan leaving the popular choice rolling around on the mat groaning like nobody's business, but with little avail until finally Referee Maxwell could no longer bear the suffering and disqualified the Russian to give Katan a head start on the night's fun. In the second round Katan gained several punishing headlocks and flipper Rasputin around like a tumbler in a sideshow, hurling him to the mat with slams that saw the Russian's buttocks bounce hither and yon about the ring. That was Rasputin's cue for the old "tack act", but ah, ha— not for Johnnie Katan and there was cheering with satisfaction when Katan won. After all beating a ruffian like Rasputin is really something in the grappling annals.

Action Aplenty

The preliminaries were productive of action aplenty and warmed the patrons up for the principal go, which after all is the general idea of added attractions in the business. Don Evans, a blonde hulk of some 221 pounds, surprised all and sundry by pinning Vern Baxter in the opener. Of course the fans were with Baxter to a man and that was something new for the rough Baxter and didn't help his ring efforts to any noticeable degree. For unadulterated roughness this go was the proverbial berries with the contestants slugging it out and using everything on the attack, except the ringside seats. Referee Cliff Fox tolled the long count over Baxter and then returned to continually warn Babe Zaharias regarding roughness as the Salt Lake City hefty and Pierre DeGlane went the full 30 minutes to a draw. Arbiter Fox is still wondering how Baxter missed Evans in a wild swinging blow, that landed on the official's puss. Maybe it'll be better next week.

What's Doing in Sport

By The Canadian Press

Toronto fans got an action preview of their 1944-45 Maple Leafs last night when Bob Davidson's Blues swamped Lorne Carr's Whites before 12,000 fans. A line centred by Ted Kennedy with Nick Metz and Bill Ezinicki on the wings was top scoring combination with four goals. Frank McCool of Calgary, slated for the Leaf goaltending assignment this season, looked good in the Blue's nets.

Winnipeg is assured of first-class hockey this season with plenty of former N. H. L. talent now performing in the City Inter-Services League. The R. C. A. F. squad boasts such defence stars as Cpl. Wally Stanowski, Toronto Maple Leafs, PO. Bill Judza, New York Rangers, AC1 Jack Stewart, Detroit and up front has Cpl. Pete Langelle, Toronto, and LAC. Neil Colville and Cpl. Alf Pike of New York. Pte. Alex Shibicky is the standout of former pros with the Army while the Navy will depend almost entirely on amateur players.

Boston Bruins, warming up for their N. H. L. opener with Canadiens at Montreal Saturday, last night whipped a team from H. M. C. S. Montcalm 8-1 at Quebec. Bill Cowley and Pete Leswick each scored two goals for the Rossmen.

Patrick Joseph Murphy, 70, old-time sportsman who was a member of the old Ottawa Capitals lacrosse team when they were recognized as champions of the world, died yesterday after a short illness. He was also a member of the Ottawa College Football team that won the Dominion championship at the turn of the century.

Staff Sgt. Joe Louis doesn't want to consider any ring championship bouts until he is back in civilian clothes.

"Let's get this war over first," he said when asked at Philadelphia yesterday about a report from New York that Mike Jacobs is planning to match him with Billy Conn next summer if both boxers are out of the service. "I don't think I can discuss such a match now."

There's talk around Canadiens camp that Lude Check, a member of the Allan Cup holders, Quebec Aces, may go to Chicago Hawks. Hawks are looking for a winger. Check played on the same line with Bill Mosienko when both were with the Quebec team two years ago.

B.C.I. DEFEATS ALBERT COLLEGE BY 8 TO 1 COUNT

Win Places Collegiate Squad in Undisputed Possession of Second Place

Belleville Collegiate moved into undisputed possession of second place in the senior section of the Bay of Quinte Interscholastic six-man football conference on the home grid fron yesterday with an 8 to 1 win over the Albert College sextette.

The squads battled at even terms for the greater part of the game with Jack Dodson crashing the Albert goal line for the game's only touchdown late in the second half.

Kennie Lindsay opened the scoring by booting the initial point of the game for Albert, which ultimately proved their only scoring of the pastime. Jack Dodson evened the count, when he punted over the Albert goal line for an ultimate rouge early in the second quarter as the halfway whistle found the squads knotted at a 1-1 score.

Coach "Red" Townsend's Collegians opened the second half with an aerial attack, that the Lindsay-Boyd combination warded off successfully until the "tri-color" reverted to ground attacks that moved the B.C.I. far into Albert territory where Dodson carried around left end for an unconverted touchdown bringing the count to 6-1 for B.C.I. A kick to the deadline and a rouge gave the Collegians two more points to cinch the game despite the fact Albert were on the march when the final whistle sounded.

The line-ups:

Albert College —centre, Christie; ends, MacDonald and McCullough; quarter, Lindsay; halves, Avrichuck and Boyd; subs, Healey, McIntosh, Hayman and Shields.

Belleville Collegiate Institute—Centre, Bankier; ends, Edwards and Miles; quarter, Bill Spafford; halves, Dodson and Wood; subs, Leon Spafford, Legate, Freeman and M. McIntosh.

Referee—Eddie Schreeder, Umpire, Jack Doran.

Sports Roundup

(By HUGH FULLERTON JR.)
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

New York, Oct. 26. (AP)— In a high school football game at Chippewa Falls, Wis., recently the two teams lined facing up facing the wrong goals after a score and didn't discover it until Bloomer High School carried the winning touchdown over the wrong line. . . Then the hollering began but officials decided to allow the tally and to finish the game the wrong way. . . And in Ohio a Youngstown Ursuline halfback was going for a touchdown when a Scienceville sub, ready to go into the game, dashed out from the sidelines and tackled him. . . Also in Ohio Ted Himes of Mt. Blanchard insisted on kicking the extra points bare footed. "I get a better feel of things with 'em off", he explained. He made three out of four tries.

Hal Chase and George Sisler, conceded to be two of the best fielding first basemen in baseball, each made four errors in one contest while Zeke Bonura, noted for his stationary fielding, held the record for double plays by a first sacker—150—until Lou Gehrig broke it.

When time comes for Australia to defend the Davis Cup, look for Dinny Pails, a youngster who has been giving Jack Bromwich and Andrian Quist trouble in exhibitions, to play an important role.

Decision by officials of the Quebec Senior Hockey League to continue operations this season probably will fit in nicely with the wishes of Montreal Canadiens to keep plenty of players close to home in case emergencies call for reinforcements. With Montreal Royals operating in the Q. S. H. L., the surplus players who have been turned out from the Canadiens' camp will be on call by the club when needed.

N.H.L. Managers Satisfied Canadiens Best on Paper

By OWEN CHANNON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Montreal, Oct. 26 — (CP) — Most managers of National Hockey League clubs, including Art Ross of the Boston Bruins, have admitted that Montreal Canadiens are the best N.H.L. team "on paper." Few people will contradict this but Dick Irvin, who has been preening the Habitants for the season opener Saturday night, is not content to let it remain that way.

He's all set to show that the Canucks are not only the best team "on paper" but also the best team on the ice.

Now that most of the contract difficulties appear to have been settled, there is nothing to stop the Canadiens from taking up where they left off last spring — at the top of the league.

There's a happy twinkle in Irvin's eyes these days as he watches the Canucks in their drills and that can be taken as sufficient indication that his 1944-45 team is as good, if not better than last year.

Bill Durnan, who vaulted to prominence last year when he was called as goal-tender by the Canadiens to replace Paul Bibeault, has recovered from a shoulder injury suffered earlier in the training period and once more is showing the cool skill which won him the Vesina Trophy last season.

Durnan May Repeat

Durnan bids well to hold on to his claim to the title as the best goaler in the N.H.L. But he is being hotly pursued in this respect by Paul Bibeault. Bibeault—discharged last year from the Canadian Army —also is being retained by Canadiens.

There's a wealth af talent lined up to patrol the defence zone including Leo Lamoureux, Glen Harmon and Emile Bouchard of last year's Stanley Cup team. Wilf Field, taken up by Montreal when the New York Americans were disbanded a few years back, and Frankie Eddolls will complete the initial defence line.

Eddolls has been on the Montreal list for a number of years and now with a discharge from the R.C.A.F. has his first opportunity to climb into the major league game.

Frank (Butch) Stahan with the Quebec Aces, of Allan Cup fame, last year, and Larry Reardon will be farmed out to teams in the Quebec Senior Hockey League where they will be available if vacancies crop up in the Canadiens' line up. Both defencemen, Stahan will be sent to Montreal Royals and Reardon to Ottawa Commandos.

Rossignal May Make It

Elmer Lach is slated for the opening face off with Toe Blake and Maurice Richard covering the wings. This line was responsible for most of the club's scoring power last year and indications from the training camp are that none of their skill has been lost.

A second line will put Buddy O'-Connor at centre flanked by Dutch Hiller and Roland Rossignol. Rossignol, also a member of last year's senior amateur champion Quebec Aces, may be the only rookie on the starting team.

The third line has not yet been completed although Ray Getliffe and Murph Chamberlain are assured of posts. The third man is a bit of a problem with Irvin still to choose between Fernand Gauthier and Tod Campeau. Gauthier was with New York Rangers last year while Campeau is a graduate of the Montreal Royals' Junior team.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By SYD THOMAS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Oct. 26 — (CP)—There is still room for sentiment in hockey, and an example has just turned up in a story by Bill Sootheran in the Niagara Falls Evening Review. It concerns Art Ross, manager of Boston Bruins, who is considered by many as a very tough chappie indeed, and Bill Cupelo, a young Falls hockey player who just signed a contract with the Bruins.

Two years ago, Ross was negotiating with Cupolo when the youngster came down with tuberculosis. Instead of dropping him there and then, Ross financed Cupolo's recovery and told him the contract would be waiting when he got better. Cupolo spent eight months in bed and many more long months convalescing, but finally made the grade, justifying the faith placed in him by a supposedly hard-boiled guy. Cupolo shows every sign of sticking in the N.H.L. too, so they say.

Try Again:

Last year a powerful Halifax Navy football squad had ambitions to challenge for the Grey Cup, but filed its entry too late and was left in the cold after trouncing Toronto Navy and Montreal Navy squads.

This year Navy has two good teams in Halifax, H.M.C.S. Peregrines Combines and H.M.C.S. Stadacona, and both are looking for games with other teams in eastern Canada — either at home or abroad. Service regulations prevent them entering any inter-sectional playoffs, but it would be interesting to see how they would stack up against the big fellows in Ontario and Quebec, in the way of promoting friendly inter-provincial relations.

Incidentally:

He got around plenty on the football field when playing with Calgary's Football Bronks, but P.O. Larry Haynes of the R.C.A.F. has done some travelling since. Home on leave, Larry produced a roll of short snorter bills bearing signatures from all over South America and Africa. He's with the Ferry Command, in case you were wondering . . . Halifax had hoped to scalp a few good civilian hockey players from Montreal when prospects of a senior loop there were dim. Revival of the Q.S.H.L. scalped the eastern port's hopes for a strong civvie team, however . . . Dame Rumor says the champion service football squad of Western Canada will come east late next month to play the eastern winners...Johnny Kumornik from Hamilton, Ont., says the brand of ball turned out this yead by H.M.C.S. Cornwallis and other teams down Halifax way was about as good as any in the country . . .

CASUAL COMMENT by K.J.C.

Could Have Waited.

A Lancashire soldier and his lass had spent the day together, and on their return the girl's mother asked how she had enjoyed herself.

"Aw reet," said Jane, "but I think Joe's a bit mean. He nobbut spent sixpence on me all day."

"Wel, if I were thee I'd tek his sixpence back and mek him ashamed of himself," said her mother."

Late that night, Jane knocked on Joe's door.

"Ere," she said. "Tak thi sixpence back I doubt if tha can afford it."

"Ee," said her lover, "tha shouldn't a' bothered to-neet. It would 'a done in t'mornin'."

Doubting Thomas.

Ford Frick is the president of the National League, but his father, now 91 years of age, is one fan who is a bit skeptical about the game being on the level. Ford blames that attitude entirely on Babe Ruth.

Many years ago, when the bustling executive was a baseball writer travelling with the Yankees, the Bronx Bombers moved into Fort Wayne for an exhibition game. Ford invited his father to the fray, introduced him to the Babe and the other Yankees and installed him on the bench.

Late in the fray Ruth wandered over to the elder Frick and boomed, "Getting tired, pop? I'll tell you what I'l do. Do you see those railroad yards over there?"

Mr. Frick gazed at a maze of tracks in the distance, more than 400 feet away from the plate. He nodded.

"Pop," said the Babe, "I'm gonna hit one onto those tracks."

He did. To this day the nonagenarian insists that there is something suspicious about a sport which permits its athletes to call the turn with such phenomenal exactitude. What he overlooks, of course, is that there was only one Babe Ruth.

Six 20-Game Winners.

The baseball statisticians have been digging into the figures for the past season and produced some interesting findings. Among these is the fact that the big leagues had six pitchers this season who won more than 20 victories, the first time in six years that that many have managed to reel off a score of wins. Four of the half dozen were National Leaguers but the two American League aces both Detroit Tigers, Hal Newhouser with 29 and Dizzy Trout with 27 topped the entire list. The National Leaguers to finish in the coveted circle were three old timers to whom it was by no means a new story, Bucky Walters of the Cincinnati Reds, 23, Mort Cooper of the Cards 22 and Rip Sewell, blooper-ball expert of the Pirates, 21. The rookie to make the grade was Bill Voiselle of the Giants who won himself 21 games in his first season under the big top.

Around the Town.

Jack Dodson's lone touchdown was good enough to beat Albert College, as "Red" Townsend's B.C.I. "Collegian" sextette held well to win a senior six-man grid tussle 8-1 yesterday....Now the Church St. "Students" are firmly entrenched in second place behind the St Michael's "Irish"....Townsend's kids were at full value along the line yesterday and therein lies the tale as to why they stopped Kennie Lindsay and Harry Boyd....Incidentally while on the subject of Interscholastic football local fans can sit back and resign themselves to the fact they will see some 12-man senior C.O.S.S.A. Interscholastic games before many days are up ....Games will be played on the Wednesday afternoon half holiday, which should be welcomed news to local sport lovers....There'll be more on the subject....The Russian reign is over. No longer does Ivan Rasputin dominate the grapplers at the Hume Arena as John Katan finished off the "bearded one" in short order last night....Ivan's old "tack trick" back-fired as Katan was having no part of the old Russian possum act so now Skipper Tunney can list Katan in the upper bracket of his grappling circus.

Remember When.

Tony Canzoneri decided to "stop kidding himself" five years ago today? The former holder of the world's feather, light and junior welterweight titles decided one fight —with Brooklyn's Al Davis—would decide his ring future. If he lost he would retire, if he won he'd continue in the profession where he starred for 20 years (He lost.)

Tough Break.

When the SACO "Marines" were playing their third game with Fort Erie in Toronto recently, third baseman Harry Wardhaugh was having a field day racing all around the infield picking up hard hit balls a la cherry-picking route. Harry made such an impression with Toronto softball scouts that he was offered a position in the Queen City to play for the Tip Top seniors in 1945. He was also promised a tryout with the Toronto Marlboro junior hockey teams, but alas Harry is waiting his military call soon and merely took all these beautiful offers with a shrug of the shoulders, remarking something about "after the war."

N.H.L. Training Camp Notes

By the Canadian Press

Pre-season training camps have broken up and according to reports club officials are quite satisfied with their rosters.

Dick Irvin of Montreal Canadiens once again will ice the high-scoring Blake-Lach-Richard line, which ran up 82 goals during regular season play last year and followed that with a record of 21 goals in play-offs.

If Manager Jack Adams of Detroit Red Wings can convince his top line of Howe-Bruneteau-Liscombe, which banged in 103 goals last season, to sign contracts, he should have a good match for Irvin's trio. So far the Wings' trio haven't signed on the dotted line.

Steve Wochy, the Fort William rookie bidding for a spot with Red Wings, has been assigned to Indianapolis Capitals, Detroit's foremost farm team, although he'll be in Detroit for the N. H. L. opener between Wings and Boston Bruins Sunday night.

All is reported in "tip-top" shape in Red Wings camp except for Cully Simon's wrenched side. His substitute, Hymie Buller of Saskatoon, also is complaining of a sprained ankle.

Reports from Hibbing, Minn., state Paul Thompson's Chicago Black Hawks are powerful defensively, have Mike Karakas in goal but mystery surrounds the scoring punch of the new inexperienced forward lines. Paul lost Doug Bentley, George Allen and Cully Dahlstrom, a high-scoring line.

Lester Patrick expressed satisfaction with his team as the New York Rangers broke camp Wednesday night and headed for Toronto for their season opener against Toronto Maple Leafs. He didn't predict where Rangers would finish in the league this year, but Coach Frank Boucher said he expects the club to end up at least fourth. Rangers finished last a year ago.

Have a Coca-Cola = Join in the fun

. . . or adding life and sparkle to Halloween

What's a young folks' party without refreshment? "Coke" is naturally a member in excellent standing with any group of youngsters. And there's no better place to enjoy Coca-Cola than at home, served ice-cold right from the family refrigerator. Have a "Coke" is the invitation that starts a party off right and keeps it going. Coca-Cola adds its own life and sparkle to the natural gaiety of youth. When young people get together, Coca-Cola stands for the pause that refreshes, symbolizes the sunny side of life.

It's natural for popular names to acquire friendly abbreviations. That's why you hear Coca-Cola called "Coke".

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 515

By SAM GORDON

The Kibitzer

A mugwump sits on a fence with his mug on one side and his wump on the other. So, you know what a mugwump bid is. It is a bid that is on the borderline of two kinds of bids.

One of the mugwump bids in bridge is an opening of four in a minor suit. It promises a long-strong club or diamond suit; a sure outside trick; eight or nine tricks (preferably nine.)

Seemingly, a hand like that also has enough for an opening bid of two in a suit. Because a two-in-suit opening shows nine tricks.

Therefore, when you have such a hand, what should you do about it? Should you prefer to open it with four in the minor or with a bid of two in that suit

A four-minor opening relies mostly on its independent suit for its tricks. And it is not forcing to game. Partner may pass with a trickless hand.

On the other hand, a two-in-suit opening is forcing to game, even if partner has nothing. And game in a minor takes 11 tricks.

But partner may pass a one-opener with only two tricks. Rather than take that chance, a nine trick hand opens with two even in a minor.

Furthermore, a two-in-suit opening does not guarantee a suit that is more than biddable. It depends more on high cards for tricks.

So, it comes to this. With nine tricks, open with two in a suit unless it has an independent suit for a four-minor opening. But prefer a two-bid to a three-bid in a major independent suit.

Study this hand:

♠8
♥Q 4
♦A K Q 10 8 6 4
♣A K 6

Open that hand with four diamonds. If the diamonds were hearts prefer to open with two hearts instead of three hearts. Because it takes only ten tricks to make game in a major.

If this is tough, forget the stuff.

GUS BODNAR ONLY ONE IN FAMILY WHO CAN SKATE

Four Other Children and None Tried Hockey for Recreation

By FRASER MacDOUGALL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Oct. 26 —(CP)—Of the five children in the Bodnar family of Fort William, Ont., only the one bearing the name of Gus ever learned to skate but he became so proficient at that and at handling a hockey stick that he was named last season as the outstanding rookie in the National Hockey League and is a key figure in the Toronto Maple Leafs' lineup for the 1944-45 campaign.

The frail centre-ice player says he is looking forward this year to an even better season than last when he scored 22 goals and had 40 assists for 62 points, ranking 10th among league point-getters and 2nd among Toronto marksmen.

The experience he gained in his first N.H.L. season, an additional 10 pounds in weight — he now tips the scales at 150 — are among the factors Gus expects will enable him to play better hockey.

His playing assignment this season puts him at centre ice between two of the league's veteran goal-getters, right wing Lorne Carr who was third in scoring last season, and left wing Dave (Sweeney) Schriner, returning to N.H.L. company after one year of retirement.

The 21-year-old player made his N.H.L. bow last year by attaining star rating in his first game. Not only did he get two goals and one assist in the first game of the season but his first goal was scored in the first 15 seconds of play. That first night provided him with the greatest thrill he ever had in hockey.

He started hockey in bantam ranks, first as a centre and then as a right wing and then moved up into junior company with the Fort William Hurricane Rangers with whom he played for four years.

Willie Pep Gains Decision Over Jackie Leamus

Montreal, Oct. 26 —(CP)— Willie Pep of Hartford, Conn., last night took a 10-round decision from Jackie Leamus of Baltimore in a non-title bout. Pep, recognized by the New York State Boxing Commission as the world's featherweight, had too much skill for his colored opponent and was given an unanimous decision by the judges.

The Canadian Press score card showed Pep won five rounds, Leamus with three and two even.

Pep wasted no time in going after his victory. He landed repeated blows on Leamus' body although the Baltimore Negro took the punishment gamely. There were no knockdowns. Pep lost the fifth round when he delivered a low blow.

Pep tipped the scale at 127¾ giving up 4¾ pounds to Leamus.

In the semi-final, Sammy Daniels, 140½, drew with Genaro Rojos, of Los Angeles in eight rounds.

FOUND PATRICK BOTH PATIENT AND CHARMING

Woman Reporter Has Interview With General Manager of N. Y. Rangers

By ENID NEMY
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Winnipeg, Oct. 26 —(CP)— Sports writers are having women trouble. Invasion of sports press boxes — the male sanctuary — was bad enough but when a woman reporter broke in on one of the famous Patrick hockey interviews in his Winnipeg hotel suite that was the pay-off.

I was the reporter but I found Lester Patrick, general manager of New York Rangers, my idea of a real hockey mogul. Mr. Patrick admits he isn't a very patient man nor does he keep regular hours, but during out interview he was both patient and charming.

Woefully, Mr. Patrick says he is in "a crazy business." He smokes from 10 to 40 cigarets a day, depending on the work he is doing, and during his vacation cuts out smoking entirely for three weeks "just to show I can do it."

His outside interests are "low-brow." "I like crooners and popular melodies of all generations but I'm keen on grand opera."

Hockey players have the same temperament as artists in the Metropolitan Opera, he says. A happily married hockey player with a family is usually a better player than a bachelor although "some bachelors are very easy to handle."

There is one point on which Mr. Patrick is emphatic — hockey wives. "Their business is to stay at home. Women do not mix in sport."

The War Today—

Japan Suffers Major Disaster, May Hasten End of Pacific War

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
Associated Press War Analyst

It looks as thought the Japanese have just about succeeded in committing Hara-Kiri in the great sea-battle off the Philippines.

They have suffered a major disaster. Indeed, it may prove to be a decisive defeat which has smashed the mainspring of Japan's sea-power and so will hasten the end of the Pacific war. However, we can't appraise the situation fully until the complete report is at hand. This is a moment for exultation but not for loose superlative.

While details are lacking it's clear that the Allied force — an Australian squadron participated — has dealt a devastating blow to Japan's first line-ships. They may have crippled the Mikado's Navy permamently.

This column yesterday called the developing battle of the Philippines the crisis of the war in the Orient. Clearly the magnitude of the Japanese naval effort is recognition of this. But the Japs aren't the only ones to see the emergency. There are signs on every hand that this thought of crisis is in the minds of the Allied High Command.

Allied Clans Gather in Orient

There's a gathering of the United Nations clans in the Orient for the kill. It isn't coincidence that this comes as MacArthur strikes to redeem his pledge to free the Philippines. The method and concerted action are recognition that this is the crucial moment.

Australia is making big preparations to accommodate British forces. The vast Indian base is seething with activity. The Royal Air Force already has completed plans to move a steady stream of planes to the Far East the moment Hitler yells quits — or somebody yells it for him. British authorities are moving a great naval fleet into the Orient.

Gen. Stilwell is China is rushing operations for the reopening of the Burma Road to expedite the movement of supplies to the hard-pressed Chinese and to the 14th Air Force. British units are attacking again in Burma, with the ending of the Monsoon deluge. Lord Mountbatten's command is wielding the spade in work preliminary to assaults against Japan's key positions in Indonesia.

So the steel ring tightens about the Mikado's forces. But there's another element present in the Allied set-up which isn't so obvious.

That's the vast aid which Gen. MacArthur is receiving, and will receive increasingly, from the Filipino population of some 17,00,000 in defeating the Japanese.

Whitehall Notebook

By DOUGLAS AMARON
(CP Staff Writer)

London, Oct. 26 — (CP) — First parliamentary reaction to the government's social security scheme does not foreshadow any solid opposition when the White Paper is debated in the House of Commons.

Comparisons between the government's proposals and those set forward by Sir William Beveridge have for the most part been favorable and Sir William, whose plan was the basis for the new scheme, described it as "a very great step forward."

Sir William now is a Liberal M.P. and will probably support his party's criticism of some of the plan's details. One point the Liberals will press is that the five shillings a week children's allowance proposed by the government be increased to Sir William's figure of eight shillings.

Labor members will join with the Liberals in criticising the government for not working out benefits on a subsistence basis which would take into account variations in the cost of living.

Conservative reaction is favorable. The scheme provides for a minister of social security for which the Tory reform group has pressed insistently.

Back-room boys: Sir Thomas Sweepshanks, co-author of the security plan is one of the government's "back room boys." Aged 49, this unobtrusive civil servant has been engaged in the past largely with seeing that much of Britain's social structure did not break down under wartime conditions.

In 1937, after many years at the Ministry of Health, Sir Thomas went to the air raid precautions department of the Home Office, to be appointed later Under-Secretary of State and afterwards assistant secretary to the Ministry of Home Security.

A "family man," Sir Thomas did much of his work on the security plan at home during the evenings.

One of the stupendous engineering feats of this war just recently brought to light was the creation by the Allied forces of two ports on the coast of Normandy for the unloading of supplies for the invasion forces. Ships of the Royal Canadian Navy played their part in this task, towing "portable" concrete jetties across the English Channel and shielding the operation from enemy attack. Scuttling tactics, so popular with the Germans during this war, were put to practical use when freighters were sunk to form breakwaters for the new ports (see top picture). Once the breakwaters were formed, the jetty sections were towed into place. In the centre picture, one of these sections can be seen in the left foreground. It will be moved around behind the sunken freighters and moored there in such a way that it will rise and fall with the 20-foot Channel tide. In the lower picture, the work has been completed and trucks are moving along the jetty sections, which are linked by short steel spans.—(R.C.N. Photo.)

HOW GERMANS DEFEATED

Washington, Oct. 26 — (AP) — Captured records of telephone conversations between Field Marshal Von Kluge, German Commander-in-Chief in the west, and three German field generals were made public last night by the War Department which said they showed what brought about the defeat of the German 7th Army in northern France. In the conversations, which took place July 31, Von Kluge complained repeatedly of heavy losses from the operations of Allied fighter-bomber planes.

WAR CORRESPONDENT KILLED

San Francisco, Oct. 26 — (AP)— Asahel (Ace) Bush, 31, Associated Press war correspondent, was killed in the line of duty yesterday when Japanese planes bombed Tacloban, American-occupied hospital of Leyte island. Bush had just reported the epochal naval battle off Leyte. He was killed outright.

He was the 10th civilian news writer killed covering the Pacific War and the 40th killed in all theatres since the beginning of the war.

FINED $300

Hamilton, Oct. 26 — (CP)—Herbert Richardson and William Burr, operators of a Kenilworth Venue service station here, yesterday were fined $300 each, with an alternative of two months in jail, following their conviction on a charge of depositing counterfeit gasoline coupons in their ration bank account.

GERMANS CLEARED FROM SAVIO RIVER LINE IN PO VALLEY

Thrust From Bridgeheads West and North of Cesena to Forli

Rome, Oct. 26 — (AP) — British 8th Army troops have cleared the Germans from the Savio River line in the eastern Po Valley and, thrusting from bridgeheads west and north of Cesena, have advanced northwestward to within five miles of Forli along the highway to Bologna, Allied headquarters announced today.

Canadian troops striking out from their bridgehead across the Savio river north of Cesena have reached a point more than four miles to the northwest.

South of the Po Valley highway British, Indian and Polish troops were clearing mountainous terrain of Germans.

The 8th Army advanced at least 11 miles in a thrust that placed it only 37 miles from Bologna.

"The enemy having withdrawn, 8th Army troops have advanced rapidly from their Cesena bridgehead, have driven in enemy rearguards and crossed the river Bevano," the communique said.

West of the Bevano, the Allied forces captured the town of Forlimpopoli, directly on the Bologno highway, and reached the Ronco river, three miles beyond. The lack of resistance indicated the advanse would continue to Norli itself.

Allied 5th Army troops, directly south of Bologna, continued to make slow progress.

The Allied 5th Army meanwhile continued to batter away against stiff resistance on the southern approaches to Bologna. The Germans were reported digging trenches south and southeast of the stronghold, indicating a plan to defend the town to the bitter end.

On the 5th Army right flank British and Indian troops made gains of up to a mile through difficult hills. Heavy fighting was in progress in the vicinity of Vedriano, southwest of Castel San Pietro, toward which American units were driving.

Poor weather restricted M.A.A.F. operations. One Allied plane was lost from 400 sorties.

Boys Appreciate Canadian Fags On Belgian Front

From the fighting fronts in Belgium and Holland comes word that Canadian cigarettes are still at a premium and always welcomed by the boys overseas. This includes Belleville boys who are receiving smokes through the Kinsmen Fag Fund and who are indeed appreciative when their monthly shipment of Canadian cigarettes reaches them.

"There is nothing more priceless than a Canadian cigarette here in Holland. The Dutch people treat us fine, but it takes the cigarettes and news from home to lift the old morale," wrote J. W. Ellis in a reply to Chairman Buster LaBarr recently. "Your cigarettes are really welcome here in Belgium," added Ted Elliott, while scores of other similar replies are received weekly by the Kinsmen urging the continuance of their fag fund.

The list of Belleville boys sent individual shipments of 300 cigarettes by the Kinsmen this week included:

CHAPTER 7

"Uh huh. We don't get much work to do at home." His father glanced up briefly. Mrs. Riley, in the role now of placid defender, for James her oldest boy was something of her favorite, said, "Well, after all, John, you must remember he's in college now." Mr. Riley grunted and laid down his paper.

"Much talk of the war at school?"

"Not much. Eddy McDonald joined the Airforce."

Mrs. Riley looked up instantly. "He did? That's that red haired boy, you know, John."

Mr. Riley nodded.

"Frank's boy. I know."

Mrs. Riley still didn't resume her needlework. She glanced at her husband again and then at Jimmy. "You're not thinking of joining up yet, are you James? You're only nineteen."

He shrugged. "No mom, take it easy. I haven't given it a thought." She still looked at him worriedly and after a while she got up and left the room. Mr. Riley continued to read his paper. Jimmy lit another cigarette and picked up another magazine. It was the same stuff all over again and he laid it down and got the new Post. The serial was interesting. He sensed rather than saw his father lay his paper down and then heard him clearing his throat.

"Er, James." He put the magazine down.

"Yes, Dad."

"Er, don't rush into anything without letting me know, will you? I mean, you're still a minor. . . although I hate to say that. I've let you go pretty much your own way, especially lately, but you'll need my signature to join up I'd like to talk it over with you first. Things don't look so good but if the worst comes to the worst. . . well come and see me, eh?"

Jimmy stifled the sudden urge to tell him he hadn't thought about it at all. After all, the war was a hell of a way off and he'd hardly really started to see life. There was Verna, now, for instance. Instead he said, "Sure, Dad I'll let you know in plenty of time." His father rustled his paper again and grunted. He lit a cigarette after knocking out his pipe and offered Jimmy one. It was about the first time he'd ever offered Jimmy a cigarette, though naturally he paid for them all indirecty, and somehow it made them more business-like and man-to-man. Jimmy liked it. Hell, he thought, it's a long time since I had a talk with Dad. I haven't really talked to him for anything since I was a kid except to ask for dough. There always seemed to be something going on that put it off, the other children, or Jimmy going out or something.

His father cleared his throat again. "You know, you fellows, if this thing goes on, are getting a tough break. The question nowadays is how boys your age are going to come through it." Jimmy sat and smoked and was a little surprised. It was the first time he had ever seen his father in a mood like this, pensive and serious, and wanting to talk to him about it too. It must be the war, he decided. Mr. Riley continued, "When you get a little older, or maybe you can see it now, when you can see how history repeats itself." Gosh, that was what Smidley had said. "You'll see that Liberty is a funny thing, consisting of a whole lot of little things, and it's a thing that's dearly won and always needs constant protection. Right from the beginning it's been that way and it probably will be that way always, unless there's some very careful planning done this time, much more than last, and provided measures are taken to see that the planning is enforced. What we really need is a world police force." He stopped and started tamping tobacco from a leather pouch that Jimmy had given him the previous Christmas into his pipe. Now Liberty—there was a thing Jimmy had wondered about that Fall for the first time.

"Just what is Liberty, Dad?" he asked.

Mr. Riley took a little while answering it. He lit his pipe and then looked at Jimmy. "That's a hell of a hard question to answer, Jim," he said. "That's because it's spiritual more than anything, athough in application, as I said, it's really a whole lot of little things. Take yourself, for instance. You get up in the morning at a time you practically choose yourself because we talked over what college you were going to go to and what course you were going to take. I suppose you say some prayers, or at least while you're dressing you think, especially if it's a nice day, that there must be a God, a supreme being of some sort. I mean the sort of thing we see around us, the world, the trees, everything in order and such good order makes the ordinary man think there must be some supreme being over it. Or even if, though I hope not, you ever get to the state where you believe, as some of them do, that for the thinking man there can be no God, then you believe that that is so.

"You go down to breakfast and you usually have a pretty good one, and, if I haven't gone to work with it, you read the morning paper. Perhaps like myself, you draw some of your own conclusions, and maybe you talk them over and discuss them with your friends. You go to college then, the one you've chosen, and you go to the lectures of the course you've chosen. If you don't like it, you cut the period." He smiled and Jimmy grinned too. The old boy was still plenty sharp he conceded.

"There you listen to teachers who are allowed to speak their mind, and you are allowed to drow your own conclusions. You can go down the street and buy a coke or you can go home and write a letter to the editor. And you can really tell him off. Or you can listen to the radio, even the news, or you can say to hell with it and read a magazine. You can," and here he smiled again, "take out any girl you want and decide whether you want to marry her or not. When you get out into the world you will work in a system of free-enterprise where you'll either get ahead or make a hash of it through your initiative applied to a self-interest of provided opportunities.

"On Sunday you can go to church, whichever one you want, and if anyone calls you something you don't like you can poke him in the snout and then tell the judge, who is elected by you and paid by you, all about it and then either pay five bucks or give the other lad the laugh. And later on," he was grave again now. "Later on you will be able to vote." He looked at Jimmy very seriously. "Don't ever forget that, Jimmy. When you're twenty- one you're given the privilege of voting for the man you want to put in the government. Don't ever let that privilege slide or take it for granted." He hesitated. "Being able to do those things, and not having to do something else—that's liberty, Jimmy and it's just about the most precious thing there is."

Jimmy found himself strangely moved. "I guess it's certainly worth keeping, all right," he said, and he knew how weak that was.

"Yes, it's worth keeping, Jimmy. Worth dying for. And when your country's threatened, or things look as if they might work out so you haven't got liberty anymore, your country has the right to deny you a number of those things, temporarily, and to demand the use of your services, not yourself, mark; but your services, for the defence of your country and liberty. The tough part of it though is that it had to happen again."

He paused and gazed at the smoke that was curling up from his pipe. "I guess we just didn't make much of a job of it, I know for myself, and I'm not just saying this to show you I was in the big show, Jimmy but I remember distinctly feeling as if I'd failed miserably at something big when I got back from France. Your mother met me—I hadn't been in the lines long—and I felt we'd missed an opportunity somehow. Things got a little busier after that and we had to hustle around quite a bit what with the depression and all but right through it was just like I said in the beginning. When you could see the broad outline the whole time was just an armed truce. I'll never foret a picture I saw in the spring of nineteen. It showed a huge field piled high with scrapped German aircraft — they were airplanes then — and when I think of the airforce they've got now I almost feel that something criminal has been done."

"Is it really that big?" Jimmy asked.

Mr. Riley nodded. "I've got it from pretty reliable squrces, not being any armchair general or anything, but it's fairly well known. The Luftwaffe is enormous. Canada hasn't realized the fact yet —at least the democratic people haven't — of just what a large part airpower is going to play if this war goes on. Britain is realizing it. They've sponsored a plan for training airmen over here, but it's going to take a while to get moving I'd imagine."

"Yeah, Chet was saying something about it. Said they're going to have to build all kinds of fields and stations and hangars and buildings."

"That's right. We've got some contracts down at the office already for hangars and huts, dormitory and administration buildings mostly. Something tells me though they're going to need a lot more. Say, Jim, it's eleven-thirty. You'll be beginning to think I'm a bore if I don't watch it."

"Gosh no, dad, I really enjoyed it. You know it's a long time since we've had a talk."

"Come to think of it, it is. Well, we can always do it again whenever we want. It's a free democracy." And he laughed. Then he grew serious again almost at once. "Don't forget what I told you though. Jimmy. Let's talk it over before you do anything. And in the meantime we can always hope for the best." Which led them right into the war situation; and Munich and Austria and Czechoslovakia and the invasion of Poland went under the bridge before father and son retired. Mr. Riley thought too, as had professor Smidley, that this man Churchill was a great man—well worth watching. Jimmy lay down in his bed, feeling more contented than he had for a long time. He'd have to do that more often. And just before he fell asleep he thought of Verna.

The gang was there all right. The Vic was packed even at nine-thirty when Jimmy and Margaret arrived. Johnny had a good band and the 'damage' as he billed it on the little invitation cards he sent out was within the means of everybody, including the most penurious undergraduate. The Hall was large, surrounded by driveways and treed paths and the crowd was always congenial. Bunny was the girl singer, lovely to look at as to listen to, while some of the players, especially Frankie on the piano, Russ on the drums, Artie on clarinet, were exceptional. It all added up to a very enjoyable weekly dance that everybody tried their best to attend. While Margaret went into the powder room to check her coat, for snow was just around the corner, Jimmy threw his own reversible gabardine into the other check room and paid the gate squad. Some of the other students were hanging around there too, smoking and talking, for girls always took an interminable time in the powder room; and Jimmy strolled over to where Chet and Cus and Punchy and Jake were talking. Spirits always ran high on Saturday night and his greetings were loud and hilarious.

"Jimmy boy. . ."

"Yeah wolf. . ."

"Hello men. What's cookng?" he replied, for that was the year of smart sayings. They listened to the band that was playing inside It was 'I'll see you Again' and Artie one of the local boys who played clarinet (a lot of boys played in bands then, some even working their way through college by means of two or three engagements a week) was riding it high It was the first of a long line of war love songs to come—We'll Meet Again, Till the Lights go on Again, Berkely Square, and the White Cliffs of Dover — but although Noel Coward had written it a long time ago it was still very good. Especially with Artie playing licorice stick, Jimmy reflected.

Sutton strolled up and Cuz, always curious, said, "Who're you with?"

Back Hurt; Limbs Ached,
Felt Tired Out; Rundown

Rheumatic Condition Followed Years of Suffering, Stomach Disorders; Nerves on Edge, Couldn't Sleep. Says Syntona Brought First Relief.

"For many years I suffered from stomach disorders and this seemed to make everything else go wrong," said Mr. Mike Michalewit, 406 Bay Street North, Hamilton, Ontario, in a recent report.

"Many days my stomach felt so sick and nauseated I didn't care whether I ate anything or not. I knew from long experience that food only gave me more gas and sour acid risings. I was always suffering with heartburn and a full, bloated sensation with shortness of breath. I was subject to dizzy spells and throbbing headaches. My back hurt all the time and finally rheumatic pains set in my limbs and joints. They would ache and felt stiff and sore. This condition made me very nervous. Many nights I couldn't get my proper sleep, so I felt tired and fatigued all the time.

"I read about Syntona many times, but I thought it was like everything else I had tried, so I didn't pay much attention to it. However, a few weeks ago I decided to try it. Now, I'm certainly glad I did.

"Even after a few days my stomach felt better. I found I was looking forward to my meals. I could eat without having all that gas, sour risings and heartburn. As I continued taking it, the sick, nauseated feeling left me. Now I enjoy every meal. I am free from dizziness and headaches. My nerves have calmed down, so I am getting sound sleep. Best of all, the aches and pains do not trouble me. It is certainly great to be rid of this trouble after all these years and I just cannot say too much in praise of this grand medicine."

Why not let this pure Herbal medicine help you as it has so many other grateful men and women? It is pleasant to take and many people say that even after the first few days the entire system seems to take on a new feeling of strength and energy.

Syntona is sold and recommended in Belleville at DOLAN THE DRUGGIST.

INCREASE PRODUCTION

Stockholm, Oct. 25 — (CP-Reuter) — The Germans have increased their production of poison gases during the past few months and now have 500,000 workers manufacturing it in 70 different factories working 24 hours a day, according to reports from Germany to the newspaper Aftonbladet.

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma started to turn on the radio and nothing happened, and ma said to pop, Oh dear, it's out of order, William, what do you suppose can be wrong with it?

Well, to give you a rather tecknical answer, it might be any one of a number of things, or on the other hand it might be a combination of things, pop said I'll take a look at it, he said, and ma said, Now William you know you dont know any more about the inside of a radio than you do about the inside of the man in the moon.

Then why did you ask me what I thought was wrong with it for Peet sake? pop said, and ma said, I didn't actually ask you, I just sort of idly put the question. There's no use of your going and monkeying with it in a blank daze and putting it from the frying pan into the fire. We'd better have a regular man come and look it over, she said.

Anyone that says I'm not a regular man is using fighting words, pop said.

And he quick went over to the radio and started to pat it and jiggle it and turn all the nobs different ways, and all of a sudden what did it start to do but work, maw saying, Well of all things will wonders never cease? What did you do, William? she said.

I merely put it back in working order, it was simple enough, pop said, and ma said, But I want to know exactly what you did so I can do it myself in case it happens again.

I'm afraid you'd only put it on the blink entirely, pop said, That sort of thing is man's work. Just let me know any time anything goes wrong with it and I'll be glad to attend to it, he said.

Oh, you're one of the seven hidden wonders of the globe, ma said.

And she went to answer the telephone and I said to pop, Do you really know what you did to the radio, pop? and pop said, I know as much about what I did as any man living.

Being an unproving answer.

Five Arrested For Possessing Stolen Car

Trenton, Oct. 26. —Trenton police yesterday arrested Fred Gurman, Frank Porter and James Vance, all of Hamilton, and Kay Elliott of London, Ont., and Betty Johnson, of Tillsonburg, all held on a charge of being in possession of a 1941 Mercury sedan stolen in the early hours of the morning from Hamilton. The car is owned by Mr. H. Thomas of St. Thomas, Ont., who was on a business trip into Hamilton.

Trenton police became suspicious that it was a stolen car when they received a telephone call from a party in Brighton, who stated that the above were allegedly trying to sell gasoline coupons in Brighton. Upon obtaining the number and description of the car Trenton police requested the informant to notify them which direction the car would take on leaving Brighton. They were later informed that the car was proceeding toward Trenton. Police cruiser was sent out to Dundas Street West and waited at the intersection of Dundas and Dufferin and after only a few minutes they observed the car approaching.

The cruiser pulled in front of the stolen car when the red traffic signal flashed against it. When questioned, the five stated the car belonged to Porter's father, however, the police were not satisfied and took them to the station. After searching the car and finding a five-gallon gasoline can, together with a four-foot length of rubber hose which is used by car thieves for siphoning gas, police were convinced the car was stolen. On opening the glove compartment they found mail addressed to a Hamilton man and also observed that a key was stuck in the ignition, which did not fit there, and they further observed that the wires had been cut and crossed and had to be pulled apart to stop the car.

Upon phoning the Hamilton police they learned the car had been reported stolen at seven o'clock in the morning. All five were held for the arrival of Detectives Young and Lawrence of the Hamilton city police. After considerable questioning the three men made a statement exonerating the two women from any implication in the theft. They stated that they picked them up on the highway at the outskirts of Brighton and that they did not know them. The two women were later liberated by the Trenton police and allowed to proceed on their way. The three men were returned to Hamilton, together with the stolen car.

The car was not damaged and was in good running condition.

Loan Sales Slower.

Though Wednesday was a slow day at Victory Loan headquarters here still the three-day total is somewhat greater than for the same period last loan.

Individual subscriptions on opening day totalled $43,260, while Tuesday showed $22,000 and Wednesday $13,400 making the three-day total $78,650.

Practically every industry in the town has gone well over the top with the percentages still climbing, and it is understood the sum total for the two air stations is considerably greater than at any previous time in any of the Seven Victory Loans.

Local canvassers are working diligently and it is up to each and every citizen to buy to the utmost of his or her ability in order that the final total of $540,000 may be raised for Trenton.

Cpl. Cooney Back in Canada.

Corporal Albert Cooney, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Cooney, was among those to be returned home to Canada recently and is now stationed at Manning Depot, Toronto.

Just 26 years of age, Corporal Cooney has been in the R.C.A.F. for more than four years enlisting in Sept. 1940, at Trenton. He trained at Rockcliffe and went overseas as replacement for the R.C.A.F. with the First Division. He served with the 417 City of Windsor Squadron, ground crew in stores equipment and spent two years on active service in the Middle East, taking part in the Alamein push.

Corporal Cooney proudly wears the African Star and Rosette and the Canadian Volunteer Medal.

ATTENTION OF TAX PAYERS

The last day for the payment of the fourth and last instalment of the 1944 taxes, without penalty being added, will be Friday, November 3rd., 1944.

Payment before that date would be greatly appreciated and would avoid any delay on your part which might occur through waiting until the last day.

On behalf of the staff and myself I wish to express our thanks for your co-operation in this respect in the past.

Treasurer and Tax Collector.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Oct. 26. (CP)— Mining groups held firm and moderate weakness was shown by the industrial and western oil groups in the early Toronto session today. Volume was down to 276,000 shares for the first three hours.

Abitibi Pfd traded in sizeable volume at a gain of 3-4 to 48 1-2 and other papers were steady. Utilities, Steels and Building stocks posted a margin of losses over gains and other industrial groups were steady.

Giant Yellowknife, Macassa, Cochenour Willans, Bear and Upper Canada weakened a few cents and Madsen, Frobisher, McKenzie and Heath were stronger. Nickel and Hudson Bay showed strength against weakness for Falconbridge and Lake Dufault. Foothills, British-Dominion and Mid-Continent were slightly weaker western oils.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

New York, Oct. 26 — (AP) — A handful of specialties continued to attract modest bids in today's stock market although many leaders were left to their own devices at slightly lower levels.

Industrial transition worries revived in the wake of the big Pacific victory which, some suggested, might bring the German and Japanese wars to an end at about the same time.

The trend was cloudy near the fourth hour. Dealings were about as slack as in the preceding session.

Another 1944 top was posted for Texas Pacific Land Trust. Occasional gainers of fractions were Westinghouse, Du Pont, Douglas Aircraft, American Telephone, Standard Oil (N.J.), Goodrich, Public Service of N. J. and Anaconda.

Lake Shore, off 3-8, was the only Canadian issues to appear in early trading.

TORONTO LIVESTOCK

Toronto, Oct. 26 —(CP)— Cattle trade was slow on the livestock market here up to mid-session today. A few butcher heifers sold steady at $6.50-$10.25 with boners downward to $5.50 and fed yearlings steady at $11-$13.

A few grass calves sold steady at $6.50-$8.

Lambs were steady at $13 off car and $12.50 off truck for good ewes and wethers.

A few sheep sold steady at $1-$4.

Hogs were steady at $17.65-$17.75 Grade A dressedweight with sows $13 dressed.

Receipts reported by the Dominion Marketing Service were: Cattle 55, calves 250, hogs 65, sheep and lambs 50. Unsold from yesterday were 3,700 head of cattle.

HOGS

Toronto, Oct. 26 (CP)—Prices were unchanged at bacon-hog markets reporting early today. Dressedweight, Grade A, delivered, London and Hamilton $17.50; Barrie and Hull $17.40; Stratford, to farmers $17.50, to truckers $17.65.

'IN LAST LAP'—CHURCHILL

Hopes 'Big Three' Leaders Can Meet Before End of Year

Prime Minister Satisfied Progress Made at Moscow

By ALEX SINGLETON, AP STAFF WRITER

London, Oct. 27 —(AP)— Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons today "a very good working agreement" had been reached with Russia on the problem of southeastern Europe, but acknowledged his efforts to end the Russian-Polish dispute, prime objective of his mission to Moscow, had not proved successful.

Likening himself to a wandering minstrel of diplomacy, Mr. Churchill said he and President Roosevelt should confer with Marshal Stalin before the year ends. But he declared that "all is solid, sure and sound" among the three allies.

The Prime Minister summed up the results of his conferences with Mr. Stalin as "highly satisfactory" and underscored the necessity for dispersing misunderstanding and forestalling them before they occur.

In one of the shortest reports he has ever made after a major conference, Mr. Churchill spoke only about 30 minutes. The House granted his previously-expressed plea that it refrain from using the report as the basis for a general policy debate.

TOUCHES BRIEFLY ON WAR.

He touched but briefly upon the military situation. Asserting that "we are in the last lap" of the European war, Mr. Churchill declared:

"Let all hope die in German breasts that there will be the slightest division or weakening among the forces that are crowding in upon them and will crush the life out of their resistance."

While he said recognition of the French provisional government heralded return of France to "her rightful and historic role on the world stage," Mr. Churchill declared that the future of the world in the next few years depended upon united action by the United States, Russia and Britain.

"Other countries," he said, "will be associated, but the future depends on the union of the three most powerful allies. If that fails all fails; if that succeeds a broad future for all nations may be assured."

He frankly acknowledged a solution had not been reached in the long-stalemated dispute between Russia and Poland.

"It is certainly not for want of trying," he said, adding: "I am quite sure however that we have got a great deal nearer to it."

Agreed on One Point.

But, he said, Britain, Soviet Russia and the United States "are all firmly agreed on the recreation of a strong, free, independent, sovereign Poland, loyal to the Allies and friendly to her great neighbor and liberator, Russia."

The Prime Minister expressed the hope that Poland and Russia would lose no time in resuming their discussions "and bringing them to an effective conclusion."

He said Hitler's remaining hopes rested on two factors:

"That by lengthening the struggle he may wear down our resolution and that division may arise between the three great powers."

Opening a report on his visit to Moscow, he declared he was satisfied the results had been "highly satisfactory."

He said: "The present stage of the war is dour and fighting must be expected on all fronts to increase in scale and intensity."

Must Exert Full Effort.

"We believe we are in the last lap," he asserted, "but this is a race in which the failure to exert the fullest effort to the end may protract that end."

He reported that never were Britain's relations with Russia "more close, intimate and cordial than at the present time" and that never had the two countries been able to discuss such "most delicate and potentially vexatious topics" with such frankness as was reached at Moscow.

"Where we could not agree," said Mr. Churchill — acknowledging for the first time publicly that there were differences still outstanding — "we understood the grounds for each other's disagreement and each other's points of view."

But he maintained that "over an astonishingly wide area" Britain and Russia found themselves "in full agreement."

"Let all hopes die in German breasts that there will be the slightest division or weakening in the forces that are closing in on

MUST SUPPLY VENISON

Salt Lake City, Oct. 27 — (AP)— Judge Joseph G. Jeppson went deer hunting and failed to return in time for the scheduled opening of court, so City Judge Karl V. King substituted, found Jeppson guilty of contempt and sentenced him to supply venison pies for everyone appearing in his court that day. The number is 50.

E. PRUSSIAN TOWN GUMBINNEN FACES IMMINENT FALL

Reports Say German Civilians Are Fleeing Konigsberg 66 Miles To South East

London, Oct. 27 (CP) — Fall of the East Prussian communications centre of Gumbinnen appeared imminent today as the Germans announced evacuation of civilians from the path of onrushing Soviet forces.

A Moscow communique declared last night the Red Army had captured Grunweitschen, four miles southeast of Gumbinnen, and Guddinn, seven miles east of the city. Shirgallen and Amalienhof, 10 miles to the east, also were taken.

Unconfirmed reports from Moscow asserted the Russians were believed fighting in the outskirts of Gumbinnen, a city of 15,000 to 20,000. Gumbinnen is 66 miles southeast of the provincial capital of Konigsberg.

German Civilians Fleeing

An American correspondent, speaking over the Moscow radio, reported German civilians already were fleeing Konigsberg in panic.

The Russian communique said the Germans were offering fierce resistance in East Prussia as the Red Army battled its way forward along the Kaunas-Konigsberg highway in hand-to-hand fighting in which at least 2,800 more Germans were slain.

Other Russian forces driving through Northern Finland captured six localities in the Petsamo area, including Piikajarvi, 37 miles south east of Petsamo, Moscow said. It added that security planes supporting the Norwegian invasion from Finland had sunk more than a dozen small German ships presumably moving south along the Norwegian coast after the fall of the naval base at Kirkenes.

5 Russian Columns in Ruthenia

Soviet forces which occupied the Czechoslovakian road junction of Munkacs (Mukacevo) yesterday were linked up today in a solid front with other Red Army units cutting across northeastern Hungary from conquered Transylvania. This drive has enveloped two-thirds of Hungarian-annexed Ruthenia and taken 18,000 prisoners in two weeks.

Approximately 4,886 square miles of Ruthenia have been overrun by five main Russian columns.

Descending the southern foothills of the Carpathian Mountains, Red Army troops yesterday captured Velke Berezne, 19 miles northeast of Ungvar (Uzhorod), former capital of autonomous Ruthenia.

Another Alpine unit captured Turja Remete, 15 miles northeast of Ungvar, while Munkacs, an industrial centre 21 miles southeast of Ungvar, was taken in a six-mile advance.

Other Soviet troops on the southern end of the front captured Vylok in a 17-mile advance along the Tisza River valley. Gen. Ivan Petrov's 4th. Ukraine Army column which took Munkacs joined Marshal Rodion Y. Malinovsky's 2nd. Ukraine units and pushed on northwestward.

Hun Counter-Attacks Fail

Moscow, Oct. 27 — (AP) — Heavy counter-attacks by German armor and infantry against the growing Russian salient in East Prussia were beaten back today by Red Army gunners who made their field artillery a deadly anti-tank screen.

Despite the enemy's continual reinforcement, Gen. Ivan Cherniakovsky secured control of a 15-mile stretch on the secondary rail line which runs northwest to Tilsit from the junction of the main Konigs-

Six Warships Lost by U.S. In Sea-Air Battle

Washington, Oct. 27 (AP)—American losses in defeating the Japanese navy in the battle of the Philippines totalled six warships—the aircraft carrier Princeton, two escort carriers, two destroyers and a destroyer escort.

Naming of the vessels, except the Princeton, which were lost in sinking or damaging at least 27 Japanese warships, were not disclosed in the navy's brief communique today, pending notification of the next of kin of casualties aboard the ships.

No details, the navy said, are yet available on circumstances of the loss of the ships, which probably carried a total of about 3,900 men.

A large portion of this total personnel was aboard the light carrier Princeton from which Admiral Nimitz, Pacific fleet commander, has said more than 1,300 officers and men were rescued.

The lost carrier escorts each carried a complement of probably 1,000 men, and each had a squadron of more than 21 planes.

Destroyers carry a normal complement of about 200 men, and destroyer escorts about 160.

The six losses raise to 170 the number of warships definitely listed as sunk since the United States entered the war, Dec. 7, 1941.

Japanese losses in the battle which cost the six ships, with official reports still incomplete are:

Two carriers, five cruisers and one battle ship definitely sunk; one carrier and two battleships probably sunk; and seven battleships, four cruisers, four destroyers and "several" more destroyers damaged. This makes a total of 26, plus the "several destroyers." Another cruiser subsequently was reported hit, bringing the toll to 27.

Winter Changing War Tactics, McNaughton Urges More Shells

Toronto, Oct. 27 —(CP)— Gen. A. G. L. McNaughton yesterday appealed for an increase in Canadian shell production because approaching winter was changing war tactics in Europe from "the swiftly mobile phase in which our men's intelligence, skill and superior mechanical equipment kept the enemy moving, to siege tactics in which the price of every objective can be paid either with lives or with shells."

Gen. McNaughton said he was appealing as a private citizen for increased shell production because "it is considered that I have specialized knowledge" of the type of warfare winter is forcing the United Nations to adopt in Europe.

Holding a press conference after a visit to the fuse-filling plant of general engineering, Gen. McNaughton explained that "up to the present, despite the incredible production of this country, we have never caught up with total requirements because of changing needs."

TESTING GERMAN ROBOMBS

An unusual scene in the U. S. air technical command's mammoth 20-foot wind tunnel located at Wright Field, Dayton, Ohio, in which an army air forces replica of the German robot bomb is now undergoing tests. Latest reports indicate the United States has its own version of the robomb, almost ready to go.

SOLID 40-MILE INVASION FRONT ON LEYTE ISLAND

Surge Deeper Inland to Free an Additional 15 Communities

By MURLIN SPENCER
Associated Press War Correspondent

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Leyte, Philippines, Oct. 27 —(AP)— American troops have carved out a solid 40-mile-long invasion front on Leyte Island and have surged deeper inland to free an additional 15 communities, a communique reported today.

The General advance continued, despite increased Japanese resistance west of Palo, in the North-Central sector, and a counter-attack which was repulsed on Samar Island. American guns and planes bagged 76 Japanese aircraft during "intermittent harassing raids" on the invasion armada.

The Americans secured control of Leyte's eastern coast, from the northern tip to Dulag, when a juncture was made south of American-held Tanauan, some 10 miles south of Tacloban.

Simultaneously, the southern end of the Leyte Valley trap was being closed tighter by tank-led troops who captured two key towns in a drive that overran several communities off the main highways.

Buri, previously by-passed because of its strong defences, was captured after severe fighting by forces punching up the valley's north-south highway. They previously took the Buri airfield and advanced several miles along the highway from the captured road junction of Burauen. Their main immediate goal evidently is Dagami, a communications town of the centre of the roadway.

Another unit pushing inland from the coast toward Dagami, captured Tabontabon, a river town 36 miles west of Cathon Hill, where strong Japanese entrenchments have been encircled.

Among the additional communities freed by the Americans were Anibung, Tigbao, Canmangui, Hidang, Bolongtohan, Kalvasag, Calampanon Malabka, San Gabriel, Kanmonhag, Telgrafo, San Joaquin and Diit.

Many of these communities lie northward of the East-West highway from Dulga to Burauen.

NO GUNS LOADED

Shelton, Neb., Oct. 27 — (AP) — George N. Mortimer was busy in his machine shop when he heard a fluttering sound and looked up to see a pheasant fly in to pay him a visit. Mortimer, a collector of guns, hurriedly eyed his 200 weapons and was about to select one when he remembered — as the bird flew away —none of his guns was loaded.

LOAN DROPS PART OF GAIN MADE IN FIRST 3 DAYS

Lacks Over $7,000,000 of Same Period in Previous Campaign

Ottawa, Oct. 27—(CP)—Canada's Seventh Victory Loan lost more than $7,000,000 of the gain registered in the first three days of selling when sales for yesterday—fourth day of the loan—dropped to $67,650,000, compared with the fourth day total of the sixth loan of $74,965,400.

Loan Headquarters today announced cumulative total for the four days stands at $283,688,600 compared to the sixth loan four-day total of $271,380,000. This loan's minimum objective is $1,300,000,000 which is $100,000,000 more than the minimum objective of the last loan.

Daily totals have been: Monday $68,260,300; Tuesday $77,269,800; Wednesday $70,508,450.

Of Thursday's total, $32,941,000 was purchased by individuals to bring the individual sales total for the first four days to $126,340,100.

"This means the average purchases of the individual Canadians in this loan have been about $31,600,000 daily," it was stated at Loan Headquarters. "In the last loan, when individuals purchased a record amount of approximately $643,000,000, the average daily purchases amounted to $35,700,000. Taking these figures into consideration, the apparent gain which we show in this loan at the present time, is not so significant. The fact is that the purchases of the individuals are more than $16,000,000 below what should be maintained to exceed the sixth loan total. We attach very great significance to the buying of those who purchase from savings and from their pay envelopes because, in the final analysis, they are the ones who really are capable of setting new records in this coming loan."

While reports had not been received from all provinces across the Dominion, Alberta today is the pace-setter. This Prairie Province now has sold 31 per cent of its overall objective.

First reports were received this morning from the British Columbia - Yukon area which advised that a total of $16,490,800 had been subscribed by the armed forces and the general public to date in that area. This is 30 per cent of the quota.

JAP FLEET RETIRES

London, Oct. 27 — (CP) — The Japanese fleet has retired after its raid on Allied naval units in Leyte Bay, said a Tokyo dispatch to the German Transocean Agency today, recorded by Reuters news agency.

The dispatch said the Japanese air force still was conducting operations in the area.

JAPANESE FLEET MADE AN AMAZING GAMBLE AND LOST

Disclosed Imperial Navy Actually Was in Leyte Gulf and Attacked Landings

Pearl Harbor, Oct. 27—(AP)—A Japanese naval disaster, threatening momentarily to surpass the enemy's 35-warship loss in 1942 off Guadalcanal, stemmed today from an amazing gamble which succeeded in getting enemy warships perilously close to invasion beaches on Leyte in the Philippines.

The confirmed sinking or damaging of 27 warships, including three carriers and 10 battleships in a trio of naval-air encounters, tells a far from complete story.

Remnants of the once-proud Imperial Fleet which, it now can be disclosed, actually penetrated Leyte Gulf and attacked transports engaged in Gen. MacArthur's landings, still were under relentless air pursuit. MacArthur announced today his land-based Liberators have damaged an enemy light cruiser in the Mindanao Sea.

But, without the continuing achievements, the already- accomplished blows promise to lift Japan's losses beyond the 35 warships sunk or damaged off Guadalcanal in November, 1942.

Several enemy destroyers are known to have gone down which are not included in the confirmed 27.

Today, Vice-Admiral Kinkaid, whose outnumbered 7th Fleet turned the tide from threatened disaster into history-making triumph in Leyte Gulf, made clear much more remains to be catalogued officially.

Kinkaid Split Fleet

It was Kinkaid who split up his fleet, took on two enemy warship forces converging on the Leyte invasion scene and trounced both while submarines, warships and carrier planes of the U. S. 3rd Fleet surprised and dealt mortal blows to enemy flat-tops attempting a sneak punch from Formosa waters.

YOUNGSTERS HAVE ESCAPE

Canadians Squeeze Trapped Germans Between 2 Armies

Bridgehead on S. Beveland Island Developing Well

London, Oct. 27 (CP) — In a nutcracker movement, British troops of the 1st Canadian Army, supported by Canadians, have landed on The Netherlands Island of South Beveland, north of the Schelde Estuary, and are pressing thousands of trapped Germans against other Canadian forces sweeping in from the east.

On the eastern side of the British salient in Holland, meanwhile, the Germans launched a counter-attack along a 10-mile front after a heavy artillery barrage. The attack, which was spread from The Netherlands town of Venlo on the German border south of Roermond, ran into a wall of fire and steel, front dispatches said.

Move to Open Antwerp

The fog-shrouded surprise South Beveland landing, which took place yesterday, reinforced the Canadian struggle on both sides of the Schelde to open Antwerp. A seven-square-mile beachhead was established.

Berlin accounts said this beachhead was "several kilometers deep" and was in the neighborhood of Hoedekenskerke, 5½ miles ahead of Canadian spearheads driving into the island from the east.

A Canadian attempt to land several thousand troops in amphibian tanks and landing craft at Hansweert, to the east of this bridgehead and across the South Beveland canal just ahead of the Canadian spearhead, was broken up this morning, the Germans declared.

Field dispatches said several towns were captured in the beachhead by the invaders who crossed the three to five-mile wide Schelde at 4 a.m., yesterday. Ross Munro, Canadian Press war correspondent, said they swarmed up the 20-foot dike and surprised thinly strung German machine-gunners. The beachhead was strengthened throughout the day yesterday by a ferry service.

Reach Canal

Munro, who reported the operation was going very well, said the function of the Canadian troops, who assisted British infantry in the landing could not be specified immediately.

(There still was no Allied confirmation of yesterday's German report of an amphibious landing on Walcheren.)

The Canadians, completing their drive down the two-mile wide, 10-mile-long neck of land connecting the mainland with the island, reached the South Beveland canal which cuts across the neck.

British troops, after a 15-mile westward drive in five days from their Nijmegen salient, had hemmed the Germans into a collapsing box and were smashing toward the Maas (Meuse) and Hollandsch Diep.

The British forces were fighting on a line from three to 16 miles south of the Maas and the Diep.

Tilbury Almost Surrounded

'S Hertogenbosch, eastern corner of the box, was in British hands. Tilburg, a city of nearly 100,000, 12 miles to the southwest in the centre of the line, was almost surrounded, with British troops in the outskirts. The British forces were fighting at Zundert, nine miles south of Breda to the west, and the Canadians were within two miles of Roosendaal and about as close to Bergen Op Zoom at the western end of the line.

The Germans had moved their headquarters from Tilburg to north of the Maas, and today's Allied supreme headquarters communique said the enemy had been forced to withdraw "all along the line" from Roosendaal to Tilburg.

The Canadian fight to free the south bank of the Schelde was all but over, with the Germans cleaned out of Oostburg. The 1st. Canadian Army troops were driving on Cadzand, four miles to the northwest where a few German guns still were active, and had by-passed Groede.

North of Antwerp Canadians overran the village of Pindorp, four miles east of Bergen Op Zoom and solidified positions within two miles of Bergen, while to the east British armor and infantry plowed through Nispen and advanced north to within two miles of Roosendaal.

British forces had cut the 'S Hertogenbosch-Tilburg road at two places, at Helvoirt, from where they had pushed on west to Heikant, and two and a half miles farther

Shepherd Dog Is "Seeing Eye" For His Terrier Pal

The handsome four-year-old German Shepherd dog walked slowly from his home in the house of Mr. and Mrs. I. G. Cook, service station owners in Shannonville.

Now and then he cast an inquiring look over his shoulder. A few paces to the rear walked a small fox terrier. In Indian file the pair of dogs walked slowly to a spot near the road.

At the Cook's gasoline tanks, a motorist who had paused for motor fuel, watched the strange procession.

He whistled. "Fritz" the large German Shepherd, his ears pointed sharply upwards, took a few steps in his direction, then squatted on his haunches. He looked over his shoulder at "Chum" his diminutive terrier pal.

A minute or two later, the big Shepherd walked slowly back to his canine friend, gently nuzzled him in the side and walked slowly to the front door of the house. The terrier, nuzzling at the Shepherd's legs, followed. The door opened and the pair of dogs disappeared within.

Curious at the strange proceedings, the motorist asked the service station attendant the "why's and wherefore's" of the dog procession.

Fritz is the self-appointed "Seeing-Eye" for his little friend. Daily he escorts him for his exercise outside. He keeps faithful watch over him, prevents him from going near the road and guards him from strangers. When the time comes for the return to the house, he gently nuzzles him and leads him home.

For "Chum," the little terrier, is fifteen years old, and blind.

Former Bread Deliverer Thinks The Horse Most Intelligent Animal

Talk of horses or old coins, and Frank Langabeer, who for sixteen years drove a Harris Bread Company delivery wagon, will settle down for an evening's chat.

The idiosyncrasies of Madame Housewife in her daily routine; the love affairs of junior misses, hang-overs of the "old man" and sometimes Junior's problems have poured into the Langabeer ears during nearly two decades of bread distribution.

The average housewife's mind is not always on her work, it appears. For instance Langabeer is in possession of several valuable coins proffered him as payment of bread. "For that matter" he says "my own mind could not have been very alert, for I never noticed the strange coins until I turned in the daily receipts."

Owns One Dollar Gold Coin

One of his most valued possessions is a one-dollar gold coin of American vintage of 1851. The tiny coin measures three-eighths of an inch in diameter, and bears 17 stars on one side and a picture of "Liberty" on the other. It was given him by an appreciative customer after several years of bread service.

On another occasion he was given an English gold sovereign in lieu of a copper. He has large coins, small coins, and coins of nearly every nationality.

But horses! That is a story of another color. Frank loves 'em, and thinks they are the most intelligent animals in the world. "You can have your dogs—give me a horse and a few months time and I'll have him figuratively as well as literally eating out of my hand."

Several Dobbins passed through the hands of Langabeer during his term of service. "Only once did I run into an obstinate nag — and it was a mare. Maybe that was the trouble. She just wouldn't learn anything, and the usual sugar and tobacco failed to tempt her."

Respond Well to Kindness

"My horses knew me. Kindness means a lot, and don't think for a minute that a horse hasn't any feelings. He gets to know you, and he'll do anything you ask him, if you go about it in the right way."

"They knew every stop on the route. Would turn around at the proper place and time, and if a new customer was secured on a route, they would hesitate maybe for a couple of days — then they knew the house was officially on the route."

But now, horses and old coins are but a memory. For Langabeer is working at Corbyville at a government job.

However, his eyes light up when a delivery wagon goes by, and he often stops to stroke the muzzles of members of the family of his former four-footed friends.

Seaman Keller Home On Furlough After Seeing Much Action

After more than three years away from Canada as crew member of a Canadian warship, which played a prominent part in the Allied invasion in the Mediterranean war theatre and also in D-Day operations, Seaman Herb. Keller, son of Mrs. Ethel Keller, 20 St. Paul Street, has returned home on furlough. He has two months' leave before reporting back for duty aboard his ship.

Stationed in and about England during his first months at sea, Seaman Keller had his first big thrill when he saw the refuelling craft which supplied the German battleship "Bismarck". Shortly afterwards his ship was instrumental in sinking a German undersea craft off the coast of Portugal.

Termed one of the finest ships in the Canadian navy, according to her Belleville crew member, it played an important part in invasion operations, going in close to blast enemy shore batteries with her guns. Seaman Keller, the only Belleville district boy aboard the warship, is a gunner.

With more than three years' experience at sea, the Belleville boy has many tales to tell of experiences both at sea and ashore in the different war theatres he has visited. He has been ashore in North Africa and in Italy, paying one visit to Rome. He was wounded during D-Day operations when a German coastal battery shell exploded near his ship killing one or two crew members and wounding others. He received a shell fragment behind his ear and still is slighty deaf from the effects of the wound.

Two brothers are in the services, both in the army. Elmer Keller, a member of an Irish regiment in Italy has been wounded and is at present in hospital, while Fred Keller is in Belgium with the R.C.A.

FANATICISM GREATEST PROBLEM AFTER WAR

Lewiston, Me., Oct. 27 — (AP) — John A. Moroso, Associated Press war correspondent, says that the war in Europe may continue into next spring and beyond. Addressing the Maine Teachers' Association last night, he said: "The Germans are tough and well-equipped. Many of them have been brought up in the Nazi tradition. They won't quit. They fight until you kill them. This fanaticism will be the greatest problem facing the United Nations after the war."

Belleville Pilot Destroys 100th Plane in Squadron

With RCAF City of Edmonton Squadron — An attack on a German airfield in the Stuttgart area, F/L. F. A. Johnson, of Belleville, Ontario, a pilot in the City of Edmonton Night Intruder Squadron, downed the 100th aircraft to be destroyed in the air by the squadron this year. His navigator was F/L. N. J. Gibbon, D.F.C., of Vancouver (2356 Marine Drive.)

Crossing Europe at treetop height, in poor visibility, their Mosquito aircraft took the Germans by surprise.

"The navigation was bang-on," F/L. Johnson praised F/L. Gibbons. "We arrived over the target area at the time we figured and stooged around, looking for Jerry, but business didn't seem good. The cloud was almost on the deck and we flew about for 35 minutes before we spotted a kite. They obviously didn't suspect we were in the district because this fellow came in with his navigation lights on. He flew around with us tailing him for five minutes as he broke into the circuit."

"Finally, when we were about 100 yards behind him I let blast with everything I had. Both his motors caught fire and he exploded before he hit the deck. It was a three-second burst but that was enough."

"When he exploded," said F/L. Gibbon, "the whole sky was lighted like day. Johnny pulled up in a hurry and we passed through the top of the debris as he disintegrated. There wasn't a piece of his aircraft big enough to hurt us, though."

Following their success, they stayed over the target area for another 35 minutes without result. They agreed that the aircraft destroyed was a Junkers 88 and as it exploded they saw eight or nine similar craft on the ground. None would come up to challenge them.

F/L. Gibbon is one of the veterans of the Edmonton Squadron. He has completed one tour of operations and this most recent sortie was the 13th. on his second tour.

Before coming to England, F/L. Johnson was an instructor at Uplands, near Ottawa. His wife resides in Belleville.

Madoc Soldier's Wife Buys Bond In Every Campaign

As the result of good financial management and by making every penny count in the upkeep of the home, the wife of an overseas Madoc soldier had found it possible to participate in every previous Victory Loan campaign and in each instance has purchased a bond for cash.

But with her two children growing gradually into the age, where they are naturally harder on clothes with consequent heavier drains on the family income, in the Seventh Victory Loan this courageous Madoc soldier's wife had found herself without the ready cash to do as he has done in previous loans. But she still is going to buy a Victory Bond in the current campaign.

Religiously saving her interest coupons from her bonds bought previously, this soldier's wife is going to turn them into cash for the initial payment on a bond of the Seventh Victory Loan issue.

What this Madoc woman has done, and is doing, many others in Hastings county in much more fortunate circumstances can do. She realizes that her Victory Bonds represent a nest egg which will do much to assist her family in the post war period and that they are the safest and surest investment available.

The History of Dogs Goes Back 7,000 Years

By J. WENTWORTH DAY
(In London Calling)

Five thousand years before Christ walked in Galilee they had a Greyhound and a Terrier in Egypt and Chaldea. I have seen them painted on tombs at Western Thebes, far up the Nile, and elsewhere in the hidden galleries of the dead in that fascinating land of man's most ancient history.

And at about the same time that artists and sculptors in Egypt and Chaldea were painting and sculpting greyhounds and the golden tassel-eared Saluki—who is a Greyhound but lovelier—and those queer, short-legged little dogs which were Pharaonic Terriers, the Vikings had a dog which was of undoubted Elk-hound type. That was proved by Professor Brinchmaun just before this war when Norwegian antiquarians unearthed at Vistehollow a vast cemetery of bones of men and animals—among them four dogs.

So, at a rough guess — for no man may be certain—we may say that the three oldest breeds of dogs in the world are probably the Greyhound, the dog of the chase, the Terrier whom the old French called "la terriere" because it was the dog which went to earth in the burrows of other animals, and the Elkhound, or Husky type, which was the original watchdog of the herds. All three have known roots at least 7,000 years old.

• • •

From the third of the most ancient trinity of dogs, the Husky type, we have the Samoyed, the Chow, the Eskimo Husky, the Norwegian Elkhound, very probably the Dutch bargedog or Keeshond and, only just possibly, the Alsatian. Round the suspicious eyes and wolf like head of the latter, a storm of controversy, abuse, and calumny has raged ever since October 15, 1781, when Dr. Pallas, the famous scientist and ornithologist, wrote in a letter that he had seen, at Moscow, animals which were the undoubted result of a cross between a dog and a wolf, a theory which was later endorsed by Collinson, a famous authority on dogs and dog history.

Probably the oldest theory in this fascinating game of hunting out the roots of dog history is that the first dog was the result of a cross between a wolf and a jackal, or, alternatively, that it was just a plain wolf, tamed and domesticated perhaps 10,000 years ago.

The wolf-descent theory is perhaps best borne out by the Husky group, all of which resemble the wolf in their pricked ears, size, build, shape of head and texture. Also, like the wolf, they do not bark but, unlike the wolf, they carry their bushy tails curled tightly over their backs.

For my own part, having studied all sorts and breeds of dogs in various countries, I have an open mind on the various theories of dog origin. What is certain is that you can produce almost any sort, size, shape, type, color, or breed of dog by careful breeding over a space of time and by using them for a specific purpose.

• •

For example, the Greyhound or Saluki in Egypt, Arabia, and other desert countries developed its graceful streamlined body, high speed and staying power because it was used solely for hunting gazelle, buck, desert hares and other fast quarry over illimitable miles of sand.

The Terrier's short legs, tremendous courage and powerful forepaws are the result of centuries of digging in the dark galleries, cairns and caverns of powerful foes such as the badger—whose jaws close like a steel trap and will bite thru' a man's foot—the fox, and the polecat.

The Husky needs his thick, coarse coat with its "undervest" of close wool, his stubborn nature and compact, powerful body if he is to live through long Arctic nights of snows and bitter frosts for nine months each year.

The true English terrier, which was all white, was not much known before 1800, although the Cairn, probably the oldest terrier breed in the country, was going strong in Scotland long before then. He was used by Highland shepherds for bolting the great, grey hill-foxes from their lairs in the cairns of rocks, hence the name. Yet the Cairn terrier was comparatively unknown in London and seldom seen at any English dog shows before 1914.

As for the Skye he is, of course, a diminutive type who came from the Island of Skye, just as that charming, intelligent and only just beginning to be known breed, the Shetland Collie, is a diminutive of the Scottish Collie. Like all island types it has decreased in size from that of its original mainland forbears.

• •

That grand dog, the Airedale, is not much more than 80 years old and he is supposed to have begun as a cross between that very ancient breed "the old English working terrier," which was an uncouth looking animal of indefinite points, and an Otterhound. If that is so, and we have no definite records to prove it, the otterhound blood would account for the Airedale's sagacity, his wiry shagginess of coat, heavy bone and trustworthiness. He is, in any case, one of the best of the Terrier breeds—so long as he does not take to sheep-chasing, which is a fault likely to develop if not watched.

One of the earliest Terriers and certainly one of the most attractive, intelligent and cleanly bred is the Manchester which is too seldom seen nowadays. The Manchester was known in 1800 and described by Richardson in 1847 as a graceful, active English terrier with black and tan markings.

Even the Foxhound, which we regard as the most typically English and traditional hound, is less than 250 years old. He began, in any case, as a cross between a French Staghound and a Bloodhound. The Bloodhound type was the Talbot, a great upstanding animal brought to this country by the Normans and used extensively as a house-guard.

Later, in the Middle Ages, it was used as a travelling guard-dog for the trains of merchants, pedlars, and others who crossed and recrossed the country by immemorable bridlepaths and rough pack roads which wound over desolate moors and healthy wastes, through deep woods, and skirted the immense fens of Cambridgeshire, Lincolnshire, Huntingdonshire, and Norfolk. Robbers and footpads were everywhere, often the disbanded and desperate soldiery of the last war.

• •

James I, who was a great hunter and sportsman and to whom Newmarket owes most of its beginnings, improved the two types of English hunting dogs, the "Northern and Southern Hounds," which had come down from the Talbots by crossing them with a pack of French Staghounds sent him by Henry IV of France. But three acknowledged Hound authorities, Johnson who wrote the Hunting Directory in 1850, Youatt, author of The Dog, and "Scrutator," who wrote the Science of Foxhunting, all believed that a Greyhound cross was also introduced. So there you have the English Foxhound, the proudest British dog representative, emblem of everything English — an amalgam of Bloodhound, Staghound and Greyhound.

Hugo Meynell, who became Master of the Quorn in 1752, was the father of the modern Foxhound, although the Duke of Beaufort's pack was begun in 1728 and the Brocklesby lists in 1716.

As for the British bulldog, the national emblem, he is barely a century old—and a far, far different animal today from the long-snouted, active, leggy Bull Terrier which was the real Bulldog used for bull baiting. Can anyone imagine a modern, snuffling, bow-legged, short-snouted, amiable old Bulldog pinning an infuriated and active bull by the nose?

Spaniels were originally Spanish lapdogs sent to the British Courts a bare 300 years ago—"les chiens d'Espagnols"—and if women continue to spoil them, and show-breeders to inbreed them, they will soon degenerate into lapdogs again.

The Pointer, too, is said to have originated from a Spanish pointing dog—"de punta." It was well established here in 1730, and the Duke of Kingston, at Thoresby Park in Nottinghamshire, had many, including some black ones, in 1725. Today the Pointer is becoming almost a museum piece, owing to the short stubbles in the modern harvest fields, which no longer create a need for a "pointing dog." It is a pity, for the Pointer is a gentleman among dogs, a dignified and friendly animal of great good looks, with clean lines and a sober intelligence.

The Retriever, bless his gallant heart and level head, is scarcely more than 80 years old, for did they not originate, round about the 'fifties, as a cross between a Newfoundland dog and a Setter.

The War Today— Jap Navy Cannot Recover, Back in Capital Ships Broken

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
Associated Press War Analyst

They say it's an ill wind that blows nobody good, but the only comfort the Japanese can get out of the United States Hurricane which they ran into off the Philippine archipelago is that their disaster was no worse.

With more facts about this historic engagement at hand — though the story is far from complete — we now can say with assurance that the enemy has suffered not only a major defeat but a decisive one. It's decisive in that it guarantees the Allies success in the great and difficult battle of the Philippines. And since these islands are the key to the war in the Pacific we know that this conflict will be greatly shortened.

Japan's Navy, which was estimated to total about 200 ships before the current engagement, has been crippled. It's back has been broken by the heavy loss in capital ships.

The Japs lost more than 27 important ships — how many more remains to be confirmed. These included 10 battleships which secretary of the navy Forrestal estimates as representing two-thirds of all Japan had of these Leviathans.

Misfortune Multiplied Upon Japs.

It may help us to assess the full significance of the catastrophe that has overtaken the Mikado's navy if we recall what happened at Pearl Harbor in 1941. The brigands from the Orient sank or damaged 18 warships— and eight of these were battleships. That pretty well hamstrung the United States in the Pacific for a long time, and vastly contributed to the enemy success in overrunning strategic islands.

Well, that's the misfortune — multiplied—which now has been handed back to the Japanese. But their position is desperate, for they haven't the resources to recover from the blow as did the United States. They no longer are capable of facing the American naval forces for the Pacific fleet has several times the numerical strength of the best that Japan can muster. Not only that, but the admiralty announced the other day that it had started to move into the Orient a huge British fleet capable of giving battle to the entire Japanese navy —and this was before the Japs suffered disaster off the Philippines.

Jap Navy May go Defensive.

What chance has the Japanese fleet in face of all this? I think we may expect it to pull out of the south China Sea and return to the defensive. Probably much of it will be retained in home waters to shield the Motherland against the Allied assault which already is boiling up.

This means that Japan—already short of warships to guard her long and vulnerable communications to the East Indies—is further weakened in this respect. Upon those communications rests her ability to continue the war, for she is dependent on Java and other Indonesian territory for numerous vital supplies. In short, those communications represent Japan's lifeline.

Mess Room Chatter Of Canada's Airmen

With the R. C. A. F. Overseas, Oct. 27 —(CP)— Small wonder that Sqdn. Ldr. Jack Beirnes said it was the "best do in quite a little while". His Wildcat Typhoon squadron had just wiped out a stationary ammunition train so effectively with cannon fire that there just wasn't any trace of the train from the air.

Beirnes, who comes from Tofield, Alta., was leading seven other Typhoons and came down in a flat dive after spotting the train—made up of twenty cars—near Tilburg in Holland. Ammunition was being unloaded from some of the cars and the Germans threw up some light flak as protection.

While the rest of the squadron stayed with the flaming train, "beating it up" systematically as one car after another blew up, Beirnes headed for the gun-posts, one-quarter of a mile to the north. After his attack there was no further flak.

Then the Typhoons moved over to another train near Boxtel and knocked out the engine. They broke off only because the squadron could not afford to use up any more ammunition, in the event of being "bounced by German fighters on the way home."

Obviously more than one Canadian airman has run the gauntlet of souvenir hunters in Brussels and contributed to the current fad among the Belgian capital's fairer sex—that of wearing Allied badges.

The R. C. A. F.'s Canada flash has been noted on many a feminine shoulder, while brass buttons also have been prominent.

A casual census reveals that leading aircraftmen have "suffered more than any other rank, for their little propellor insignia outnumbered corporal or sergeant's stripes about five to one.

The game season is open in France, and not only for Germans as far as members of a Canadian Spitfire wing are concerned. A tasty Sunday dinner of 60 partridges gave ample evidence that some of the officers have not lost their skill with a shotgun.

Within a radius of three miles of their camp, the Canadians find partridge, pheasants and hare. Occasionally they hunt in a jeep, but usually they stalk the fields, gun under arm, in the same manner they hunted at home.

Flt. Lt. Tommy Hoare of Winnipeg, proved to be the ace nimrod of the aircraft. His marksmanship was responsible in a large part for the Sunday spread. Wing Cmdr. Johnny Johnson, D. S. O. and two bars, D. F. C. and bar, was not far behind. The English ace is an enthusiastic hunter and spends much of his spare time in the fields. His black bird dog, Sally, always accompanies him.

Flt. Sgt. Howard Kiddie, of (1576 Bathurst St.) Toronto, had a special 21st birthday present from men of the British 6th Airborne Division. They gave him his freedom after 14 days of hiding and living in the Hun lines in France. Kiddie bailed out over Normandy when his plane was shot down and for a week he lived in a cave on food brought to him there by the French.

Prove Their Loyalty

How worthy the smaller nations are of the freedom for which they have struggled under the German occupation is apparent to everyone. There has been stout resistance to the Hun and there has been an underground which has maintained alive the spirit of freedom despite the Hitler and Himmler oppression.

The Filipinos are a people who have given a fine demonstration of loyalty to their ideal and to their patriotic instinct. They have never ceased to fight in their islands against the Japanese. A communique from General MacArthur's headquarters in the Philippines this week makes this clear that though inadequately armed they never quit their fight against the Japanese.

That is what freedom does for peoples. The Filipinos have come to know freedom and have been ready to fight for it against a brutal tyrannic power, that of Japan, the would-be enslaver of the Pacific world.

First Snowflakes

The first snowflakes of the season on Thursday created quite a realistic prelude to the later autumn and the winter weather of next month and the following months.

The first snowflurries of winter are generally a time for children to become sportive as the little flakes whirl playfully and freakishly about.

To older folk, however, such a scene creates a sudden ambition to do any work which has been neglected about the lawn or in the shed or in the basement, to gather in any crops that are without and to make sure the storm windows and doors are on and to put everything in readiness in case the wintry visitor should soon appear in earnest.

Winters almost without exception give a clear hint of their coming a considerable time in advance with frost, dropping temperature, rain falls and such like and afterwards there is some time before the winter season comes to settle down on the country. In the thirties there was one winter however when the first snowfall in late October turned into winter itself for the snow and rain froze to the ground, to wires and trees, freezing the apples on the branches and not letting go its hold. That early snow must have stayed for the entire winter because a real snowfall followed the first flakes. But that sudden arrival of winter was most unusual.

Farm Production in 1943

Agricultural production in Ontario last year went far beyond the half billion mark, touching $572,322,000 for an increase of $16,433,000 over the previous year and $324,638,000 greater than in 1932, the lowest point of the depression. Practically all items in 1943 were higher than in 1942, reports of the Ontario Department of Agriculture Statistic Branch states. Fruits and vegetables showed the largest gains of from $31,611,000 to $54,261,000, poultry and eggs increased from $102,716,000 to $112,602,000, farm animals from $139,208,000 to $141,000,000 and tobacco from $18,625,000 to $18,780,000.

For the whole of Canada the agricultural production grossed last year $2,220,527,000 as against $2,078,954,000 in 1942 and $766,794,000 in 1932.

Of the 1943 production apples accounted for 790,590 barrels for a value of $3,038.700 with peaches crop second worth $2,673,000 and grapes third $1,651,000. Cherry crop totalled $603,200.

In farm crops oats led with 1,457,000 acres producing $19,072,000 or $13.09 per acre and 23.8 bushels per acre. Fall wheat was worth $14,148,000 or $23.54 per acre. Beans brought $36.54 per acre, peas $32.97 per acre. 47,000 acres in soy beans brought in a harvest of $1,573,000.

Potatoes earned $147.78 per acre, turnips $100.28 per acre, mangels $96.60, green corn for silo on 307,000 acres worth $10,714,000 while hay and clover on 2,625,000 acres created wealth worth $50,400,000 at the rate of $19.20 per acre and two tons per acre. Alfalfa crop, 2,215,000 tons, was valued at $22,593,000, or at the rate of $28.445 per acre. Sweet clover crop was worth $2,628,000 from 187,000 acres.

In Hastings County the assessed acreage is 1,042,205 with 402,029 acres cleared or 38.58 per cent cleared. In Prince Edward County the percentage of cleared to total land acreage is 84.84 surpassed only by Durham with 85.20 per cent cleared—these figures being for Central Ontario. In Southern Ontario the highest percentage of cleared land is in Middlesex at 91.87.

Do's and Don't's

Christmas parcels are on their way to their objectives, wherever are the heroic sons of Canada in the armed forces. A great total has been posted in all parts of Canada for the boys not at home.

Of course other parcels will continue in ceaseless flow as they have continued in the war. Again it may not be out of place to emphasize a few don't about making up parcels:

Don't send perishable goods.

Don't send glass jars for glass may break and contents ruin a parcel contents as well as other parcels.

Don't send honey or molasses in wax-paper containers. Send them in sealed tins.

Don't put soap or talcum powder in the same parcel with food.

Don't include small articles in letters—they break out.

Don't use gummed paper in place of strong cord.

Don't include gifts for civilians in service parcels.

Don't include matches or lighter fluid. This must be particularly stressed for the great danger from fire to contents of the box and other boxes and even to the ship and the crew of the ship.

Now here are the things to do:

Do use strong cardboard corrugated containers and strong wrapping paper.

Do wrap all articles individually.

Do fill all empty spaces with crumpled newspapers.

Do tie parcel with strong cord.

Do check parcel addresses and names carefully and use block letters in ink.

Do fill in the customs declaration and include sender's address.

Do mail early for anniversaries.

Do write often and do write cheerfully.

Among don't's too much stress cannot be placed on the prohibition against putting matches or lighter fluid in parcels. It is an offence to do and common sense alone should advise against this practice. Only last Monday in reference to a fire in a ship at Montreal on which parcels had been placed for overseas shipment, it was stated that if matches caused the fire which damaged some mail, and it could be learned who placed them in a parcel, there would be prosecution. There has been no end of warnings against any such inclusion of matches or lighter fluid and long before this time people should know what the law says and why inclusion of these is forbidden.

Fala Didn't Care

(New York Herald Tribune)

In the telling of more important news about the President's visit here Saturday, there was no mention of the near approach of crisis in Brooklyn.

In the open car, at the Army Base, sat President Roosevelt, lover of Scotties, and Mayor F. H| LaGuardia, sworn enemy of unleashed dogs. Between them sat Fala, without a collar, without a leash, and without a care in the world, eyeing the great outdoors.

Fortunately for the state of the nation, Fala was continued to sit, and the Mayor was not faced with the duty of impounding the President's dog for six months and possibly fining the President a dollar or two—just as a warning.

What to do with Germany when she is beaten? asks Hamilton Spectator. Those many Allied merchant seamen who were machine-gunned, as they struggled amid flaming oil or drifted far from land on seas of brass, could readily enough offer an effective formula.

BOYS AND AN APPLE TREE

I had a fruited apple tree
Which passers-by could never see
And thus shut off from public view
I thought its presence no one knew,
But unto apples, green or red,
By some strange power small boys are led

Today—though 'tis against the law—
A youngster in that tree I saw,
And two companions down below
To catch whatever fruit he'd throw.
"What's going on out there?" I cried.
"We're stealing apples!" one replied.

Away they ran, as once did I
In happier days so long gone by.
Away they sped, as once I did
When I stole apples, as a kid,
But oh so swiftly time flows on,
It's now my turn to cry: "Begone!"

Now this I've learned: small boys will

Howe'er concealed, where apples grow.
Nor all an old man's selfish care
Can keep the lads from thieving there,
But this I know: I'd rather be
A boy than old and own the tree.

them and will crush the life out of their resistance," he said.

Mr. Churchill reported Russia and Britain had reached "a very good working agreement" about Greece, Romania, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia and Hungary.

That agreement, he said, was designed with the double objective of concentrating their efforts against "the common foe and providing so far as possible for a peaceful settlement after the war is over."

Speaks on France.

Shifting to Allied recognition this week of Gen. De Gaulle's provisional government of France, Mr. Churchill said it could be regarded "as a symbol of France's emergence from four dark years of terrible and woeful experience."

It could be regarded as "heralding a period in which she will resume her rightful and historic role on the world stage."

He turned then to the problems of Greece, saying that when the country returned to "normal conditions of tranquility . . . the Greek people shall make in perfect freedom their decision as to the form of government under which they desire to live."

In the meantime, Mr. Churchill said, Britain was doing its best to stabilize Greek currency. Foreign Secretary Eden now is in Athens consulting with the Greek government on that problem, he added.

A direct question as to whether Britain still wanted to defer until victory a decision on Poland's eastern border drew from Mr. Churchill the reply that he hoped an agreement would be reached "between the parties themselves."

"That," he said, "would bring the whole matter to the peace conference in a form most helpful and favorable to all concerned and also would tide us over the difficult and potentially tragic period through which we are passing."

Mr. Churchill spoke for about 30 minutes, in delivering one of the shortest reports he ever made following a major conference.

HOPES BIG THREE—

Good Working Agreement.

"Upon the tangled questions of the Balkans where there are Black Sea interests and Mediterranean interests to be considered we were able to reach complete agreement," Mr. Churchill said, "and I do not feel that there is any immediate danger of our combined war effort being weakened by divergencies of policy or of doctrine, in Greece, Rumania, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia and, beyond the Balkans, Hungary.

"We have reached a very good working agreement about all these countries singly and in combination with the object of concentrating all their efforts and concerting them with our efforts against the common foe and of providing so far as possible for a peaceful settlement after the war is over.

"We are in fact acting jointly—Russia and Britain—in our relations with both the Royal Yugoslav Government headed by Dr. Subavitch and with Marshal Tito and we have invited them to come together in the common cause as they had already agreed to do at the conference between them both at Naples.

"How much better that there should be a joint Anglo-Russian policy in this disturbed and very complex area than that one side should be backing one set of ideas and the other the opposite. That is a most pernicious state of affairs to grow up in any country because it might so easily spread to misunderstanding between the great powers themselves.

"Our earnest hope and our bounden duty is so to conduct our policy that these small countries do not slip from the great war into internal feuds of extreme bitterness.

Only a Guide

"We have invited them to come together and form a united government for the purpose of carrying on the war, and, of course, until the countries themselves can pronounce. All this of course is only a guide for the handling of matters from day to day because it is so much easier to come to an arrangement by conversation than by diplomatic correspondence, however carefully they are phrased or however lengthily they are expressed or however patiently the discussions are conducted. Face to face, difficulties which appear really insuperable at a distance are very often removed altogether. But these workaday arrangements must be looked upon as temporary expedients to meet an urgency.

"All permanent arrangements await the presence of the United States who have been kept constantly informed of what is going forward. Everything eventually will come to review at some future conference or at an armistice or peace table."

"There were of course a good many serious military questions to be discussed. I had with me the chief of the Imperial General Staff (Field Marshal Sir Alan Brooke), Gen. (Hastings) Ismay, and other officers acquainted with the conduct of the whole of our military affairs and strategy, and we have also the advantage of the assistance not only of the American Ambassador but also of the very able United States technical representatives, Gen. Deeds. All these discussions were part of the process of carrying out and following up the great decisions taken now nearly a year ago at Teheran, which I think without exaggeration may be said to have altered the face of the world war.

"But naturally I cannot say anything about these discussions or decisions except that I found them very good indeed — the best that could be devised to lift the cruel scourge of war from Europe at the earliest possible moment.

Two Crucial Issues.

"The most urgent and burning question was of course that of Poland, and here again I speak words of hope reinforced by confidence. To abandon hope in this matter would indeed be to surrender to despair. In this sphere there are two issues—two crucial issues. The first is the question of the eastern frontier of Poland with Russia and the Curzon line, as it is called, and the new territories to be added to Poland in the north and west.

"That is the first issue, and the second is the relation of the Polish government with the Lublin National Liberation Committee. On those two points, apart from many necessary ancillary points—on these two main points—we held a series of conferences with both parties. We held them together, we saw them together, and saw them separately and of course we were in constant discussion with the heads of the Soviet government."

Polish Reference.

In his reference to Poland Mr. Churchill declared:

"Speaking more particularly for His Majesty's government, is our persevering and constant aim that the Polish people, after their suffering and vicissitudes, shall find in Europe an abiding home and resting place which, though it may not entirely coincide or correspond with the prewar frontier of Poland, will nevertheless be adequate for the needs of the Polish nation and not inferior in character and in quality, taking the picture as a whole, to what they had previously possessed.

"These are critical days and it would be a great pity if time were wasted in indecisions or in protracted negotiations. If the Polish government had taken the advice we tendered them at the beginning of this year, the additional complication produced by the formation of the Polish National Committee of Liberation at Lublin would never have arisen. Anything like a prolonged delay in the settlement can only have the effect of increasing the division between Poles in Poland and also hampering common action which Poles and Russians and the rest of the Allies are taking against Germany.

"Therefore I hope no time will be lost in continuing these discussions and pressing to an effective conclusion."

THE IRON AND TEA CLUB

The formula for Hair Tonic you recommend (writes M. C. J.—much to my consternation, until I realized the man uses the term "hair tonic" as some people use the term "stimulant" for alcoholic liquor) is doing its work. Now I want to know what to use to counteract the yellow or reddish stain in my gray hair without loss of its benefit. I wash my hair every two weeks with ordinary toilet soap and water, rinse it several times in clear water and finally use a mild bleach of bluing (M.C.J.)

The formula to which the correspondent refers is given in the pamphlet "Care of the Hair, and Control of Dandruff" mailed on request if you provide stamped, self-addressed envelope). It is a solution of salicylic acid and resorcin in toilet water, to apply to the scalp by means of an atomizer with tip bent at right angle and almost in contact with scalp, night and morning, for excessively oily or greasy scalp and hair.

That is the one drawback about using resorcin—it tends to impart a yellowish or reddish stain to white, gray or very blond hair. This stain disappears a month or two after you discontinue applying the resorcin. Persons with dark or brown or "black" hair may use resorcin with little or no indication of such staining of the hair.

The only recourse for M. C. J., I reckon, is to join the Iron and Tea Club. Put a piece of copperas (that is iron sulfate, not copper) the size of a pea into a pint of freshly brewed tea, preferably black tea. Now that's what the lady said, the lady who discovered this harmless homely way to dye gray or graying hair and keep it brown or dark. She said black tea. Another time we'll wrangle about tea. Here I can only tell you what the lady said. Use your own judgment and inclination as to the frequency with which you apply iron and tea to your hair. One good way to apply it is by wetting a soft brush with it and brushing the hair lightly. Another good way is by dipping a clean soft cloth in it and drawing strands of hair through the cloth—the object being to apply the iron and tea to the hair but not to the scalp—although no particular harm is done if some gets on the scalp.

Candidly if you join the I & T Club you must come in on probation. If you don't like it, then you can get th—you can go out quietly, I hope. Some people like it and some don't. This is positively all I can tell you about the use of iron and tea to darken graying hair. Try it and tell us (anonymously, of course) whether you find it satisfactory.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Oil is Good Food

Is cotton seed oil, peanut oil, coconut oil wholesome food for man? What is your opinion of ——— which is said to be made chiefly of coconut oil? (H.W.H.)

Answer—These oils are excellent food, equal in nutritive value to any other fats or oils used as food. I am not familiar with the product you mention, but the fact that it is made chiefly of coconut oil is favorable.

What! No Toothbrush?

I was 21 years old when I came to this country (1921). I had never seen a toothbrush nor heard of a dentist. In the old country it was our custom to rinse out the mouth once a day with a little salt water. I was two years in this country when my teeth began to bother me —I went to a dentist and he said I had wonderful teeth—it was the first time in his professional life he had found a patient 22 years old with only one cavity. (C.N.A.)

Answer—The odds are a four dollar set of complete works of Ol' Doc Brady to a used postage stamp that the diet you followed in the old country was superior from the viewpoint of nutrition to the diet you followed in this country. Toothbrush or no toothbrush, that explains it. If you wish to learn more about it send twenty-five cents and stamped self addressed envelope for new edition (just out) of "Save Your Teeth." I am anxious to send it with my compliments to dentists who will provide a stamped envelope bearing their address. Want 'em to know that title I proposed for them has been deleted.

JAPANESE FLEET

Today Kinkaid told Dean Schedler, Associated Press war correspondent in the Philippines, that the Japanese risked from 39 to 46 warships in the two battles near Leyte and only 20 retired. That general summary suggested from 19 to 26 enemy ships were bagged although it did not differentiate between sunk and damaged. But the 20 which got away were pursued by planes and, doubtless, as yet undisclosed damage was heaped on them.

MacArthur-Nimitz communiques on the two battles near Leyte, plus a flagship dispatch from Rear Admiral Daniel Barbey, listed 14 enemy warships confirmed as sunk or damaged in those two battles.

Eight of the 14 — two battleships, three cruisers and three destroyers—were sunk. Four battleships, a cruiser and a destroyer were damaged.

Twelve more of the 27 confirmations have come as incompleted reports on 3rd Fleet blows dealt south of Formosa. It is known that two enemy carriers and two cruisers were sunk, a large carrier and two battleships probably sunk, two battleships and three cruisers damaged. Still to be added to the confirmations are several destroyers damaged.

46 Jap Ships in Action

The 27th confirmation was the light cruiser hit by Liberators in the Mindanao Sea, a sector through which one segment of the Japanese fleet naturally would flee after being forced back through Surigao Strait. This was the fleet group which approached Leyte from the southeast and actually penetrated the gulf.

Kinkaid's estimate of perhaps 46 enemy warships sent into action through narrow straits of the Philippines was added to the known 12 sent south of Formosa. That means at least 58 enemy warships were committed by Japan in its great gamble to break up the Philippines invasion, and the figure is higher because there were still other units of the Formosa group, including "a number of destroyers." There are reports this group even comprised the bulk of the Imperial Fleet.

American losses acknowledged were in striking contrast with those inflicted on the enemy. A light American carrier, the 10,000-ton Princeton, and an escort carrier went down. An undisclosed number of patrol torpedo boats were lost. Several escort carriers and destroyers were damaged.

Japan, of course, painted a different picture in an English-language broadcast, claiming to have sunk two more American carriers and a destroyer, as well as damaged a third carrier and two cruisers. These unconfirmed claims, plus previous ones, added up to 84 American warships sunk or damaged.

SOURCE OF BUTTER

Will the milk of all mammals produce butter?

The milk of all mammals, including the human species, contains a fatty constituent similar to the butter in cow's milk and, to quote the U. S. Bureau of Dairy Industry, "there is no reason to believe that butter could not be made from the milk of any mammal," although there might be difficulty in obtaining the butter from the milk of some animals on account of the smallness of the fat globules.

For instance, camel's milk, which is delicious and wholesome, contains considerable butter-fat, but it will not yield butter in appreciable quantities no matter how long or violently it is churned, because the fat globules are so small that they cannot be separated by simply agitating the milk.

But some of the Arabs make a rancid butter from camel's milk by pouring the cream into a goat-skin sack and shaking it continually until small quantities of the butter are formed.

It is supposed that churning cow's milk for butter was originally suggested by the occurrence of this substance in the leather bags of milk carried over the desert on camel back by nomadic Arabs.

The milk of horses and most other animals produces butter only in tiny quantities. As a matter of fact the milk of only a few species of animals, such as cattle, goats and water buffaloes, can be churned successfully for butter.

Nearly ten quarts of cow's milk are required on the average to make a pound of butter.

The word "butter" in the sense of the fatty substance obtained by churning cream occurs in various forms in both Latin and Greek. The Oxford dictionary says it is "perhaps of barbarous origin."

In another sense "butter" means "an animal that butts."

A bird in South America is known as the butter bird because it is so fat that it is melted and used as butter.

The Egyptians and many other ancients used butter as a cosmetic but not as a food.

The Greeks were familiar with cheese as a food long before they learned how to make butter.

Reorganize Boy Scout Movement In City, District

A concerted effort on the part of interested parties to rejuvenate the boy scout movement in Belleville and district is underway, according to Mr. George Brown, acting scout master of the 1st Belleville troupe. With a present membership of approximately 140 boys, and with sixty applications for membership in the hands of scout masters, efforts will be made to increase the roster to about 200 boys, it was stated.

Tribute to the Belleville Kiwanis Club for their financial assistance and interest in reorganizing the scout movement in this city was paid by Mr. Brown who stated appropriate scout headquarters had been supplied in the Greenleaf building by the above service club. Rooms had been furnished and redecorated and benches provided. "With the financial backing of the Kiwanis Club, scouting is going ahead in Belleville as possibly never before," stated Mr. Brown who had been interested in the scout movement in this city for a period extending over approximately 20 years. "We hope to make it one of the biggest scout centres outside the city of Toronto."

Provide Camp Outings.

As a matter of providing interest of boys in the scouting movement, camp periods are provided for troupe members each summer with 37 boys enjoying camp at Consecon last summer. For next year a really worth while scout jamboree is planned for the new Kiwanis camp at Robin Lake where scouts from troupes in the surrounding district will be invited to camp.

Included in the rejuvenation effort for the Belleville district will be attempts at reorganizing scout troupes at Frankford, Foxboro, Rossmore and at Point Anne.

Scout leaders in the city are only too happy to have parents visit at scout meetings and see at first hand just what the scout movement can do for their sons. Mr. Brown cordially invites the general public to attend at meeting nights of the two Belleville troupes and cub backs.

Days of Meetings

The 4th Belleville troupe meets Wednesday evenings at the collegiate and the 1st Belleville troupe at the scout rooms at Bridge Street United Church on Thursday evenings. The 1st Belleville cub pack meets Wednesday evening at the Kiwanis centre and the 4th Belleville cub pack at the same place on Friday evening.

District commissioner for the scouting movement in Belleville is Lieut. Col. B. C. Sisler who receives all reports and forwards them to scout headquarters. Mr. Bill Slavin is scout master for the 4th Belleville troupe; Mr. Brown acting scout master for the 1st Belleville troupe at Bridge Street; with scout mistresses in charge of the two scout cub packs being Mrs. Goodier and Mrs. Twila Langman.

As a measure of rejuvenating the scout movement in Belleville, efforts will be made to organize scout troupes in all local churches, it was stated.

berg-Kaunas line, near Stallupoenen.

Frontline dispatches said "Dozens of new German batteries" were introduced in an effort to contain the Russian thrusts aimed at Gumbinnen, from the northeast and southwest.

The battle for East Prussia lost its fluidity and became a stubborn test of endurance and reserves. The Germans drew heavily on resources of the air and tank corps.

New advances were scored at extremities of the gargantan eastern front and commanders at each end were promoted.

Reports from newly captured Mukacevo (pop. 26,000) said Hungarian forces were still fighting alongside the Germans. Petrov seized 60 settlements and several thousand prisoners for a bag of 11,230 from Oct. 20-26. Russian communications were improved vastly by clearance of roads and rails from the Ukraine through the Czechoslovak passes to his divisions driving westward on the south side of the Carpathians.

The Russians announced that 25 refineries had resumed operation in the Krosno-Rezeszow oil field of southeast Poland and that these now are linked solidly by rail with the fronts in Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Yugoslavia.

Norse Fishermen Transport Reds

Reports from the Norwegian front said Kirkenes was in flames when the Russians captured that air and naval base two days ago. Norwegian fishermen in motorboats transported Russian infantry across a wide fjord to outflank a German highway strongpoint. The Eleveness fjord was spanned by American-made ducks which landed several thousand Soviet troops on the enemy side despite severe artillery fire.

The Germans had burned a paper factory, fish cannery, bathhouses, schools and many homes in Kirkenes, dispatches said. Several thousand townfolk huddled in a mountain tunnel nearby while the Red Army won its first Norwegian victory.

Corvette Committee Answering Criticism Says Every Effort Made to Bring the 'Belleville' Here

Sharp criticism of the holding of the adoption ceremonies of the HMCS "Belleville" at Kingston, instead of this city has been levelled individually and collectively at members of the Corvette Committee here, since Belleville took the new warship "under her wing."

Critics, according to the committee, have been outspoken in their verbal attacks on the weakness of the efforts to bring the ship here for the ceremonies, and where "Belleville citizens who have generously given of their funds for comforts for the ship's crew" could get a first-hand view of the corvette.

Navigational Difficulties.

No stone was left unturned, members of the committee stated today, in their efforts to have the "Belleville" brought here. Naval authorities and the Department of National Defence were contacted and decisions were the same. Navigation difficulties between here and Kingston would not permit of the passage of the ship.

Lieutenant J. E. Korning, commanding officer of the corvette stated that he was responsible for his ship. "I will bring her to Belleville if a government licensed pilot will accept the responsibility."

Several pilots were contacted by the committee and none would "take the chance" of bringing the corvette through the waters between here and Kingston.

Statement by Capt. Roome.

Captain G. L. Roome, Ottawa, supervisor of contract-built ships for the Royal Canadian Navy, in an official communication to the committee stated, that "it was greatly regretted that the amount of water in the harbor at Belleville and the approaches thereto, will not allow the HMCS "Belleville" to enter that port."

"Charts have been carefully studied to ascertain if there were any berths near Belleville where the ship could lie but again it was found," Captain Roome stated, "that the vessel would only be able to swing at an anchor off Colborne, or Point Anne. Neither of these places was considered suitable holding ground and neither would it be convenient for inspection.

"You can rest assured," Captain Roome stated, "that all inquiries have been exhausted as to whether a ship of the "Belleville" draft could enter the port at Belleville, but pilots and naval hydrographers have given definite decision that such is impossible."

Men of Many Races Fight Guerilla Warfare Behind Enemy In N. Italy

(Editor's Note: The following dispatch from Paul Morton, war correspondent of the Toronto Daily Star, representing the combined Allied Press, is the first eye-witness story of the Italian guerillas who are waging war behind the German lines in northern Italy. Morton has recently returned to Rome after living with these partisans for two months.)

By PAUL MORTON

(Toronto Daily Star War Correspondent, Distributed by The Canadian Press.)

Rome, Oct. 27 —(CP)— Behind the enemy lines in north Italy is being fought one of the strangest campaigns of the war. In the mountains and the plains of this great, so-called, enemy controlled area, men of many races, creeds and political opinions are fighting side by side to bring the war to a swift and certain conclusion.

This is a story of the Italian patriots and their strange allies—prisoners of war of all the United Nations who escaped from prison camps during the Italian armistice last September, British and American airmen shot down over enemy territory but never captured because the patriots got to them first, German deserters and runaway conscripts of the Nazi satellites, and highly-trained British officers who have parachuted "inside" to establish liaison with the Allied forces attacking from France and from the south.

These British liaison officers (B.L.O.S.) train the patriots in the use of arms and explosives, organize sabotage and resistance and arrange for a steady flow of arms and ammunition to be dropped for their use in raids and ambushes and the daily miniature battles peculiar to guerilla warfare.

The B. L. O. S. wear regular army uniform and on the rare occasions when they are captured by the enemy they are entitled to be treated as prisoners of war. The missions have N. C. O. S., each one highly-skilled in sabotage, wireless-telegraphy and demolitions. They are making a tremendous contribution to this war, avoid publicity like the plague and call themselves with affected scorn "the cloak and dagger boys."

But this is not their story.

Two months ago I parachuted into North Italy to live and travel with the patriots, to watch them fight. During this time I have been in the mountains and on the plains. I have seen them under all conditions. One evening I might be eating a good dinner with the patriots, dressed in Canadian uniform and comparatively safe in a comfortable hotel, the next hiding in the hills drenched with rain while German patrols sought us with machine-gun and mortar fire. A lot can happen in two months.

This briefly is what I learned:

1. The Italians are terrific guerilla fighters and are doing their magnificent best to obey Prime Minister Churchill's injunction to "earn their passage home."

2. The Germans and Fascists are scared stiff of the patriots and consider them a mounting obstacle to their escape from final destruction.

3. The people of Italy are wholeheartedly behind the patriots and are prepared to do anything in their power to make every possible reparation for the shabby part the Italians have played in this war. They do a lot.

Colored Criminal Lawyer Defends Accused in Court

Toronto's well known colored criminal lawyer, B. J. Spencer Pitt, appeared in police court here today and obtained a dismissal of a theft charge preferred against John C. Brewer, Toronto. The court was held before Magistrate A. B. Collins, K.C.

Brewer appeared charged with the theft of a blanket, the property of the Belleville Y.M.C.A., which Police Inspector J. C. Hayes told the court had been found in Brewer's possession in Kingston.

Harry Huis, who had been caretaker at the local "Y" in June of 1943, identified the blanket in question, while J. E. Shortt, general secretary, informed the court the accused had registered at the "Y" here on the night of Oct. 1st last.

In defence, Mr. Pitt held "the case hinged entirely on possession," and added nothing had been heard to establish the direct charge of theft. "As I see it, this is merely a case of recent possession," remarked Mr. Pitt, as he moved for a dismissal.

Crown Attorney E. C. Donnan, K.C., added there was presumption in the case following the possession. "However, Brewer has been in custody for 17 days," added Mr. Donnan. In view of the circumstances Magistrate Collins dismissed the case and immediately Mr. Pitt asked the blanket be returned to the "Y."

The only other case heard was a domestic matter that will be concluded next week.

British Meet Heavy Defences East of Forli

Rome, Oct. 27 (AP) — British 8th. Army forces advancing up the Po Valley along Highway 9 toward Bologna have come up against heavy German defences two miles east of Forli, Allied headquarters announced today.

British and Canadian troops reached the Ronco River on a broad front and at several points patrols crossed the swollen stream but were withdrawn following sharp German counter-attacks with tanks.

South of the Bologna-Rimini highway Indian troops also reached the river and sent patrols across. The river flows northward and empties into a canal south of Ravenna.

Vanguard 8th. Army units advanced two miles nearer to Ravenna in the drive up the Adriatic coast and put a bridgehead across the Bevano River on Highway 16 at a point six miles south of the city.

Heavy rain fell over both the 8th. and Allied 5th. Army fronts and generally impeded progress in all sectors.

American troops on Mount Belmonte threw back a heavy German counter attack and others captured Il Poggio and Mount Mezzano, west of Vedriano, five miles southwest of the Bologna-Rimini highway town of Castel San Pietro.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Endorses Retention Of Gas Plant

72 Pine St.,
Belleville.

The Editor,
Ontario Intelligencer.

I was deeply interested in the letter over the signature of Geo. De Vuyst in your last Saturday night's issue.

The case for the retention of the Gas Plant in Belleville was so ably put, that it leaves very little for anyone to add; except to endorse this letter in its entirety.

To one who, in the past has had the unfortunate experience of waging a fight to retain the Gas Plant at Cobourg I do claim some previous knowledge on this subject.

Although we were able to prolong the life of the plant for some time, we finally lost out, and the plant was closed down as a result the town of Cobourg is today suffering the consequences, and as far as heavy industries are concerned they have closed the door irrevocalbly to ever getting any in the future.

I ask the City Council and the citizens of Belleville, is this the situation you would desire to exist in Belleville?, especially at this time when we are continually talking about rehabilitation schemes for providing work for our boys when they return home. It is irate nonsense to talk rehabilitation and in the same breath advocate closing a valuable Public Utility which might mean steady employment for many yof our boys when they return home, as a consequence of being able to attract new industries to the city of Belleville. We have no right to break faith in this way with our boys in the services, or to overlook anything which might help to give them a brighter and more prosperous future upon their return.

The only argument I have ever heard advanced by the sponsors of closing the plant, has been that the plant shows a book loss. Granted that this may be true, surely no one would be so foolish as to suggest the abolition of all public services which do not show a financial profit? Then why single out the gas plant for the scrap heap. This is an essential service and vitally necessary in keeping the wheels of industry turning.

In introducing a personal note here for which I make no apology, may I point out that gas is an absolute essential in my business, and I am turning out a product which is very popular and a distinct convenience both to citizens of Belleville and many outsiders. Mr. Geo. DeVuyst says: What is the matter with our gas plant anyway?" Well, let's face the facts.

It is being run as the poor, undernourished and emaciated child of the electricity department and still it persists, in spite of its poor chances of ever becoming a healthy baby under these circumstances.

I would suggest to the City Council that it be taken over by a Gas Committee appointed by council and answerable for its actions to the council only.

In addition, a Gas Department Manager should be engaged who will have the power to adopt measures and take whatever action he deems necessary to increase the sale of gas, not forgetting a good advertising campaign. These suggestions and others if adopted, I feel sure will soon show a different picture on the gas situation in Belleville.

To the citizens of Belleville who are not consumers of gas directly, I would commend a very careful study of this question before voting the gas plant out of existence to save a few dollars on the taxes in exchange probably for thousands of dollars less in the wage pockets of the workers of this city.

Before concluding I would like to extend an invitation to Alderman Pringle to visit my place of business and demonstrate how I can carry on without gas.

I am,
Sincerely yours,
W. Bean.

southwest where they held Udenhout, four miles northeast of Tilburg.

They had seized the towns of Schoorstraat and Molenstraat, 4 miles north of Tilburg, and were in a position to launch a road-cutting, bridge-smashing offensive to the rear of the enemy.

In between Udenhout and Helvoirt, the Germans were clinging to a 3,000-yard long salient reaching almost to Haaren, but it was being squeezed out rapidly.

The British troops had cleaned out the road between S' Hertokenbosch and Vught, two miles to the southwest, and chased the Germans from neighboring Fort Isabella near the Germans' largest concentration camp in Holland.

The German counter attack was without tank support. It was bounded by the Venlo-Amerika railroad on the north and the Roermondweert railroad to the south and appeared directed at Meijel, 12 miles west of Venlo on the German border.

FREEDOM OF PRESS ONE OF SAFEGUARDS OF LIBERTY

Manchester, England, Oct. 27 — (CP) — Sir Warren Fisher, former head of the British Civil Service, said yesterday that one of the safeguards of liberty was freedom of the press.

"There is an increasing tendency on the part of governments through their widespread press officer and propaganda organizations to attempt to bring influence to bear on our newspapers," he said in a speech. "It is vital for the newspapers and the public to keep watch on this insidious movement."

University Women Entertain Head Of Federation

The Belleville Branch of the University Women's Club held a dinner on Wednesday evening at the Quinte Hotel for Dr. Ursilla Macdonnell, president of the Canadian Federation of University Women. Dr. Macdonnell, who was dean of women at the University of Manitoba for many years, was introduced by Mrs. Taylor, president of the local club.

Dr. Macdonnell spoke chiefly on the work of the Federation, outlining its work in awarding scholarships to outstanding university women, its efforts to improve educational facilities, its suggested project of travelling libraries for primary children in isolated districts throughout Canada. The speaker stressed the work done by the War Guests' Committee of the Federation, the forming of a council to aid rehabilitation of women war workers, and the efforts being made to have women represented on the advisory board in Ottawa.

At the conclusion of the address Mrs. Taylor, who is returning to England, handed over the meeting to the new president, Miss Billings, who thanked Dr. Macdonnell for her interesting speech.

After a luncheon with the executive on Thursday, Dr. Macdonnell left to continue her tour of Ontario University Clubs.

Albert College Women's Guild Hears Report

The Albert College Woman's Guild held its regular monthly meeting at the Manor on Wednesday afternoon with the President, Mrs. E. N. Baker in the chair. The devotional period was conducted by Mrs. Baker, who took as her theme, "What we should expect of the Church after the War". In the business period, the Rev. Dr. Bert Howard gave a summarized report of the year's college affairs which he had given to the Board of Governors in Toronto, last year. Delightful interludes of music were contributed to the afternoon's program by Miss Margaret Houston who rendered two solos, "Into the Night" and "British Children's Prayer", accompanied by Mrs. M. Duff at the piano. A fine attendance of members was reported as present for the meeting. A cup of tea and a social chat brought the afternoon to a most appropriate conclusion.

HOLLOWAY STREET YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION

The Christian Missions group, under the convenership of Isobel Richardson, had charge of this week's meeting of Holloway Street Young Peoples, held on Monday evening.

The meeting opened with the repeating of the new pledge.

During the business period, it was announced that Mr. Dilts would lead a Fellowship group to be held weekly. A collection was taken, the proceeds of which will be used to fill a ditty bag.

Isobel Richardson then led in Worship service which opened with quiet music played by Lois Harper. The Scripture Lesson was read by Doreen Groves and the commentary given by Beth Robertson. Alice Heasman led in prayer.

The guest speaker was Gordon Pepper, of Albert College, who described his experiences on the two mission fields he has served. He showed how desperately in need of Christian teaching and guidance these two communities were, though both are in our own country, "a supposedly Christian one".

Mr. Pepper urged the members to make an earnest effort to aid the work of the Home and Foreign Missions fields by giving generously to the missionary fund.

The thanks of the group was expressed by Lois Liddle.

How to Preserve Good Looks

Marguerite Chapman believes in cultivating tranquility.

By HELEN FOLLETT

KNOWING how to conserve energy is one way of cultivating or preserving good looks. A woman is making progress when she pauses now and then to ask herself why she is irritable, why she gives way to nerves and depressing moments. It is only when she finds causes that she can hope for beauty cures. One factor that should spur her on to attaining strength of body and tranquility of mind is the realization that human faces are ever in a state of change. She doesn't want hers to change for the worse, far from it.

Find a home in which music and laughter abound and you will see faces that are pleasant and smiling, nervous systems sound, life sweet and promising. Step over the threshold of the domestic domain where there is noise, shouting and tumult and you will note facial expressions that are tense. The atmosphere is charged with conflict. There is neither ease, peace nor poise.

Confusion and noise generate fatigue. Scientific investigations have been made on the effect of noise on vitality. Those who have gone into the subject state that, though shrieking radios and jangling telephone bells apparently do not bother some people, the fact is that they are being adversely affected. They suffer nerve fatigue and strain even though they may not be aware of it.

Fear Reaction.

Mothers who shout at their children are doing bodily damage to them. There is a fear reaction, such as some adults suffer when they hear the report of a gun. Essential changes occur in the heart action, the temperature of the skin, and the state of nerves.

As children copy the behavior of their parents, those who are shouted at will, in turn, shout at their playmates.

There are, of course, individuals who like noise. When things are quiet they feel lonely. But their lives are likely to be shortened.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Read This Letter Before You Marry a Boy Younger Than You Are

"Dear Miss Fairfax:

"Some years ago —twelve to be exact—I wrote and asked your advice about marrying a boy who was fifteen years younger than I.

"I've kept your letter to this day. It was frank about the dangers of such a marriage, but in your for-and-against arguments you mentioned several distinguished women who had married men younger and had been happy.

"At the time of my marriage, I was 40, not a beauty but fairly good looking, and as I'd led a decent life, showed none of the premature ravages of age. I was a buyer of women's clothes for a very prosperous department store, and my salary and commissions brought me in about $12,000 per annum.

"For a year I was radiantly happy and so was Ralph. I'd never been married before and I loved the domesticity of having a charming home and a man to look out for. It was such a joy to come home to a perfect dinner of evenings and sit opposite an adoring young husband who seemed to think the world of me. Always I kept excellent help so I had none of the worries of the professional woman who keeps house.

"After three years my troubles frankly began. And like many another woman in the same boat, I did everything in my power to avert the smash. I got more beautiful clothes. Spent more time in beauty parlors, closed my eyes to my husband's admiration for younger women, and never grouched, nagged, and was conveniently blind to things I could no longer refuse to see.

"My husband ran up bills, gave up, or was discharged from one job after another. He drank a good deal and his love affairs grew more flagrant. I realized I couldn't keep on with my job if I had no more peace in my domestic life. So, when a girl came to see me one day and told me that she and Ralph had been lovers for two years and she was about to bear his child, it was a positive relief for me to give up the unequal struggle and decide to get a divorce.

"The divorce was a new page in my life and a happier one. The first thing I did was to give away tight corsets. I got sensible shoes without high heels, my clothes were comfortable, and when I wanted a piece of custard pie I ate it, and oh, the joy of being rid of the gnawing anxiety.

"No, Miss Fairfax, 'George Elliot', once England's favorite novelist, may have got away with marrying a man twenty years younger, and Mrs. Disraeli, with loads of money, might have done the same thing, and that old sinner Ninon D'Enclos might have wrecked all the juveniles, but as for me, I love my happy middle-aged comforts.

Living-alone-and-liking it".

Kingston Road U.C. Extensively Renovated

PICTON

Much-Decorated U.S. Flier Now Visiting in Picton

Picton, Oct. 26—A former member of the Canadian Army, later with the R. A. F. in Canada and overseas, and now a member of the United States Army Air Corps, Major William A. Dunn is visiting his wife here.

He recently returned from duty overseas, where he won the D. F. C. for courage, skill and gallantry shown, when he attacked, and sank a 4,000-ton Nazi ship in the harbor of Brest.

Major Dunn is a much-decorated flier. His awards include, Presidential Citation, D. F. C., Air Medal and three Bar American Defence Medal, European Medal and three Stars, George's Medal, American Theatre Medal, Military Medal 1939-43 European Star, Canadian General Service and Volunteer Medal, British Silver Badge.

A native of Texas, 28-year-old Major Dunn came to Canada in 1939 and enlisted in the Seaforth Highlanders, accompanying them overseas. The following year, he transferred to the Eagle Squadron of the R. A. F. Returning to Canada, he trained at Picton R. A. F. Station. Early last year, he joined the U. S. Army Air Corps, after training in Florida and South Carolina, he proceeded overseas last April, and since then has been in the thick of things.

The official record of his combat victories, is as follows:-

Confirmed destroyed aircraft —3 Junkers 87B's, 1 Dornier 17, 1 Messerschmitt 110, 4 Messerschmitt 109's.

Unconfirmed destroyed aircraft—1 Messerschmitt 109's, 2 Focke-Wulf 190's.

Probably destroyed aircraft — 1 Focke-Wulf, 2 Messerschmitt 109's.

Damaged aircraft — 1 Junkers 88, 3 Messerschmitt 109's.

In sinking the Nazi ship, in August, Major Dunn climbed 4,000 feet above the target, dived at full speed and was travelling 500 miles an hour when he released the rockets. Two of them hit the target dead centre and blew up inside the ship while the third rocket skidded through the rigging, doing damage. The craft was left burning and later sank.

Major Dunn stated the flak was like a steel wall coming up at him as he dived. Two other pilots with him also accounted for ships and both received D. F. C.'s. The official report of the feat says," it was probably one of the most difficult missions ever to be attempted by aircraft."

RANGERS CALLED TO FINISH FOURTH BY F. BOUCHER

N. H. L. Will Open on Saturday With Rangers Playing in Toronto

By ERIC SANDERSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

The veil of secrecy surrounding this season's calibre of talent in the National Hockey League will be partially lifted Saturday night when four teams, including last year's Stanley Cup champions, — Montreal Canadiens — officially open the 1944-45 season.

Coach Dick Irvin will pilot his Flying Frenchmen, reportedly as good as the cup-winning team a year ago, against Boston Bruins at Montreal, while Toronto Maple Leafs, last year's Cup challengers, meet a strengthened New York Rangers' lineup.

Detroit Red Wings and Chicago Black Hawks, both with plenty of scoring punch last season, enter into the swing of the season Sunday night.

New faces, new names and new styles of play will be ushered in when the two American squads which have just completed pre-season training in Canada — Rangers at Winnipeg and Bruins at Quebec —begin their quest for the world's professional hockey champions.

Little is known of the actual strength of the new lineups, sprinkled with rookies and minor league veterans, but according to reports all will be improved teams.

Coach Frank Boucher of Rangers, last year's seasonal cellar-dwellers, so far has been the only one to call his team's place at the end of the 150-game schedule. They will finish in fourth place, he said, behind Toronto. Coach Clarence (Hap) Day of the Leafs hasn't committed himself.

As usual around this time of the year Art Ross is silent on chances of Bruins. Dick Irvin hasn't made any promises either.

At least one thing is certain about Leafs, however, that they will have a new goaltender. He is Frank McCool, Calgary sports writer who was discharged from the Army last winter. He was signed after strenuous workouts in the Owen Sound, Ont., training camp where he won the job over Pat Boehmer of Kitchener, and Leo Sargent of St. Catharines.

GOOD SHOOTING WINGING ITS WAY TO UNITED STATES

Biggest Crop of Ducks in 20 Years Starting Flight to South

New York, Oct. 27 —(AP)— The "duckiest" shooting season in two decades is winging its way toward United States hunters. Some 140,000,000 waterfowl, biggest crop in 30 years, are expected next week from Canada's duck factory.

Ducks Unlimited, the sportsman-supported organization which aids and abets the breeding of ducks in 1,200,000 in Western Canada territory, announced today that the early flight of teal, pintails and mallards was already on its way.

But the heavy firing — and the good eating — are still to come in the form of northern mallards, blue bills and canvas backs, along with the huge geese known to the trade as "honkers."

Last year, it was disclosed, the water fowl flight consisted of 125,000,000. About 16,000,000 fell before the booming shotguns of 1,250,000 marksmen.

This year's estimate of 140,000,000 ducks is 100,000,000 more than that of the 1935-37 period, when hunting seasons were for 30 days. This year the shooters will bang away for 60 days.

PLAYER ROUNDUP STARTS IN OTTAWA

Ottawa, Oct. 27 —(CP)— Ottawa and nearby Hull have begun rounding up players for their entries in the Quebec Senior Hockey League, scheduled to open here Nov. 4.

Officials of the Ottawa team have been reticent about who they hope to line up before the season opens, but admit they expect to get Larry Reardon, who tried out with Montreal Canadiens of the National Hockey League, and Cliff Mundrell who played for Ottawa teams a few years back.

Frank Dunlop, who had a trial with the Toronto Leafs of the N. H. L. last year may also join the Commandos, along with his brother Jake Dunlap. Jake formed a line with Emile Dagenais and Armand Lafleur in the Ottawa School League last year and the trio is expected to graduate together into senior ranks.

Hull officials hope Tony Demers, who starred with Canadiens in professional ranks a few years ago, will play for the Volants. Fernand Majeau now on the Canadiens' line-up has agreed to play for Volants if Canadiens should decide not to keep him this season.

Roger Bedard and Marcel Lajoie from the University of Montreal team that played in the Q. S. H. L. last year will be available along with Joffre Seguin, a former Ottawan, and Rosy Joannette of Valleyfield.

Others to join Volants are Roger and Gaston Leger, Edgar Mentzel, Joe Wilmon, Ray Trainor, Gordie Pranschke, Archie Creighton, Alex Wood and Ken Broadhead.

New York, Oct. 27—(AP)—Word from the west coast is that the Pacific Coast League really intends to stick to that $15,000 or else ultimatum at the winter baseball meetings ...in other words, the coast clubs will insist on having the draft price doubled, even though they have heard from one major league president that his circuit will up the price from $7,500 to $10,000 without an argument...if they don't get what they want, the coasters have tentatively agreed to refuse to give up their players in the draft and they say they have the financial resources to go alone...Seems that only 11 Rockingham Park bettors had the "hunch" to follow up that lady-in-red story when Redbush and Bloodhound clicked for a $2,301.60 daily double Wednesday.

Hamp chucked it right back to the equipment man. "No, 14 is Don Hutson's number," he said. "And nobody else should have that—certainly not me."

Toronto, Oct. 27 — (CP) — War plays strange tricks, and the followers of English rugby in Halifax these days are convinced war is — well, gosh-awful. Halifax, in common with other major centres in the Maritimes, has for years been the stronghold of the English game in Eastern Canada, but Canadian football is gradually getting the upper hand.

Aside from the new appeal of the game, it seems that Canadian pigskin addicts have been putting on the publicity pressure. With hosts of husky football sons of central Canada stationed with the Navy in Halifax, there is no lack of color for those crowd-attracting press releases.

All of which leads "Gee" Ahern, Halifax Deputy Mayor and Halifax Herald Sports Editor, to suggest to the English game promoters that they add a bit of dash and fanfare to their business before they lose out altogether. When 2,000 fans turned out in the rain to watch the Canadian booters in action while only 300 attended an English game, as happened in Halifax the other day, it's a sign of a trend of some sort.

Incidentally, the football boys from H.M.C.S. Stadacona have arranged a home-and-home series with Montreal Navy to start off the season. First game is being played in Halifax tomorrow and the return meeting in Montreal on Armistice Day.

Hamilton Wildcats also wanted a game, reports Harold Atkins in the Montreal Star, but this series interrupted negotiations.

That augurs well for the future of the game down east, but leaves the opposition slightly blue. After all, English rugby playoffs between Quebec and the Maritimers for the MacTier and McCurdy Cups had to be abandoned years ago, and the way things are now there isn't much hope of any early resumption of the games.

Perhaps it's all for the best though, and will help still that talk of Maritime secession.

TRENTON BOXER LOSES DECISION

Winnipeg, Oct. 27 —(CP)— A pair of Guelph, Ont., boys came out on top in two of a dozen bouts of an Inter-Service Victory Loan Boxing show here last night. Jackie Keegan took a three-round decision from Val Vallovand of Elbow, Sask., and airman Gordon Howett won easily from John Reed, an R. A. F. youngster from Worthing, Eng., who was knocked down several times in the three rounds.

Lester Baxter of Fort William, won a decision over Bill Westfall of Trenton, Ont., both are stationed here with the R. C. A. F. Caesar Garnt of Kingston, Jamaica, carried the fight to six Martin of Galt, in their heavyweight three-rounder to win an easy decision.

BANDITS TAKE $70

Toronto, Oct. 27 — (CP) — Two armed bandits yesterday lined up five men in a Queen Street store at pistol point, searched them and escaped after a chase with more than $70. The victims commandeered a truck and gave chase, but lost track of the robbers' car.

MICKEY ION WANTS TO REFEREE AGAIN

Toronto, Oct. 27 —(CP)— Mickey Ion, former dean of National Hockey League referees who retired at the close of the 1942-43 season after 30 years of whistle-blowing, said last night his mother "still thinks I'm the greatest hockey referee in the world."

"Funny thing about it" said Ion, now a foreman in a Seattle, Wash., war plant, "I don't think she ever saw me referee a game." His mother celebrated her 83rd birthday at her home in Brantford yesterday.

Ion, en route home, said that since retiring he hasn't "pulled on a skate."

The former N. H. L. referee started refereeing in the old Pacific Coast League in 1912, gradually working along the hockey trail.

He admitted that hockey "is still in my veins" and "perhaps somebody will invite me back to act as a coach of referees. I'll be ready if the call comes."

What's Doing in Sport

By The Canadian Press

Manager Jack Adams announced yesterday he was discarding the individual bonus system in effect among his Detroit Red Wings last year. Adams said that although the plan brought splendid results "in some respects," it was concluded that "so far as the team as a whole is concerned it is better to avoid such things."

"However," he said, "we may offer some of the players bonuses—as a team—on the basis of the Red Wings' final standing and their drawing power at the box office."

Hector Kilrea, the former "Hurricane Hec" of Ottawa Senators, Toronto Maple Leafs and Detroit Red Wings, now is in Southern France with the United States Army. A sergeant, he writes in a letter to old team-mate Mud Bruneteau of Detroit that he was "in on the invasion."

Possibility of an early revival of the booming feud between Joey Peralta and Dave Castilloux, lightweight kings of Mexico and Canada respectively, was seen last night when promoter Frank Tunney announced that Peralta had signed to fight in Toronto Nov. 6. Tunney said he is trying to bring in either Castilloux or Lulu Constantino of New York as Joey's opponent. The score in the Castilloux-Peralta rivalry now stands at 1-1.

Montreal welterweight Johnny Greco kept climbing the fistic ladder with a six-round knockout of Oscar Suggs, Newport Negro, in a scheduled 10-round fight at St. Louis last night. Greco floored Suggs for nine-counts in the second and third rounds before gaining his second victory over Suggs.

Wren Ethel Laing of Saskatoon was the star of a game when Canadian Wrens won the service softball championship of Newfoundland recently with a 15-8 victory over an air force W. D. team, a naval release said last night. Wren Laing slashed out three triples and two doubles.

Capt. John Lawrence Murdoch, 38, a member of the Argonaut eight at the Henley in England and at the Olympic Games in Amsterdam in 1928, has been killed in action in Holland, Oct. 10, it was learned by his mother here yesterday. He was a member of the Royal Canadian Artillery.

Pittsburgh Hornets of the American Hockey League announced yesterday they had obtained the services on loan of two young players owned by Toronto Maple Leafs. The newcomers are Eric (Doc) Prentice, 17-year-old, left wing from Kirkland Lake, Ont., and Ken Schultz, 18-year-old centre from Preston, Ont.

DON'T BE OVER-OPTIMISTIC

Washington, Oct. 27 — (AP) — Navy Secretary James Forrestal said last night that American naval forces, victorious over the Japanese in the Battle of the Philippines, "will pursue the damaged Japanese ships to the limit of their ability." At the same time he cautioned against over-optimism based on the victory.

BALMY BEACHES PLAY OTTAWA IN TORONTO SAT.

If They Win Team Will Take Over First Place in the Union

By The Canadian Press

The unbeaten record of the Toronto Balmy Beach Club is the chief issue at stake in the only Ontario Rugby Football Union game scheduled for Saturday while in the single Armed Services League game the play-off fortunes of the Camp Borden R. C. A. F. Hurricanes hang in the balance.

Beaches defend their unbeaten record in Toronto where they play the Ottawa Trojans. If they stretch their unbeaten string to five games, they will take over the leadership of the union from the Hamilton Wildcats. However, if the Trojans come through with a surprise victory, Wildcats and Beaches will remain tied for first place with four wins and one loss each.

Although their play-off chances hinge on its outcome, Hurricanes will only be spectators at the Services League game in Hamilton where Hagersville R. C. A. F. Bombers play the St. Thomas R. C. A. F. Hornets. A win for Hagersville would put them in first place one point ahead of Toronto Navy and remove any mathematical chance the Hurricanes have of winding up in a tie for the second place play-off position.

For three of the teams in action tomorrow—Hagersville, St. Thomas and Ottawa—it is the last appearance of the regular season although Hagersville is more than likely to see action in the play-offs.

Three of the teams with open dates have billed exhibition games. The Navy team goes to London to play the University of Western Ontario in an exhibition affair while Hurricanes meet Hamilton Wildcats in a curtain-raiser to the Hagersville-St. Thomas game.

Canadian 'Fags' Still a Luxury To Boys Overseas

One hundred and forty-eight Belleville and district boys on the various fighting fronts will have gladdened heart in the near future as the result of 44,400 cigarettes being sent overseas through the Army and Navy Veterans' fag fund this week, Veteran officials announced today.

Replies from the various fighting fronts indicate Canadian cigarettes are still a luxury to our fighting forces. Recently J. F. Andrews, aboard H.M.C.S. St. Stephen, wrote: "I divided my carton of 300 Canadian cigarettes with the boys aboard our ship as we were all out of fags at the time They all want to thank you veterans of the last war who know the value of a fag in trying times." From Gibraltar G. W. Thompson wrote along the same lines, while with the R.A.F. Wally Anderson added his thanks along with scores of others.

The list of 148 Belleville and district boys sent invidual packets of 300 cigarettes each this week included: C. E. J. Murphy, J. A. Howe, C. B. Coleman, N. P. Burshaw, H. A. Lowery, R. M. CASUAL COMMENT

by K.J.C.

The train was a cross-country affair that stopped at all stations and frequently several times in between. Toward the end of a very long journey the conductor came around.

"Look here, sir," he said to one of the passengers as he examined his tickets, "that boy is too big to travel half-fare."

"Is he really?" replied the passenger quietly. "Well, he was small enough when we started."

Boxing Banterings.

Four local leather-pushers appeared on the final boxing card of the year at Oshawa coming out with three draws and a loss. Rance Bush battled "Crabby Crandell even, while George Palmatier mixed it well with Al Smith of Oshawa to gain another split decision, while brother Roy Palmatier fought a draw with Bruce Lidster also of Oshawa. In his second ring showing Jack Hewson, Belleville, lost a split decision to the more experienced Bill Higgins of the home town. In the main bout "Jibber" Ellis, the Toronto soldier whose home is at Trenton, gained a T.K.O. over Fred Kenny of Guelph. Ellis opened up a nasty cut over Kenny's eye in the fourth round forcing Referee Rorabeck to halt hostilities and give Ellis the nod.

Ellis was slated to box here a couple of weeks ago since when it was announced he would tangle with Hub Smith, the pride of the R.C.A.F. Now it seems the boxing show, scheduled for the Hume Arena a week from tonight, has been postponed indefinitely. Some differences have arisen between the mitt-slingers and the matchmakers.

For years past amateur boxers have defeated their own purpose. There is no use cloaking under the "shamateurism" of boxing, be it in Belleville, Ottawa or Toronto. If the house warrants the scrappers should get "their expenses". However, it has always been the same situation in amateur pug circles—the boxers agree to appear and at the last minute hold out. Their system is rather effective, as they merely go into hiding fight night leaving the promoters and fans holding the well known bag. The fans soon sour, the matchmakers become panicky with the result the game not only gets a black eye, but passes into oblivion. Thereby the boxers defeat their own cause all down the line. The matchmakers should "play ball" with their fighters, but on the shoulders of the latter rests the success or failure of the game. Locally all concerned should "smarten up" as Belleville fans are fight conscious and one faction can't function without the other.

Meany Speaks Up.

Continued success for the Cardinals as the "Duration Champs" can be safely predicted, because there doesn't seem to be anybody around to beat them, observes Tom Meany in his sports column for PM, New York, copyrighted by the Field Publications. But, he adds:

"There isn't much you can say for the Browns. The sight of eight straight Brownie pinch-hitters being struck out, three of them with their bats at shoulder arms, is something to remember. It took the Browns 43 years to win their first pennant and it should take them at least that long to win another.

"The games were distinguished for what didn't happen rather than what did. Outside of the pitching and hitting by McQuinn, Marion's shortstopping was the only feature which you felt had a right to be in a World Series.

"By winning the championship, the Cardinals became the first National League club to collect five world's titles. No club ever had an easier time.

"There wasn't even an attempt to steal a base. In fact, nobody even took a big lead."

Remember When.

War Admiral, out of racing for more than a year, proved himself back at top form eight years ago today when he galloped home in front at Laurel Park. The champion won by nearly three lengths in a mile-and-one-sixteenth overweight race over Aneroid. Later the Admiral was retired to the stud.

Consider Resumption Of Beef Cattle Exports To United States

Ottawa, Oct. 26 —(CP)— Official consideration now is being given an early resumption of Canadian beef cattle exports to the United States, halted since 1942, it was learned today.

Under agreement with the United States, Canada can ship nearly 200,000 beef cattle annually under a special quota system. The shipments were halted two years ago when a beef shortage developed in the Dominion and exports of beef cattle could be made only through a permit system.

Authorities said that new outlets for cattle had become necessary due to the inability of packing plants to handle all the cattle marketed by farmers. Some months ago it was believed that whatever quantities of beef were marketed could be handled because of the British readiness to take at least 100,000,000 pounds in the years 1944 and 1945.

But a complication has arisen due to labor difficulties encountered by packing plants and consequent inability to handle heavy runs from the farms.

If the export permit control is relaxed, a market for a substantial number of Canadian cattle is believed to be assured in the United States, although the total number which may be shipped under the annual quota may not be required by American buyers.

Export restrictions on sheep and lambs already have been relaxed and the movement of such stock across the border has been resumed.

"Unless more cattle can be handled by the packing plants, a most serious situation is shaping up," said one official.

"Cattle are backing up on the farms now, and if they have to be held there for even a short period it is evident that the farmers will have to attempt to market them at a time when the hog marketings are at their highest point. This means that the pressure on the packing plants will be greater than ever.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 516

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Akoolap Oxpert and Mrs. Jabberpuss don't ask bridge advice for knowledge. They look for confirmation of their acts and opinions. Anything else maddens them.

You are likely to have your head torn off if you disagree with their responses to three bids and four bids. And their responses to three in a major may differ from their replies to four in a minor.

How do you know when they are right? How can you decide for yourself when they are wrong? Or must you let your intelligence be insulted by accepting their bull-headed erroneous ideas?

An opening three-major shows a long-strong suit with an outside sure trick. And so does an opening four-minor. But the three-major promises eight tricks and the four-minor promises nine.

In answer to three-major, partner passes if he has a trickless hand; assists to game in that suit if he has a trick or more; bids anything else to invite a slam if he has two sure tricks.

In answer to four-minor, exactly the same responses apply. The reasons will be apparent by looking back at what the opening shows. And by simply adding up the tricks shown in the combination.

An opening three-major says it can take eight tricks; hopes you have two tricks to make the ten tricks needed for game; but would like to take a chance at game even if you have only one trick.

An opening four-minor says it can take nine tricks; hopes you have two tricks to make the 11 tricks needed for game; but would like to take a chance at a game even if you have only one trick.

Take a shot at holding this hand:

♥9 8 6 3
♦9 8 6 3
♣J 7

Canada's Part In Pacific War Being Studied

By JACK BRAYLEY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

Ottawa, Oct. 27 (CP)—Size and nature of Canada's participation in the Pacific war theatre is believed to be under detailed study by the government, but so far a clear official picture of what is in store for the Dominion's armed services has not been made public.

However, as a result of isolated announcements and speculation based on ministerial statements it is understood the government is planning along these lines:-

1. No general concentration on the Pacific until the war in Europe is ended.

2 All services taking part on a re-voluntary basis and no home defence army men going.

3. Most servicemen returning to Canada for leave before continuing to the Pacific theatre.

4. Canadian forces co-operating closely with British forces with both coming under general over-all United States command.

5. Canadian forces entering the conflict from across the North Pacific rather than through the Mediterranean and Red Sea.

6. One-third of the navy's sea-going strength of 30,000 men and possibly about 350 or fewer of its 700 ships, including a pair of cruisers and carriers and a fleet of tribal class destroyers.

7. An army division—possibly, a reconstituted 1st division now fighting in Italy. This division might draw re-inforcements, if any were needed, from other divisions.

8. One-third of the R. C. A. F.'s 45 squadrons, made up of bomber, fighter and transport units.

9. Continuation of the supply of mutual aid to Allies with special emphasis on the Pacific.

Giving Gov't. Little Worry

The re-voluntary plan is understood to be giving the government little worry. Air Minister Power told a press conference he expected no difficulty in obtaining the force he wants and it is understood his colleagues, Defence Minister Ralston and Navy Minister Macdonald, feel the same way. Maj.-Gen. R. F. L. Keller, wounded commander of the 3rd Division, has said that even men in hospital ships are anxious for recovery so they can get in the war against Japan.

The cabinet is understood to be working out a plan by which men shifted from one war theatre to the other will be given an opportunity of visiting Canada for short leaves. Details of this plan — depending on the amount of transports available and the operating zone for which Canada will be responsible—have not been completed but it will likely be arranged on a staggered scale so Canadian forces in the Pacific would build up to scheduled strength during the leave period.

Ready to Play Full Part

Pacific aid is not being offered grudgingly and Canada is ready to play her full part in the conflict. "There is an embarrassment of riches" and the problem will be to make the "best use of as much as possible," a cabinet member explained. For instance, some of Canada's navy craft are not suited for Pacific conditions and there is thus no need for them being shifted where the United States has built up a powerful naval force.

Canada's army division is believed to be designed as a token force with the big powers recognizing the Dominion's eagerness to participate to the fullest possible extent.

CANNOT EXAGGERATE

Washington, Oct. 27 (AP) —Ambassador W. Averell Harriman said yesterday German atrocities on the eastern front in Poland and in Russia have not and cannot be exaggerated. In a new conference, Mr. Harriman said he thought people generally have not understood the unbelievable nature of these atrocities and that there was no way of exaggerating the ways in which the Germans had killed and tortured their Polish and Russian captives.

CHAPTER 8

Spike grinned at Jimmy. "Verna Foster. Know her?" Jimmy grunted.

The girls came out. Cus had brought Marion. Punchy was with Claire, Jake was with Joan, naturally, for they had been going steady for three years now, one of the very few couples who managed to stick it more than a year and which showed therefore that it must be serious, and all the rest of the gang was here. Jimmy saw Verna coming too, tall and lovely in a black dress of something soft that set off her hair. Margaret, he had to admit, was nice too in a flowered print that made her look young and innocent — which she was, he reflected. The one thing most remarkable about them all that struck him was fact that they were all tall-looking, even though not tall all of them actually. He wondered what the average Canadian girl would look like and he conjured up something long-legged, clean looking, athletic but lovely, and not too muscular. Even Marion, he thought who was laughingly and pleasingly plump had a grace about her and a personality that made her, in the opinion and words of the boys, a very good head.

"Hello Jimmy," Verna said, and for some reason he got a thrill just hearing her say his name. Which was too much really. After all, he thought, you're an accomplished wolf. He wondered just what it was that was attracting him more and more to this girl.

"Hello," he said. He took Margaret's arm and they went into the Hall. Everyone was there and as they danced they had to greet friends left and right. They danced closer to the bandstand to hear Frankie improvising some boogie-woogie during 'One O'Clock Jump,' a swing tune that had proved one of the most popular for a long time with a distinctive melody and beat. It was a 'standard', as opposed to a 'popular' tune, one that could be recorded at any time by a band, and one that would always sell. And Frankie, as always, was very good. He was a delicate-looking, fair-haired boy, taking Med., very much in demand on the week-ends and earning thirty dollars a week easily from one or two engagements. As they danced near him they could see his long thin fingers and fine delicate hands picking out a melody easily, running it along and improvising, always keeping the theme of the original tune but dressing it up.

When the number ended there was a burst of applause from the couples who gathered around, then the dancing resumed. That was the pattern of most of the dances. Music, talking, meeting friends, intermissions, refreshments, more dancing, eat afterwards, kiss the girl goodnight if you were lucky, or, if it was the second time or more you had taken her out. Jimmy knew it all, was quite expert in fact in the routine, but tonight he found himself strangely bored by it somehow, and he found his eyes ranging over the floor and he hardly listened to Peg as she chatted on. And in a little while she stopped. He knew it was his own fault for not keeping the conversation going, but it didn't do any good just knowing it. He couldn't do anything about it. He was looking for a redhead.

"Coke?" he asked her finally and she nodded. Then they went outside and downstairs and while Jimmy elbowed his way into the crowd of males around the booth he heard Spike Sutton calling Peggy over to where he and Verna were sitting in the lounge chairs scattered about. When Jimmy got the cokes he went over and joined them.

"Hi hero," Spike cried, and suddenly Jimmy didn't like Spike as much as he had. It wasn't that he was exactly loud but he was a bit obvious and not very tactful. His next remark cinched it. Margaret, who had evidently been introduced to Verna said, unwittingly, "Jimmy, do you know Verna Foster?"

Spike laughed loudly. "Peg," he cried in mock horror. "Know her? Brother!" Jimmy blushed. It wasn't that he was ashamed of knowing Verna. Hell no. The very opposite. But it was sort of tough on Peg.

Verna smiled. "How could I help knowing the hero of the football season? How are you Jimmy?"

"Fine, Verna, and you?" It was a mock exchange of formalities, done on the slightest pretext even though people had seen each other that afternoon. They talked on of the little things about town and the Campus. Verna said she liked Margaret's dress and then while he could hear Peg asking what kind of stuff her's was made of he turned to Spike.

"You're really getting right in there and pitching, eh?"

Spike grinned. "Why not?" Jimmy shrugged and grinned too.

"No reason." He put on as good a face as he could.

"Quite a time last night," Spike said. Then he raised his voice. "Eh, Verna?" Verna turned, smiling her gorgeous smile.

"What's that, Spike?"

"I was telling Jimmy we had quite a time last night." Jimmy winced inwardly. If there was one thing he couldn't stand it was a rehashing of a previous date. In a man, it was bad enough. For a girl it was inexcusable. But then, he told himself, Spike had asked Verna. She was laughing now. "Honestly, you should have seen Spike. He was terrific."

I'll bet, Jimmy said to himself. I'll just bet on that, and then wondered if he were jealous. Gosh, jealous of Spike? Spike was a good guy. He watched him now, big, handsome, easy-going as he and Verna recounted the highlights of what seemed to Jimmy a pretty ordinary date. Spike was a professional when it came to getting along. With people or things. He could do less and get more praise from the professors than any other student. He never did any work during the term, yet when it came to exam time he always managed to swot up and get better than average marks. He had a good line for everybody, not exactly a hand-shaker but very close to it.

"And then Spike drove us all home. Boy, what a drive," Verna was saying. "It was strictly low flying." They all laughed dutifully and Spike roared. Then he turned to Peg.

"Peggy," he said in mock seriousness, "let's leave these two dull people and dance." Verna laughed and Jimmy grinned half-heartedly. They went back to the dance floor and when Verna put her arm along his shoulder and leaned her head against his cheek he forgot all the momentary surge of stubbornness he had felt a moment ago, in a revival of the feeling he had experienced the night of the Football Dance. Just being with this redhead did it and he found he didn't mind it all. In fact he mentally blessed Spike for changing partners.

"Where have you been lately?" he asked her. He had been looking for her around the Campus, he suddenly realized. "You are in Arts, aren't you?"

"That's right, but I've been away the last week or so. Mother wanted to visit my sister in Brattleboro. Naturally I had to go along. We just got back Thursday."

"Fun?"

"Umn, fair. We had good weather, thank goodness. But Brattleboro itself is pretty dull." Jimmy wondered. The band played a slow number and they danced again. Then it stopped and Artie stepped up to the mike in the centre of the bandstand and the orchestra swung into "Temptation." It was a direct and very good copy of the record by Shaw and Artie did a fine job on clarinet. It was quite fast and had always been one of Jimmy's favorites. Verna tightened her arm around his shoulder.

"Oh, Jimmy, don't you just love that song?" He nodded and grinned and they started to dance, not moving very fast at first but keeping the beat. There was some jitterbugging at the Hall, not wild, but dancing to that number with Verna, Jimmy found himself really reacting to the music and he found too that he had never danced with so able a partner. Artie's clarinet was riding it high and handsome, Jimmy, urged on by Verna saying, "Gosh, you're good, Jimmy," found himself giving his all as they swung out together with Verna following his every step, her skirt flaring and her long legs flying. As he executed an intricate turn and kick he found himself marvelling again at the way they fitted in together, and slightly winded he glanced at her and saw her smiling not at him but at the crowd who had formed a circle around them and were cheering them on, clapping their hands in time to the music. Jimmy was not an exhibitionist. But he had a Canadian and inherent love for the beautiful in whatever form it happened to present itself, and in the Fall of 1939 swing music was one of the most important and pressing matters on all of young Canada's mind, their elders' disapproval to the contrary. Jitterbugging was most certainly frowned upon by those elders who talked of the wildness and flightiness and the almost hopelessness of the younger generation, kicking their legs and shouting, acting like madmen whenever they heard the shrill wail of clarinets, the beat of the bass of a boogie piano, the shushing of cymbals in the hands of a good drummer, or the mad and shrill blare of a hot trumpet.

Such things were definitely frowned upon and yet it was so ingrained and exerted such an influence upon all North American young people that it acted almost like a drug. They had to have it. And when they did get it nothing gave them so much pleasure as to really "swing out," to get rid of some of the excess energy that was always being built up in their bodies by a new mode of energetic and athletic outdoor living. Their bodies were being rapidly freed from Victorian ideas of clothing and exercise, or rather lack of it, and the outdoor girl was the order of the day. It was a natural outcome, then, of jazz evolved into smoother and more sophisticated swing music, that the young people should react to in a healthy manner. And as events were to show, their elders needn't have worried. When the time came for the young people to forget swing and jitterbugging and good times, they did it. "But good," as Spike would have said.

Needless to say Jimmy Riley's thoughts were not exactly on the disapproval of his elders as he danced "Temptation" with Verna Foster. They double-trucked, Lindy-hopped, Bunny-hugged, jitterbugged, kicked and swung. In the jargon of jive that was all the rage that year and to put it in that jargon too, they 'really got out of this world.' That is, Jimmy, urged on by the music of swing which has a definitely exhilarting beat and doubly encouraged by the fact that he had a partner who, as he would have phrased it, 'was really on the beam and in the groove,' gave his all and did right fine. They rode out on the notes of Artie's 'licorice stick' and the applause was for them as well as for the band.

The rest of the evening, as far as Jimmy was concerned, was rather colorless. He found himself intrigued once more by Verna, and Margaret had tendency to seem rather dull beside her. And altho' Margaret was a good dancer too, she lacked the polish and flash of Verna Foster. It did not seem strange to Jimmy that such a little thing as good music and an able partner, able to follow his intricate steps, would affect him that day, make him think one girl dull and another very nice, because dancing to "Temptation" had merely indicated to him once more, in a little pattern that was building up that, Verna was to him very desirable. He took Margaret home at one-thirty—quite early for a Saturday night, and kissed her goodnight on her doorstep.

"Night Peg, see you around," he said, even though he knew there was nothing a girl liked less than being told indefinitely of a future date.

"Goodnight, Jimmy. Thanks ever so much, I had a grand time." And as he drove home he thought of Verna again — he'd have to date her up during the week—and well ahead of time. The war was quite far away.

It would be quite difficult to say just when James Riley became war-conscious, really aware that there was a war on, that Canada was in it, and that in all probability he would soon be in it too, that he would have to join up, don a uniform, fight other people, Germans. It was a fairly gradual thing, his awakening to awareness, tempered by the fact that the people of the Western Hemisphere as a whole were rather late in realizing there was a real war on, that people were getting killed. That was because it was quite far away, they thought. And there lay the crux of the affair; the inability for a time, natural of course, of the North American continent pretty much as a whole to realize the full implications of the new methods of warfare, the full might of armored divisions and their swiftness, but above all the sudden shrinking of the globe, relatively speaking, with the new and all-important factor, aircraft. Not that they were entirely non-airminded. Canadians, and especially young Canadians, were quite aware of airplanes as they were known then, and were to a large extent thrilled by them. But it was, except for a small group who had the time and the inclination and the money, for the most part impersonal. Canada's Sunday pilots, the civilian air clubs that dotted the Dominion, their fields located in the suburbs usually of the larger towns and cities showed the rest of the people what plane looked like in flight, made them air-conscious to a degree, and even took curious onlookers for short trips for a few dollars.

But for Riley and the rest of the people of Canada for that matter, full awareness of what the war was going to mean was slow in coming. Aramageddon began on September third for Great Britain and September tenth for Canada when Ottawa declared war on the German Reich but the public was quite unaware of the need for "air-power." The word itself was foreign; they were unaware that they faced an entirely different kind of war, one so different from the First World War that it was a task in itself to understand the difference let alone do anything about it. Complacency and phoney war were thrown about with equally haphazard force.

Things were slow in getting started but there were spurs: Austria, Czecho-lovakia, Poland, Norway, Holland, Belgium, France .. and there was Dunkirk .. but James Riley's transformation was gradual, and during that Fall and Winter, and even the Spring of 1940, he pursued his more or less normal round of amusements and pleasures, attending lectures more or less regularly but becoming more and more disinterested as the War progressed. It was noticeable all over, this slackening of interest in schools, but the mass exodus had not started yet being still only a disquieting trickle. In the Fall of 1939 there were more dances and parties, bull-sessions in the Club and Smoker, but the most important thing by far was not the war but the anticipation of Winter, its snow, and its sports. Skiing was in the offing, and the students and young folks everywhere scented it and clamored eagerly for it, hoping for a good heavy early snow so they could get up North.

Little Benny's Note Book

Us fellows were talking and arguing around the letter box, and Puds Simkins started to brag about his birthday next week and the different presents he asked for and the ones he was sure he was going to get and the ones he just might, and Glasses Magee said, Aw the heck with that, how about a party? Are you going to have a party or not? he said.

Well, I was going to, but my mother went and had the whole inside of the house painted and new covers put on some of the furniture and everything, and she claims it still looks so new it's no time for me to be having the whole nayborhood in to scratch it all up again at a party, Puds said, and I said, Well why dont you keep on asking her?

That's all I been doing, Puds said. Go and ask her yourself if you want to hear somebody say no, he said, and Shorty Judge said, Well then how about if we give you a surprise party? We dont have to tell you for sure we're going to give it to you, so for all you know we might change our minds, so it'll still be partly a surprise, he said, and Sid Hunt said, G, that's right, if your friends want to give you a surprise party your mother will have to be polite and says yes, wont she?

Sure, that's different, Puds said. She'll say okay all right. Whose house are you going to give it to me in? he said, and Sid said, Why, yours of course, and I said, Sure, it's not a real surprise party unless you come home to your own house and the whole gang is there waiting for you and yelling happy birthday.

Nothing doing, Puds said. She'll claim the principal is the same and she'll still say no, he said.

Seeming like the end of the subject, on account of all us having reasons why we didn't think we could have it at our houses, only we're going to ask our mothers just for luck in case one of them might get absent minded and say yes.

TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE

Toronto, Oct. 27 —(CP)— Continuing on the down grade through the early session, mining groups and industrials had losses this afternoon on Toronto Exchange. Volume was small at 260,000 shares.

Utility and senior oil issues worked lower and other industrials showed little net change. Hiram Walker lost ½ and Distillers-Seagrams gained ⅜. Algoma and Burlington were stronger steels.

Prices weakened in golds for San Antonio, Pickle Crow, Pioneer, Wright-Hargreaves, Giant Yellowknife, Dome, O'Brien, Madsen and others. In base metals Steep Rock slipped 10 to 2.65 and Labrador dropped 10.

WALL STREET

New York, Oct. 27 —(AP)— Stocks generally continued to back water in today's market although scattered favorites managed to breast the current for modest advances.

Large blocks of low-quoted stocks, the majority on the losing side, expanded activity somewhat. Trends were irregular near the fourth hour.

On the offside most of the session were U. S. Steel, General Motors, U. S. Rubber, Santa Fe, Southern Pacific, Zonite, Westinghouse, Douglas Aircraft and Johns-Manville. Canadian issues were dull with only Seagrams making fractional improvement.

Bengough Re-elected Head of Trades And Labor Council

By JACK WILLIAMS
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Toronto, Oct. 27 —(CP)— Percy R. Bengough of Ottawa was today unanimously re-elected president of the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada.

Pat Sullivan, Ottawa, received unanimous endorsation as Secre-vice-presidents — J. W. Buckley, vice-president — J. W. Buckley, Toronto, and Bert Showler, Vancouver — were returned without opposition. The other three vice-presidents elected were James Whitebone, Saint John, N. B.; Arthur d'Aoust, Montreal; and C. E. Berg, Edmonton.

Last Survivor Son To Be Returned To Or Retained in U.S.

Washington, Oct 27 (AP)—U. S. families which already have lost two or more sons in battle, with only one survivor, no longer face the sacrifice of that last one.

Secretary of War Stimson said yesterday that it now is the policy of the army to return to or retain in the U.S. "the sole surviving son of a family in cases where two or more sons have been lost," unless the surviving boy is engaged in non-hazardous duty overseas. Navy spokesmen said the sea services have adopted the same policy.

HOGS

Toronto, Oct. 27 —(CP)— Prices were unchanged at bacon-hog markets reporting early today: Dressedweight, Grade A delivered, Hamilton and London $17.50; Barrie and Hull $17.60; Stratford, to farmers $17.50, to truckers $17.65.

Taking Over of Union Stockyards Part of Improvement Policy —Kennedy

Flesherton, Ont., Oct. 27—(CP)— The Ontario government took over the Union Stockyards in Toronto so their operation "will be a definite part of the livestock breeding and improvement policies which are needed to place the whole livestock industry on a better basis," Agriculture Minister Kennedy said today in an address to the Grey county Federation of Agriculture.

Duties of the Board in charge of the yards would include the promotion of livestock improvement in every possible way as well as the regulation of the movement of livestock.

"The board will undertake a study of diseases of animals and their prevention and also will deal with present and past practices which have resulted in considerable damage and bruising to cattle, to the detriment of the farmers' returns from their animals. It is our hope that a long-term policy will be developed from these operations for the benefit of all farmers of the province."

The board in charge would be chosen by the farmers, not by the government. The present six-man board — made up of four farmers, a representative of the commission men and a representative of the industrial and development meat council — was temporary. When arbitration proceedings as to the price to be paid for the yards were completed, the farmers would be consulted on the appointment of a permanent board.

It was hoped that one duty the permanent board would undertake was the regulation of shipping.

"There is room for a great deal of improvement in the methods and practices of shipping livestock by truck. Take, for instance, the shipping of hogs. We all realise that to hold the British market for hogs we must have a larger percentage of 'A' hogs and a definite forward step in that direction can be made by improved trucking and shipping methods which will cut down bruising of the hogs to a minimum.

"So it is our hope that the stockyards board will undertake the regulation of livestock trucking, so that all truckers of livestock will be licenced and placed under the jurisdiction of the Board. That will give the board control over all matters relating to the transportation of livestock, which is a very important factor in marketing."

Cheese Production In Hastings County Down 400,000 Lb.

For the first nine months of the year Hastings county is slightly more than 400,000 pounds of cheese behind its production for the same period in 1943, the monthly dairy report of the Ontario Department of Agriculture shows. Production of cheese in the county for the nine months ending Sept. 30 was 7,441,316 as compared with 7,019,335 lbs. for the same period this year.

September production of cheese in Hastings was 1,160,892 pounds as compared with 1,312,873 for the same month last year. This represents a decrease of 151,981 pounds.

Production of creamery butter in the county also showed a decrease this year with 1,990,436 pounds being made during the first nine months last year and 1,611,839 lbs. during the same period in 1943. September production was 146,825 this year as compared with 181,666 lbs. a year ago.

The decrease in production of the two above dairy products also held true for the neighboring counties with Northumberland and Prince Edward both showing a falling off in the make of butter and cheese.

In Prince Edward the make of cheese for the first nine months was 2,746,204 as compared with 2,987,655 for the same period last year, while in Northumberland a better record was shown, there being a decrease of only slightly less than 30,000 pounds. Production in Northumberland to September 30 this year was 3,069,732 pounds.

Butter production in Northumberland for the nine months this year was 1,523,404 pounds as compared with 1,813,334 pounds last year. In Prince Edward the record was 119,769 pounds this year as against 172,121 pounds last year.

Foggy Weather Gives Respite

London, Oct. 26 (CP) — Foggy weather gave Germany a one-night respite from Allied bombing after 2,300 heavies pounded the enemy in daylight yesterday without opposition.

More than 1,200 United States heavies with 500 screening fighters blasted Germany's largest freight yards at Hamm and oil refineries near Hamburg, while 1,000 R.A.F. four-engined giant attacked Essen and Homberg, one of the main oil producing cities of the Ruhr. It was the second heavy attack on Essen in 36 hours.

Total losses were six bombers and eleven fighters.

Declines to Discuss Return of Soldiers

London, Oct. 26 — (CP) — Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons today, "we are at a most grim moment in the war," in declining to discuss the return of soldiers who have long been overseas.

Releases from the army on a large scale are not possible now "without running the risk of prolonging the war and making our effort fail or be weakened just at the moment when it must be maintained right up to the climax," he said.

Deploring a motion for the return of soldiers, Mr. Churchill declared it might do definite harm to the war effort at this time and arouse false hopes in the minds of servicemen. He promised, however, that a discussion of demobilization will be held later.

How General Looks At Question When War Will Be Over

London, Oct. 26 —(CP)— Trying to figure when the war will end? Well, here's how Gen. Eisenhower looks at it, on the authority of Rep. Robert Hale (Rep.-Me.), who visited the supreme commander in France:

"War is like pushing a heavily-loaded wagon up a steep hill in a fog and never knowing when you are going to reach the top. So you have to push like hell all the time."

First Snowflakes Of Fall Season

Giving a fair indication of what residents may well expect during the balance of the autumn season, the first snowflakes of the current autumn sailed in out of a dull gray sky Thursday afternoon. With temperature gradually dropping from the comparative balmy weather experienced Wednesday afternoon, a light rain which fell just before the dinner hour later turned into snow which, however, melted the instant it struck the pavement.

Hun Defence on Schelde Collapses

JAP FLEET PROBABLY LOST 40 SHIPS IN BATTLE

British-Canadian Forces May Cut Off 40,000 Nazis

Port of Antwerp Almost Clear for Allied Use

By WILLIAM FRYE, AP WAR CORRESPONDENT

London, Oct. 28 —(AP)— The German lines in western Holland have collapsed under the slashing multiple thrusts of British-Canadian armor and infantry, and the battered enemy forces reeled back today in a scramble to get across the Maas and escape destruction.

As success followed success, Allied Headquarters announced that free use of the great port of Antwerp, prize of the campaign now is blocked only by the isolated and doomed coastal guns of the enemy at Flushing on Walcheren Island.

"The German defence line from the Schelde to Tilburg "has fallen to pieces," Canadian Press war correspondent Ross Munro reported from the field, and the campaign has become a race to reach the Maas bridge, with 40,000 German troops the prize.

Major Developments

The swift-moving Canadian-British drive brought these major developments:

1. Bergen Op Zoom, stoutly-defended western anchor of the enemy line, was abandoned suddenly by its garrison, and entered without a fight last night by Canadian armor and infantry.

2. Canadian infantry on the Beveland peninsula crossed the canal to the main part of the island, and fought their way to within seven miles of the reinforced units which have expanded their bridgehead on the southeast coast of Beveland.

3. British troops of the 1st Canadian Army were within 2,000 yards of Roosendaal, and the German radio admitted they had penetrated defences south of the city. To the east, the Breda-Tilburg road was cut, and Breda itself was a target for converging columns of Polish and Canadian troops.

4. Tilburg was in the hands of British 2nd Army troops, who got a tumultuous welcome from the Dutch population although hold-out remnants of the German garrison still clung to the western fringes of the city.

5. North of Tilburg, an armor and infantry slash carried through Loon Op Zand and headed for Oosterhout on the escape route from Breda to the Geertruidenberg bridge over the Maas.

6. In the 'S Hertogenbosch area, British formations strengthened their hold along the Aftwatering canal two miles south of the Maas, and beat off a weak enemy counter-attack.

Germans Attack Americans

But on the eastern sector of the Allied salient into Holland, the Germans struck hard at American armor in the Venlo sector, and took the town of Meijel, north of the Roermond-Weert railway. A British staff officer said the enemy threw 30 tanks into this fight.

Bergen Op Zoom was the fourth major stronghold in the German line to fall in three days.

The German Schelde pocket now has been squeezed to a 15-mile bogland triangle, and the great Allied-held Belgian port of Antwerp — a major prize because it is the closest supply funnel to the Rhine and Ruhr winter battleground — was cleared of the Germans at Vlissingen (Flushing) on flooded Walcheren Island.

A recent front report said only one enemy battery still was in operation there.

Allied successes in the Schelde estuary area do not mean that a flood of shipping can start in Antwerp at once, even after the Vlissingen guns are silenced. There remains the tough job of sweeping and clearing the long waterway approach to the port.

There were no signs that the Germans were demoralized but motor columns streaming north from Breda and Roosendaal indicated Field Marshal Model might have started an attempt to withdraw the bulk of his forces before the closing pincers of the Allied drive became a disastrous trap.

'S Hertogenbosch, Vaught, Tilburg and Bergen Op Zoom have been captured. Canadian troops were within two miles of Roosendaal and had cut the highway between Tilburg and Breda. A British armored spearhead north of Tilburg was roaring westward in the area of Loon Op Zand to menace Model's last escape routes.

On the Schelde Estuary, the communique said the British-Canadian bridgehead on south Beveland island had been expanded and reinforced. Canadian troops hold the south side of the isthmus as far as the north-south canal, trapping the German garrison of south Beveland and Walcheren islands.

In the pocket on the south side of the estuary, Groede—by-passed earlier—was captured and the Canadians reached the coast northwest of the town.

A German counter-attack on the east side of the Dutch salient, launched in an effort to relieve the pressure on the enemy forces in western Holland, was checked, but the communique reported fighting still in progress around Meijel. (A front dispatch reported the Germans had recaptured Meijel in a counter-attack.)

To the south, troops of the U.S. 1st army were subjected to light artillery fire in the Aachen area and along the Belgian frontier east of St. Vith.

The communique reported slight gains in the vicinity of Rambervillers, including the capture of the village of Housseras.

German attempts to infiltrate Allied positions in the Vosges mountains were beaten back, the communique said, and "limited progress" was achieved by our troops between Bruyeres and Le Tholy.

Driving ahead in the Netherlands advance, British units were reported to have cut the Tilburg-Breda road and moved close to Breda, last strongpoint that might shield a general enemy withdrawal from southwestern Holland across the Maas river, Waal Rhine and their various branches.

Winter Campaign on Western Front Appears To Be Inevitable

By ALAN RANDAL
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Oct. 28 — (CP Cable) — The end of the war on the western front may not be so far distant as seems from a glance at the Allied battle lines on a map, although a winter campaign appears inevitable.

And the Canadians beating their slow, arduous may through the inhospitable Schelde estuary country to open the port of Antwerp are the key to the fighting in the months to come.

With Antwerp opened to Allied shipping soon it is quite conceivable Allied armies could be close to the Rhine by Christmas. That done, they could be within sight of final victory before spring, because from the left of the Rhine Allied artillery would be within easy range of almost all the important Ruhr industrial centres.

But there can be no move towards the Rhine without, as Prime Minister Churchill warned Friday, hard fighting on an increasing scale. The vigor of the German resistance to the Canadian and British armies in Holland makes this plain.

German army morale may be poor—as some prisoners of war claim when they give the Germans three more months to lose the war. But Canadian rifle companies fighting on the Leopold canal in the Schelde pocket and on South Beveland Island north of the estuary found this alleged defection in Field Marshal Von Rundstedt's forces had not spread to their sector.

Caen and Falaise inspired hope that the war in the west might end by Christmas. Now, certainly in the Canadian battle area, the troops are resigned to a winter of fighting.

Two weeks ago at his field headquarters in Holland I talked to a Canadian general about the possibilities of a winter campaign. He held his hands before his face and said: "It's staring right at you, just like that."

All the channel ports except Dunkerque are in Allied hands. But they were not completely at Allied disposal nor in full working order at the critical time when the Allied armies began to encounter stiffening resistance early in September and when rapid reinforcement and additional supplies were needed to maintain the offensive momentum.

Moscow, Oct. 28 — (AP)—Russian mountain troops were driving across the threshold of Slovakia today after virtually completing the conquest of Hungarian-annexed Ruthenia with the capture of Umgvar, its chief city and former capital.

Seizure of Umgvar gave Gen. Ivan Petrov's 4th Ukrainian Army a southern terminus for a supply route through the Carpathian mountains by way of the Uzok Pass for an accelerated effort to reach isolated Czechoslovak Patriot resistance forces at Banska Bystrica, 140 miles west, now linked with the Allies only by plane. These forces are estimated at 25,000.

Twenty-five miles north of Umgvar other units of Petrov's Army penetrated six miles into Slovakia, capturing the town of Starina, in the Cirokа Valley nine miles northwest of Ulic, taken along with 48 other localities.

Gen. Ivan Cherniakhovsky's battle of attrition against the furiously-fighting Germans in East Prussia forced the enemy out of three more village fortresses in the Ebenrode area yesterday, one of them 21 miles northwest of Insterburg and 17 miles east of the main Insterburg-Tilsit railroad.

Little Progress in Prussia.

The only Russian progress of any consequence in East Prussia appeared to be on the secondary road west of Pillkallen where the capture of Kussen put Cherniakhovsky's forces deep on the northern flank of enemy defenses concentrated around Gumbinnen.

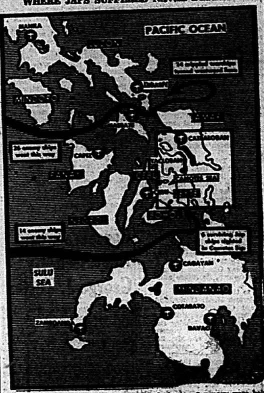
The midnight Soviet war bulletin said the Russians, beating off numerous counter-attacks by large forces of German infantry and armor, killed 3,000 Germans making a two-day total of 5,800.

The immediate course of the Russian campaign into central Hungary appeared to hinge on the outcome of strong German-Hungarian counter-attacks against the Russian salient at Nyiregyhaza, northwest of Budapest.

Meanwhile the Russian advance on Budapest from the southwest was halted sharply in the vicinity of Szolnok by the enemy's violent counter-attacks.

In Yugoslavia other Soviet forces aided by Marshal Tito's Partisans captured Novi Sad, Yugoslav's seventh city of 64,000 on the north banks of the Danube, 42 miles northwest of fallen Belgrade.

WHERE JAPS SUFFERED NAVAL DEFEAT



While crippled remnants of the decisively beaten Jap navy were being pursued, as shown on the above map, Gen. MacArthur's land forces were increasing their holdings on Leyte and Samar (indicated in square.) Latest reports show that of 27 enemy warships in the Jap fleet that moved eastward between Samar and Luzon islands (upper arrow), 14 have been seen limping westward. Of 14 enemy ships in the southern attack, six fled toward the Camotes Sea.

VOLUNTARY BASIS FOR OVERSEAS SERVICE REMAINS

Cabinet Hears Reports from Defence Minister and General Keller

Ottawa, Oct. 28 — (CP)—Cabinet ministers yesterday continued their lengthy review of war and associated problems with every indication that the policy of military service overseas being on a voluntary basis will not be changed.

Ministers have met daily since Tuesday, when a session was held with all 21 members in attendance. The government executive body heard a report from Defence Minister Ralston, just back from the war fronts, discussed Canadian Army policy and then turned to examination of a wide variety of problems, ranging from the labor situation to food production.

The basis of overseas service was believed by capital sources to be at the forefront of discussions. Criticism of the home defence army of some 75,000 men developed during the 1944 parliamentary session.

Authorities said a number of arguments against a change in government policy were considered.

High officers, including Maj-Gen. R. F. L. Keller, former commander of the 3rd Division, for instance, have been quoted as saying that invasion casualties were smaller than had been considered likely.

Col. Ralston early this year said that reinforcement pools were up to requirements on the basis of anticipated casualties. This would indicate that the need for reinforcements is not so urgent that the government feels the need of passing an order-in-council, as it has power to do, requiring men called for compulsory service to serve overseas.

The threat of attack on Canada by the Japanese, an important factor in retaining compulsory service troops on duty within the Dominion, had diminished. If the home defence men are not to be sent overseas and their need for defence of Canada has not been reduced, further criticism of the cost of their maintenance in uniform is probable, political observers said.

Some government supporters are understood to favor a system under which home defence men would be allowed to return to essential occupations, such as farming, after they have completed their training. They would remain liable to call in the case of emergency.

$75,724,700 IS TOTAL LOAN SALE FOR FIFTH DAY

Friday's Sales Are About $1,300,000 Below Total Same Day in 6th Loan

Ottawa, Oct. 28 — (CP)—Canadians yesterday subscribed to the $1,300,000,000 Seventh Victory Loan a total of $75,724,700 — approximately $1,300,000 below the total for the same day in the Sixth Loan, loan headquarters announced today.

Total for the first five days of the threeweek campaign now stands at $359,413,300 and the loan which at one stage was $20,000,000 ahead of the last loan is now only $11,000,000 up.

Both the fourth and fifth days of canvassing in this loan showed a drop from the fourth and fifth days of the sixth loan.

Industrial Purchases

Individual Canadians purchased $33,719,150 of yesterday's total bringing their cumulative total to date to $160,058,250, an average of about $32,000,000 daily. In the sixth loan, the individual purchasers averaged $35,700,000 daily for a total of $643,000,000.

"The loan returns appear to be levelling off," a loan official said today. "The campaign opened with a rush and reports came in earlier, recording it was in advance of any previous loan and four figures showed a $20,000,000 increase in the first three days. Some of that early momentum now seems to have been lost, with the fourth and fifth days of selling showing a decrease from the sixth loan. We must remember that our objective this time is $100,000,000 higher than it was in the loan six months ago. If we are going to reach it, the drive of the opening days must be carried through right to the closing minute. There can be no slackening off in this effort."

Daily totals have been: Monday, $68,360,300; Tuesday, $77,269,800; Wednesday, $70,508,450, and Thursday $67,850,000.

Records of the payroll deduction plan in Ontario revealed today that results of the canvass under this system were fully a day and a half ahead of those of the previous loan. At the end of the fourth day of the present campaign, 250 plants were awarded V flags as against 110 in the sixth loan.

SAMAR ISLAND IN PHILIPPINES QUICKLY OVERRUN

Filipino Guerillas Aid Invasion Armies to Move Within 275 Miles of Manila

By C. YATES McDANIEL
(AP War Correspondent)

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Oct. 28 — (AP) — Powerful invasion armies, released as Japan's shattered fleet fled the Philippines, rapidly engulfed Samar Island today, within 275 miles of Manila, aided by Filipino guerillas.

On Leyte, where land-based fighter planes began operating from captured airfields, great segments of the island fell to the inrushing Americans.

By the hour, Japanese dead and wounded were added to the more than 14,000 casualties already inflicted. Most of the dead were men of the 16th Division which perpetrated the tortures on Bataan.

Virtually all Samar's more than 1,200 square miles, which extend to within 15 miles of prized Luzon, were under American and Filipino domination and the capital city, Catbalogan, was captured.

It was the second island capital invested in the Philippines, the other being Leyte's Tacloban, now provisional capital for the Philippines government.

Twelve more towns and villages were liberated on Leyte. At least 55 now are freed.

Some of the enemy are bottled up in Leyte Valley with U.S. forces moving on them from north and south. They had two choices: flee into the hills — or stand and die.

Crash Through Resistance.

Crashing through the 16th's backbone of resistance west of Palo, spearheads pushed six miles southward into the valley. They drove through Santa Fe and Pastrana. Other elements struck north of captured Burauen to within two miles of Dagami, supply and troop concentration centre.

The gap between the converging Americans is less than 10 miles. When it is closed, the plight of all Japanese between there and the east coast is hopeless.

Gen. MacArthur's communique today reporting capture of Barugo also disclosed that other units have pushed along Leyte's east coast 14 miles south of Dulag to enter Abuyog. From Barugo to Abuyog stretch 70 miles of Leyte coast now under control of the invaders.

Control of Samar Island plus the seizure of Barugo on Leyte would mean command of a 100-mile coastal segment bordering the Samar Sea. MacArthur's men, in a shore-to-shore movement, earlier this week won both sides of San Juanico Strait which leads into the Samar Sea from Leyte Gulf.

"Canadian Wives" Bureau Arranges Passage of War Brides to Canada

By JOHN DAUPHINEE
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Oct. 28 — (CP Cable) — The Canadian government has gone into the civilian transportation business in a big way with a "Canadian wives' bureau" functioning here to arrange for the passage to Canada of British girls married to Canadian soldiers, sailors and airmen.

There have been more than 23,000 such marriages since the war began and nowadays British-Canadian weddings are at the rate of 400 to 500 weekly. Since 1942 Canada has paid the costs of moving these war brides and their children to the Dominion and more than 2,000 wives already have crossed.

The wives' bureau is under the direction of Lt.-Gen. D. A. Clarke who formerly lived in the Maritimes and Alberta. The civilian repatriation section which handles the actual movements is controlled by Maj. Victor Gill, 34-year-old former Toronto Steamship Company executive.

Figures made public last night show 2,298 British wives and 1,328 children of Canadian servicemen so far have been sent to Canada. Some 21,500 wives and 8,300 children remain in Britain. There are several thousand wives on the waiting list for transport and a priority system has been arranged.

Canadian service marriages to date are listed as follows:

Navy: 477.
Army: 19,101.
Air Force: 2,800.
Fire-fighters: 15.

London, with a total of 2,853, has the greatest number of Canadian wives of any city and Surrey reports the highest total of any county with 3,039. Glasgow has 724 wives.

The repatriation section of the bureau is located in Sackville House, just off Piccadilly Circus in London.

This office handles not only the repatriation of wives, but also the repatriation of all civilians travelling by ship, including Canadian Nationals repatriated from enemy occupied territory.

Wives with one child are permitted to take 500 pounds of personal effects at government expense and wives with two children can take 750 pounds. Furniture is not included in this weight allowance, but the bureau will make arrangements for the shipment of furniture at the owner's expense.

The repatriation section arranges itineraries from the British home right to the new home in Canada. The Red Cross looks after welfare en route.

Long Time Before Fleet Will Again Be Fit for Sea

Planes and Surface Craft Still Searching for Enemy

Pearl Harbor, Oct. 28. (AP) — American planes and surface craft today hunted down Japanese warships limping from disaster in the Philippines, where the Imperial fleet lost probably 40 ships and had its maximum strength cut at least in half.

Bombers maintained an aerial dragnet from South China to the Sulu Sea, searching for survivors. Secrecy shadowed the activities of Allied fleet units.

The loss of six American warships in the three vital naval engagements was announced yesterday. They included the light carrier Princeton, most of the personnel of which were saved, two escort carriers, two destroyers and one destroyer escort, all unidentified.

Reports from the battle scene emphasized the skill and daring of allied commanders and men who fought off superior forces to secure the Philippine invasion and possibly to shorten the Pacific conflict.

Rear Admiral Forrest P. Sherman, chief of staff of the United States Pacific fleet, reported "it appears 40 Japanese ships were sunk or crippled", although the score of the naval engagements is not complete.

2 Carriers, 2 Battleships Sunk.

Official figures, based on earlier incomplete reports, list a minimum of 27 Japanese warcraft sunk or damaged, including two carriers and two battleships sunk.

(Tokyo's latest claims of American losses were 108 warships and transports sunk or damaged, including eight carriers sunk and damage to seven carriers and a battleship damaged. It acknowledged Japanese losses of six craft sunk—a carrier, a battleship, two cruisers and two destroyers—and a carrier and one battleship damaged.)

Admiral Sherman added: "It will be a long time before the Japanese fleet again is fit for sea."

Here are other reports by top officials, speaking in observation of Navy Day by the United States.

Well Reduced

Admiral Ernest J. King at New York—The Japanese fleet has been reduced "to not more than one half of its maximum strength."

Navy Secretary Forrestal, at Chicago—the Philippine battles "laid up, at least temporarily, two-thirds of the Jap's battleships. It chewed up a sizeable portion of their carriers. And it substracted further from an inadequate number of cruisers and destroyers."

Admiral Nimitz, at Honolulu — "although the full extent of his (the enemy's) losses are not yet completely known, it is safe to say they are so great as to render his fleet incapable of challenging any sizeable portion of ours for some time to come." The "supreme test" with the Japanese "will come in the year ahead."

All-Plastic Tire 'Heat-Tempered' Has Been Developed

Hamilton Oct. 28—Development of the first "heat-tempered" all-plastic tire—a step that eventually may greatly increase tire life—was announced today by W. H. Funston, President of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company of Canada Limited. The development is considered of major importance because the tire is designed to whip the number one enemy of long wear—heat.

Experts agree that heat causes most tire failures and that great mileage could be rolled up if the problem were licked. Taking a long step toward achieving this goal, Firestone engineers built the all-plastic to run cooler than today's tires and to withstand twice the heat a natural rubber tire develops at high speeds.

This was done by thermosetting, or "heat-tempering," the plastics which went into the 6.00—16 passenger car tire. The "tempering" was achieved by adding certain materials to the plastic and applying heat.

How soon all-plastic tires, if they live up to expectations, will be available for civilian use is uncertain because all tire manufacturing facilities now are devoted to building military and essential civilian tires.

BRAZIL WILL CO-OPERATE

Rio de Janeiro, Oct. 28 —(AP)— A highly placed government official said yesterday that Brazil's attitude toward Japan remains unchanged and that he personally felt it is "only natural and logical" that Brazil will continue to co-operate fully in the prosecution of the Pacific War after the defeat of Germany.

TRUCK AND AUTO ARE IN COLLISION

While the Public Utilities truck was being backed out from a private driveway on Ann St., the vehicle was in collision with a southbound motorcar driven by Nelson Hannah, 292 Ann St. early Saturday morning. The Utilities truck was driven by B. Wilkinson of this city. Owing to a parked motor car neither driver could see the other's approach. Mr. Hannah was proceeding southerly when suddenly the truck backed out from a driveway crashing into the right side of the motorcar. Considerable property damage resulted to the right fenders, doors and body in general, police reported.

2 CARS DAMAGED AT INTERSECTION

Property damage resulted to two automobiles at the intersection of Church and Bridge Sts. when automobiles driven by A. H. Macguire, 198 McDonald Ave., and J. R. Wellman, 20 Jones St., met. Police investigated and found Mr. Wellman was in the act of making a turn off Bridge St. to proceed south on Church St. when the collision occurred. The matter was amicably settled regarding damages.

REPORTS THIEVES HAD BROKEN IN

William Rose, who resides near Madoc, complained to Provincial Police today that during his absence from his home last Wednesday prowlers had broken and entered the house following which a fire occurred resulting in considerable damage to the interior of the structure. Although the fire apparently burned itself out, one side of the kitchen was badly scorched when Mr. Rose returned. Provincial Constable J. J. Hatch of Madoc was detailed to investigate the report today.

CRYING OF CHILD ATTRACTS NOTICE

Crying of a small baby in a locked parked automobile attracted attention of a passerby on Victoria Ave., early Friday evening. Police were notified following which the father of the child was located in a nearby billiard hall. He was escorted to the police station in his own motor car along with the 11-months-old baby where details of the temporary abandonment were recorded. The fact the parent contended he had left the child in the locked parked sedan only for a short period before police were notified did not register any too favorably with the desk sergeant, who instructed the responsible party to report to Chief Probert on Saturday "The child seemed quite frightened after awaking and finding itself alone," remarked investigating police.

Young Demonstrator Is Slain in Athens

Athens, Oct. 28 (CP)—A 20-year-old demonstrator was slain in broad daylight yesterday within a stone's throw of a building in which Foreign Secretary Eden was visiting.

Participating in a parade of Greek Partisans, the demonstrator is alleged to have shouted an accusation against a major of the regular army who was on the sidewalk. The major was said to have shot the youth on the spot and then escaped into the nearby War Ministry building.

A demand by a mob at the doorway of the ministry that the major be turned over for summary justice was denied by the chief of police but the officials promised an immediate investigation.

Says Russians Open New Drive Near Libau

London, Oct. 28 —(CP)— Col. Ernst von Hammer, German military commentator, said today the Russians had opened a new and carefully prepared offensive south-east of Leipaja (Libau) and east of Auce in southern Latvia.

The Russian forces opened several breaches, some of which were beaten back by strong German tank counter-attacks, the commentator said in a broadcast dispatch.

The attacks, designed to clear western Latvia and open another Baltic port for the Russians, were reported preceded by a long artillery barrage and repeated air raids.

"BIRDIE FLY IN; BIRDIE FLY OUT"

During Friday's city police court proceedings a bird flew into the court room and after viewing the proceedings flew out again with considerable gusto.

Although not exactly a person of a superstitious nature, Deputy Chief Arthur Harman whispered to a nearby court reporter, "What's that a sign of?" Referring naturally to the bird's flying out of the window.

At that particular time a man was being tried on a charge of theft. He was found not guilty.

Bridge Street Congregation Pays Farewell Tribute in Words and Gifts To Dr. and Mrs. Semple and Family

Outstanding tributes, tangible and intangible, were paid the Rev. Dr. James Semple, minister of Bridge Street United Church, and Mrs. Semple and family, on the eve of their departure for Peterborough, by church organizations and members in capacity-filled Sunday School Rooms, Friday night.

Appreciation, in a material sense took the form of a presentation to Dr. Semple by Mr. Russell Wotten of the Official Board on behalf of that organization and the congregation, of a substantial cheque, and a handsome mantel clock.

Presentations.

Mrs. Semple was presented by Mrs. Harry W. Ackerman with a beautiful gold wrist watch and case. The recipient graciously made a brief address of appreciation to the church, its organizations and the congregation in general.

Reciprocal appreciation of eleven years of happy associations, especially with regards to the Sunday School, its work, and benefits and experience gained by their family, was tangibly shown in the presentation by Dr. and Mrs. Semple to the Sunday school and other organizations of a beautiful picture of the Christ in a handsome frame. The picture will be hung on the wall behind the main dais in the Sunday School Assembly Room.

Representing the Friendship Group of the church, and in appreciation of what that association and the minister did for the R.C.A.F., Corporal Allen McNish and LAC. Allen Thompson, presented Dr. and Mrs. Semple with a handsome lamp.

Tribute Paid in Address.

Previous to the presentations to Dr. Semple, Mr. C. W. Burr, read the address, written by Recording Secretary F. S. Deacon, unable to be present through illness.

In the address Dr. Semple was referred to as "fully maintaining a reputation of being one of the best preachers in the United Church".

Tribute to his outstanding work among the young people, children, the sick, bereaved, the lonely, the armed services, and to all needing the ministrations of a Christian minister was paid.

Church organizations as well as the church as a whole "know you as a popular preacher, faithful pastor, able administrator and one who manifested the Christian character by serving well the city of your adoption in every way".

Reference to Dr. Semple's work during and following the John Street United Church fire among members of that congregation was made. "You at once offered the hand of Christian brotherhood and fellowship to all".

Tribute to Mrs. Semple and the family was paid in a "sincere appreciation of their untiring, devoted services to the church in all its activities and for their most generous hospitality".

"Our prayers and best wishes accompany you and will follow you throughout the coming years".

Minister's Reply of Appreciation.

"I am deeply moved by your sense of loyalty and generosity", Dr. Semple said in an address of appreciation following the presentation of the gifts by Mr. Wotten. "Bridge Street Church in whatever it undertook, can always be depended upon to do the propitious thing. It makes no difference what congregation I shall serve in the future, there is one thing clear, we have given eleven of the best years of our lives to you. They have been our best and we have never regretted it. We shall always think of this congregation in tender, loving and gracious terms, and our family although not here to express it, will always think of Belleville as 'home'."

"You are altogether too generous" Dr. Semple continued. He recalled the 25th anniversary when "you made it possible for us to go to the coast. How can I forget the generosity, friendship and tolerance of this congregation. I thank my God for every remembrance of you. A man could not have a more loyal congregation. Its roots are deep. We are not going to say goodbye to you. You are not going to say goodbye to us".

Until the ministerial vacancy here is filled, Dr. Semple told his congregation, "I, who ministered to you for eleven years, will continue to do so".

Minister's Tribute to Congregation.

He paid sterling tribute to the Sessions; the Official Board; the ladies; the Sunday School; the choir and to the officers in general and the congregation. Tribute was also paid by the minister to the "brave sons of the congregation who are overseas. We must not underestimate their duty or what we owe them.

"I love this City of Belleville" he went on, "and I am grateful for everything it has done and shown me. May God bless it, its mayor and aldermen, its future and the good it has done".

Gift to the School.

Alderman H. J. Clarke, and Mr. Howard Clarke, at the minister's invitation then unwrapped the minister's gift to the Sunday School. Mr. Clarke then formally presented it on behalf of Dr. and Mrs. Semple to Sunday School Superintendent H. O. Trusdale, who in a brief address accepted the gift and thanked its donors.

Mr. Joe Shortt was chairman for the function, and presided over a delightful musical program. Included were solos by Mrs. Phyllis Barclay; James Bankier; violin solo, by Dr. Arthur Locke and a piano duet by Miss Leona Riggs and Mr. Alec Gordon. A congregational hymn, "Blest Be the Tie that Binds", was sung and refreshments concluded the function.

IN MEMORIAM

COLDEN — In loving memory of our brother, Norman Colden, who passed away October 28th., 1943.

As we loved him so we miss him,
In our memory he is dear,
Loved, remembered, thought of always,
Bringing many a silent tear.
—Sadly missed by Reggie, Edythe and Louis.

COLDEN — In loving memory of our dear cousin, Norman Colden, who passed away October 28th., 1943.

He bade no one a last farewell,
He said goodbye to none,
The heavenly gates were opened wide,
A loving voice said "come."
Sleep on, dear Norman, your work is done,
You are gone where those who love you
Will meet you one by one.
—Ever remembered by, Ida, Elizabeth and Albert.

COLDEN — In loving memory of my dear brother, Norman James Colden, who passed away one year ago, October 28th., 1943.

Just when your life was brightest,
Just when your years were best,
You were called from this world of sorrow
To a home of eternal rest.
—Ever remembered by Lulu and Arnott.

COLDEN—In loving memory of our dear Norman, who passed away one year ago today, October 28, 1943.

Sincere and kind in heart and mind
What a beautiful memory he left behind.
When the shadows of night are falling.
And we're sitting all alone
There so often comes a longing—
If Norman only could come home.
When days are dark and friends are few,
Dear Norman we often think of you.
—Sadly missed by Mother and brother Bobby.

Found Drowned In Rideau Canal

Ottawa, Oct. 28—(CP)—Dr. W. T. Shirreff, coroner, said today there would be no inquest into the death of Mrs. J. G. Gardiner, wife of Agriculture Minister Gardiner, found drowned yesterday in an inlet of the Rideau Canal in the capital's Glebe district.

Caretaker George Bell of an Ottawa park saw the body floating in the inlet called Patterson's Creek just off the driveway, the Federal Commission roadway which follows the canal through the city.

Police recovered the body and it was removed to a hospital where identification was made.

A native of the Ottawa district, Mrs. Gardiner—formerly Violet McEwen, married the cabinet minister in 1917. She had taken a leading part in Regina social activities when her husband was the premier of Saskatchewan.

A son Wilfrid and two daughters, Florence and Violet Elizabeth, survive. Another son, John Edwin, was reported missing with the R.C.A.F. overseas about a year ago.

Funeral arrangements have not yet been completed.

In Ottawa, Mrs. Gardiner had during the war supported patriotic work and her home was always open for teas and sales of work, some of which came from her own needles.

VOLUNTARY BASIS

Considerable speculation had developed on Parliament Hill on the future of the home defence army.

The Ottawa Citizen said in a newspage story yesterday that the suggestion the home defence men might be used as Canadian occupation troops in Germany and Japan after the war was described by authoritative sources as "a novel idea with much to commend it."

The paper added that the sources said such a step "would not embarrass the government politically ....Further it would solve the problem of what to do with the Zombie army to keep them off the labor market in the first post-war rush for peacetime jobs among volunteer veterans."

The Ottawa Journal said "rumors continued of the cabinet being split on Defence Minister Ralston's rumored demand that the 'Zombies' immediately be placed on an active service basis and sent overseas as reinforcements....There is the suggestion that Prime Minister King may call the House into session and demand a confidence vote on the decision to send the 'Zombies' overseas."

FROM THE ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE TO THE ACTIVE CANADIAN ARMY

(Volunteers All)

For you, our pals in battledress,
It's time to take a bow;
We'll tell the world, in this man's war
You've done a job—and how!
It hasn't been an easy job,
As we who've watched you know;
Nor have you shared our luck, as yet,
Your stuff in full to show.
You've had to work like hell and wait
For two long years and more,
Nor has Publicity's acclaim
Held much for you in store.
But when your leash is slipped, my lads,
By all the Gods of War
The Hun will find out, to his cost,
What you've been waiting for.

On you, our pals in battledress
We airmen must depend—
For what it takes us to begin
Is up to you to end!
Your tanks and your artillery,
Your armored cars and guns,
Will clear the earth as we the sky,
Of Hitler and his Huns.
And every bomb we drop is just
A warning in advance
That he who's lost his shirt to us,
To you will lose his pants!
While we who bear the torch aloft
May play the opening role,
The cause of Freedom, in your hands
Will reach its final goal.

To all our pals in battledress
From us in air force blue
Here's luck and best of hunting
To the last jack man of you!
The way things look to us right now
It won't be very long
Before in person, you'll collect
For comrades of Hong Kong.
For every khaki-clad Canuck
Who made the sacrifice,
The Prince of Darkness and his friends
Will pay a bitter price.
And Bertchesgarten's bogus seer
Will finally confess—
"I might have licked the world but for These men in battledress"!

ALSO "THE TREASURE 30 LBS"

What with the Canadians in Antwerp, the Imperials high-tailing for the Rhine, and the Yanks parading down the Champs Elysees, this war has taken a strange turn, writes "The Sarge".

And, by the way, did you hear about that parade which the G. I. Joes held from the Arc de Triomphe down to the Place de la Concorde? It was the day when, everything set for the grande entrée, the Yanks entered through the lanes of frenzied thousands. Down they came in their tanks, the mesdemoiselles throwing flowers, climbing aboard the panzers and generally conducting themselves in a manner which you — and I — well, skip it.

However, along came the tanks, their pet names painted on them in large letters.

Here was "Kentucky Belle", clanking down the boulevarde. The enthusiastic crowds leaned forward to catch the name, then—

"Vive le Kentucky Belle! Vive le Kentucky Belle."

The "Kentucky Belle" passed, and was followed by "Lucky Lou."

Again the crowds roared their acclaim:

"Vive le Lucky Lou! Vive le Lucky Lou!".

The panzers rolled along. Everyone got a "Vive this" or a "Vive that".

"Vive le Mary's Lamb!" "Vive le Chicago Jane!" And so on.

Then along came one that completely mystified them. The lettering on the tank was quite small. The shouting crowds craned their necks to distinguish it, and give it a good "vive!" But they were puzzled.

"Vive le—"

No, they couldn't make it out. Finally one bloke ran alongside to make out the distinguishing mark. He wasn't going to be beat. Then, with an extra shout of triumph he waved his hat in the air. He'd got it.

"Vive le Check-Oil-Level!"

THE GRAPEVINE.

Salute to Valor:- Lieut. Victor Clapp and Private Russell Soble paid the supreme sacrifice this week gallantly facing the enemy . . . They weren't asked to loan their lives. They gave them . . . Remember that when the Victory Loan Salesman calls on you . . . Talk about appreciation . . . You would have fully realized the meaning of the word had you seen the expressions on the faces of the lads of the corvette "Belleville" last Sunday when they unloaded the comforts supplied by the good folk of this city . . . And if any one tells you that the money collected was not spent fairly impartially and one hundred cents value for every dollar, tell him to go get his head read . . . Two pianos, one creamy white and the other mahogany went through their paces as naval musicians got in their tuneful work . . . A fat cook grinned through the heat of a small wash-room where a brand new washing machine gleamed in its clear whiteness, "Brother", he laughed, "if the old woman sees me working this gadget, I've got a job for the rest of my life." Husky young ratings from all parts of Canada smiled in anticipation of sports when they viewed the softball, hockey and other complete complete sports paraphernalia supplied them . . . Proudest people on the ship were Mr. and Mrs. E. Korning, Montreal, parents of the handsome young skipper . . . Mrs. E. Neate was dubbed the "Mother of the Ship" and she planted a resounding kiss on the scarlet face of the commanding officer . . . Major Rollins, not being a sea-dog lost his sea-legs and forgot to remember there was a high step leading to the recreation room . . . Loud guffaws of laughter greeted Hisoner's sudden collapse, and a few wisecracks flew through the air with the greatest of ease . . . However, the Hon. Harry was a good sport and took it all in fun . . . Then there was the sweet young land-lubberess who went over the boat looking carefully in every corner . . . An old seamen asked her "How come and she sweetly replied. "I heard a sailor say they were going to sound eight bells at four o'clock and I can't find the darn things anywhere" . . . "After the sailor came to, he informed the young blonde that she would probably find them with the eggs in the crow's nest . . . Corny, but true . . . LAC. Ross Hart is back at St. Thomas . . . A. and T. Staffers, ex and present are eligible for war gratuities . . . That "BLA" attached to addresses of the lads in France, Holland and other spots now being Nazi-decontaminated, means "British Liberation Army" . . . Here's a sure tip for the backers of the hayburners . . . Try it, you can't miss—"Victoy Loan in the 7th" . . . The Army-in-Italy version:- "Mary had a little lamb, That poem's over-rated, it wasn't really lamb at all—Just mutton, dehydrated." . . . Regimental schools of instruction are now under way for the 34th Battery here . . . Congrats to a well-known vet, gunner, RSM. L. Fry, who was recently awarded the Efficiency Medal . . . The RSM. was with the battery in the good old days along with Captain Steve Sword, and others, when the unit here was winning the Gunnery Trophy for the Dominion with almost monotonous regularity . . . On another occasion they lost it when the membership fees of the Dominion Artillery Association had not been paid . . . Col. George Drew's Guelph battery copped the trophy that year . . . Lieut. Cols. B. C. Sisler and B. C. Donnan represented the Argylls and the "Hasty Pees" respectively at the coming out party of the corvette "Belleville" . . . Tip to Husbands:- It is a mistake to open things before Christmas, more particularly so, when that thing is your mouth . . . 33rd Field Regt. RCA. is holding a regimental dinner at the Chateau Laurier, down Ottawa way early in November . . . 34th Battery officers here are invited . . . But not many are expected to attend as the Ottawa show is being held on a Wednesday night . . . Don't it beat Hull? . . . .

War Prisoners Protected By Hague Rules

(In Olden Days They Were Killed and Later Captives Were Enslaved, Writes Walter Monfried, in the Milwaukee Journal)

Benjamin Franklin must get the credit again. The canny Philadelphian, whose amazing versatility is still being explored, was a pioneer in assuring humane treatment of prisoners of war. His partner in the enterprise was the thundering Frederick the Great of Prussia.

Their pact in 1785 provided that prisoners of war were "not to be sent to distant countries, but that they should be placed in healthful sections of America or Europe (Frederick and Franklin both had a horror of tropical labors for white men) that they were not to be overworked or abused; that they were not to be confined in prisons, prison ships or dungeons; that they were not to be put in irons or restrained in the use of limbs.

This was an amazing step forward. In ancient days, a prisoner of war could count himself lucky to be put to death promptly, and without torture. In Biblical times, for example, the Lord instructed Saul to "go and smite Amalek; slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep." When Saul's army of 210,000 conquered the foe, he was unwilling to shed the blood of the helpless, and the Lord complains that "it repenteth me that I have set up Saul as King, for he has not kept my commandments."

Centuries later a general of the armies of Syracuse was condemned to death for refusing to butcher the beaten forces of Athens. Victors were expected to slay. Alexander defeated armies of so many millions that it was not practicable to carry the ancient custom into effect. But when the Roman commander Germanicus swept through Germany to the Rhine, he put to the sword men and women, old and young, everybody of the enemy. When Carthage fell to Rome, the carnage of the populace was appalling.

Sold Prisoners as Slaves

Then some shrewd leaders realized that a dead prisoner was of no use to anyone, but that a living one could be valuable as a worker, or in cash as a slave, or, if his family and friends had money, as a source of ransom. Julius Caesar made quite a business of selling prisoners, and on his expedition into France and Belgium brought back tens of thousands of captives for the slave markets. The Roman general Aemilius Paulus collected 140,000 victims on an Eastern expedition and sold them for a fat profit. As the Roman Empire became more cosmopolitan and industrialized, slaves became not only builders, roadmakers, servants and tillers, but teachers, artists and musicians.

The killing of prisoners was considered out of style in the Middle Ages, and Saladin was rightfully angered when Richard the Lion Hearted massacred 2,700 Saracens for no good reason. A thriving trade was done in ransom in those jolly days, and King Richard of England and a couple of the Louises of France were among the monarchs who were held for the proverbial king's ransom.

In the Eighteenth Century the voice of humanity began to be heard.

"One should remember that the prisoner is a man of misfortune. A great heart feels only compassion for the vanquished and disarmed enemy. If I cannot take the life of a prisoner of war I have no right to make him a slave."

Thus spoke the great philosophers and lawyers. The names of Montesquieu and Rousseau will forever be remembered in their championship of the helpless. It was Rousseau who set up the principle which still applies: Belligerents are enemies only by accident. When they surrender and cease to be dangerous, their only punishment should be loss of liberty. And when the war is over, liberty must be immediately restored.

Excesses in Civil War

It was in the spirit of these philosophers that Franklin and King Frederick drafted their compact. There was need for such ideas. The Nineteenth Century, which liked to call itself enlightened, was the century of prison ship horrors, of Siberian salt mines, and of Libby prison at Richmond, Va., and of the monstrosities of the Confederate prison camp at Andersonville, Ga. In the Civil War the North was so aroused by the deaths and excesses in the Andersonville sink that the hanging of the superintendent Henry Wirz, was demanded. Wirz was hanged a few months after the war ended.

That served notice to the world that war prisoners could not be maltreated with impunity. Czar Nicholas II of Russia invited 20 nations of Europe, America and Asia to send envoys to The Hague to make up some rules for a more kindly conduct of warfare. The rules of The Hague convention, providing among other things that prisoners of war may be employed at labor, are still in effect today.

The great powers were quick to take advantage of the provision for prisoners' labor. Germany in the First World War set up thousands of labor camps, and at the end of the first two years of the struggle had perhaps 3,000,000 prisoners working in German industries. In fact, Germany found prisoners a blessing and not a hardship. They replaced men who were fighting.

Even at best, a prisoner's life is not a happy one, and the bolder spirits among the captives are forever plotting to break away, and many hundreds have done it, in the First World War and in the present.

Rules on War Prisoners

The Hague convention rules, regarding prisoners of war, provide that:

Prisoners of war are to be treated with humanity.

They are to be interned only as an indispensable measure of security.

Prisoners may be employed, according to their rank and aptitude. These labors shall not be excessive and shall have no connection with the operations of the war. Payment shall be in accordance with the rates allowed to military persons of the national army when engaged upon the same work.

Prisoners' pay shall be employed to ameliorate their condition. The surplus, after expenses of their maintenance, shall be paid them at the instant of their liberation.

Food, lodging and clothing shall be of equal quality to those of troops of the captor government.

Prisoners who try to escape may be punished. Prisoners who succeed in escaping and then are caught again shall not be punished for their previous escape.

Individuals who accompany an army (such as news reporters) are to be treated as prisoners of war.

Letters, money and gifts may be freely sent prisoners.

Freedom of religious observance shall be permitted.

After the conclusion of peace, prisoners are to be returned to their homelands as soon as possible.

MAKE FURTHER PROGRESS

Kandy, Ceylon, Oct. 28. (CP)—West African troops have made further progress in the Kaladan Valley on the Arakan front, Admiral Lord Louis Mountbatten announced today, but elsewhere in Burma operations were limited to patrolling.

Eastern Air Command aircraft made concentrated attacks yesterday on enemy communications on the Chindwin front.

POSITION OUTLINED

Regina, Oct. 28. (CP)—Premier T. C. Douglas of Saskatchewan, said yesterday the provincial government has sent a statement to Finance Minister Ilsley outlining its financial position. The statement shows the province is in no position to meet the $17,700,000 due the banks Oct. 31 for 1938 seed grain advances guaranteed by the provincial and federal government.

Capital Closeups

By JAMES McCOOK,
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Ottawa, Oct. 28—(CP)—A bit of competition is likely to blow up over which province shall have the honor of giving its name to a Canadian cruiser. The first Canadian vessel of this type, taken over for the British, is called Uganda but it is understood others, will bear the names of provinces.

As the immediate program calls for one more cruiser, the suggestion has been that she might be named Nova Scotia, the province which has seen more of the Royal Canadian Navy and its men than any other. Navy Minister Macdonald is a Nova Scotian, which should not hurt this cause.

Aircraft carriers manned by Canadians may bear the names of birds familiar throughout the Dominion. The tribal class R. C. N. destroyers have the names of Indian tribes and the older destroyers are called after rivers. Corvettes are named after cities and towns.

Lesson: Premier E. C. Manning of Alberta, who learned the value of the illustrative yarn from his former leader, the late Premier William Aberhart, had a new story in support of money reform arguments when he spoke here.

Mr. Manning described the child of 15 years ago who could not have a $3.75 tricycle because his father did not have the necessary "colored paper" in his pocket. Then the boy could not have a bicycle or a car. But now, said Mr. Manning, the child, become a young man, was given a $250,000 airplane to fly in the R. C. A. F.

"There would be enough "colored paper" for everyone's needs in peacetime, if Social Credit had its way, he said.

Good deed: A tired farmer, sitting in Ottawa's Union Station, wanted a cup of coffee. He turned to a well-dressed man sitting beside him and asked him to look after his parcels.

The farmer returned, refreshed, and John Bracken, National Progressive Conservative Leader, ceased being a guardian, smiled and went off to catch his train.

Rev. Dr. Semple's Pastorate

Bridge Street United Church congregation at this time is bidding farewell to the Rev. James Semple, Th.D., who has been the devoted pastor and minister of the church for eleven years, the longest pastorate in its history, and also to Mrs. Semple and their family who, with Dr. Semple, hold a place in the hearts of the worshippers of this congregation. The official farewell on Friday evening was marked by the evidences of mutual regret at the severing of the relationship of the minister and his family with the congregation after the long associations which have borne good fruit.

Rev. Dr. Semple's service in the church has been marked by tireless effort in the work of the religious life and by close attachment to his people. No more devoted and loyal pastor could minister to a congregation than he. He has shown the ability of finding a place for everyone in the life of the congregation and of getting the members of the church and the adherents into active participation in the life of the church. His gifts in administration have been wellknown throughout the communion for his work in the various congregations where he has served demonstrate this. His has been the art of combining regard for the spiritual welfare, administration and constant association with the membership and friends of the congregation.

He has a native gift of public address and a fluency and eloquence to be expected from one of Irish birth. His sermon themes have been thought-compelling and inspiring. With his wide interest he has been able to interest every age and every part of the life of the church—these he has never failed to serve. He has aimed to place the people in the true relationship to their spiritual duties, to the spiritual facts of life and to the church.

His work among service men and women at the nearby airports and among the young service folk of his congregation has always attracted attention. He felt instinctively the great service the church as a body and as individual members can give these young men and women who are away from home in the service of their King. This special task of Dr. Semple's has won him the profound gratitude of the service people. Many thousands have come under his influence in the past five years and have through his effort felt their lives enriched. The numbers of these young men and young women of the services who attend the church are proof of this. They have been made to feel at home. For this they have thanked him by word and in their hearts. In this regard he has done for these fine young Canadian men and women a service for which the nation may well feel grateful for. He has done the forces of the Dominion, the church, the people a service that only time can fully appraise, one which there can be no doubt has strengthened the morale of the fighting men and the home front.

He is held in high honor in the United Church, he has been chairman of Renfrew and Belleville Presbyteries, president of the Bay of Quinte Conference and for many years has held and still holds the chairmanship of the Settlement Committee, one of the important offices of administration in the church. For ten years he has served on the Board of Evangelism and Social Service and he is a member on the Committee of Evangelism of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America as its representative.

One of the best evidences of the appreciation he enjoys throughout the United Church is seen in the requests upon his time to conduct services not only in this district but in the wide field of the United Church communion.

Dr. Semple has a full interest in the problems of our time. He is intent upon work among the young people and for the older members of the church. He has shown his sympathy with everything that aims to better society and individual, community and national life.

As Dr. Semple closes his work here and goes to the important congregation of George Street, Peterborough, he carries with him the goodwill, expressions and evidences of goodwill from every branch of the Bridge Street congregation and of the various other associations in Belleville with which he has been linked and of the many friendships he has made while resident here. He will be greatly missed for he has left his mark on the life of the community.

Mrs. Semple has enjoyed the affection and regard of the members of the congregation and of other citizens as have their family in their contacts in Belleville. They carry with them the gratitude, kindly remembrances, prayers and benedictions of the people among whom they have lived during Dr. Semple's pastorate in Belleville.

Sands of the Sea

(New York Times)

Recently the papers had a photograph of the American flag being hoisted over Philippine soil by a naval beach party. The day before there were photographs of the big pre-fabricated harbors set up by the Allies on the Normandy beaches.

How long will it be before our people recover the old associations that cluster around seashores and beaches? Is there any scene in our pre-war life that calls up a picture of peace and contentment and light-hearted merriment as easily as a beach?

Once upon a time a beach party was not a very solemn affair. Today a beach party raises the American flag on a beach that has just been stormed. Once upon a time the Normandy beaches were the world's playground. Once upon a time a beach was a beach, but for a good long time to come a beach will be a beachhead.

For Young Men Only

(London Daily Mail)

Men in Britain now 35 or over will not be called up for the services.

Instructions have been issued to Ministry of Labor military service sections that unless there is a marked change in the war situation men in the older age groups will not be needed for the armed forces.

The decision is based on three factors:

1. There are now enough trained men in the armed forces to settle the war in the West.

2. The war in the East will be one for young men trained in the mechanics of modern battle.

3. Most men of military age among the over 35's not yet called up are already doing work of national importance for which they have received deferments.

The withdrawal of call-up notices applies to all men born in 1909 or earlier.

Dice Teach Mathematics

(New York Times)

Instead of slide rules and books, a City College class in advanced statistics will be using dice, coins and playing cards for the next two weeks in an effort to determine the tricky law of averages.

"Although it may look a bit odd in a classroom," said Jules Joscow, the course instructor, "it's serious business. It is strictly scientific and the result is that the students learn for themselves just what the laws of chance are."

The method is a simple one. Each student is required to flip a coin 100 times and record his findings. After the coin flipping experiments have been completed, the class is provided with a set of dice and the probabilities of throwing a "7" are figured out. The odds, the teacher asserted, are six to one.

Hanover Girl's Modesty Commended

Miss Adele Bohnert, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Bohnert of Hanover, member of the Bank of Montreal staff of that town, was winner in a beauty contest sponsored by the Hanover Fall Fair. We were glad to see a beauty contest winner attired in something other than a scant bathing suit and highly commended the judges' choice, as Miss Bohnert, besides being a pretty girl, was in a long white gown which was both modest and graceful, and we hope truly representative of Canadian girls.

'Tis said of those who pass away:
They've done with loss and gain
And scornful words their foes may say
And fear and grief and pain.

'Tis said they've found eternal bliss
And deep content and peace,
And walk a better world than this
Where all men's quarrels cease.

And that is why they seem to smile
And show no sign of tears
They've learned how brief the little while
They measured here in years.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Re The Gas Plant

Editor,
Ontario Intelligencer.

With reference to the letter in your issue of Saturday, October 21st, from Mr. George DeVuyst, and with particular reference to the by-law passed by the City Council submitting two questions to the electorate at the next annual election regarding their wishes as to the closing of the gas Utility and compensating those who might be adversely affected thereby, may I, as mover of this motion, briefly outline the reasons why these questions are being submitted at the present time?

Dealing firstly with Mr. DeVuyst's letter, it is apparent he could not have studied the questions to be submitted. The questions contemplate reasonable compensation being made to any who suffer should the Utility be closed, and there will be no confiscation by the majority, said majority having for years now paid the losses on the Utility which is being used by an ever decreasing number of citizens. The whole matter is being dealt with in a most democratic fashion, and Mr. DeVuyst's reference to Germanic tactics is absurd.

A study of the gas problem in Belleville over, say, the last 25 years, reveals the cost to the taxpayer of the City has been considerable. From 1919 to 1931 the operating loss was $77,767.88. In 1931 the Utility was sold to the Ontario Shore Gas Company, a private Corporation interested in operating not for the benefit of the citizens but for the purpose of making a profit. We understand this Company was operated by persons expert in the operation of gas plants, and they, not being able to make a profit, returned the Utility to the City near the end of 1937 and the management was then entrusted by the vote of the people, to the Public Utilities Commission, and has been operated by them since the above sale at a small profit in the years 1938, 1939 and 1940 and at a loss since that date. For the years 1941 to 1943 the City Council had to include in the 1944 budget the sum of $10,000 to cover the operating loss for that period. It is estimated that the loss during 1944 will be at least $5,000.00, and accordingly the rate-players will be called upon to pay this amount in 1945.

As it was impossible from the small profits of 1938 to 1940 to set aside a sufficient reserve for depreciation, the Council in 1941 granted the sum of $8,000.00 for capital improvements and as the plant depreciates over the next period of years further grants can be expected.

City Council has, of course, the power, without submitting the question to the Electorate, to close the plant, but it is felt in a matter of this importance that those who are expected to bear the losses should be consulted, and in fact, as Trustees of the utility, the Council would be remiss in its duty if it did not reveal the facts to the Public.

Studies have been made by experts and reports submitted in the years 1918, 1930 and 1941 and in spite of this professional advice financial success has not been met. After carefully considering the whole question, I am of the opinion that the gradual closing of the plant with compensation to relieve against undue hardships will not adversely affect the present industrial life of the City or the prospect of obtaining the establishment of industries in the future. If the individuals concerned receive fair compensation, there should be no complaint.

If the answers to the questions submitted are in the affirmative, the closing of the plant gradually over the next few years, having in mind the exigencies of the war, etc., Could be accomplished; if in the negative, Council would be justified in contributing out of the general tax levy from year to year sufficient money to keep the plant in operation. It is certainly too bad to sacrifice the large investment that has been made, but there is nothing in the present situation to indicate that future operations will be more successful than between the period 1919 to 1930 when the loss was nearly $80,000.00, in fact as the number of consumers is considerably less than during the above-mentioned period, the prospects are that the future loss will be considerably greater.

The above are, briefly, the reasons why it is felt this question should be submitted. The reports of the experts, financial statements, etc. are available at the Public Utilities Commission offices and it is hoped that as many as possible will inform themselves as to the facts and vote with intelligent appreciation of the situation.

Yours very truly,
R. A. Pringle

ARTERIAL HAZARDS

You may recall that I said here that Dr. Osler believed (Practice of Medicine, Appleton's, 6th ed., '06) that inheritance of poor material for the tubing (arteries) is the chief cause of arteriosclerosis (hardening of the arteries), but that he abated a jot or tittle to add that "more commonly the arteriosclerosis results from the bad use of good vessels."

By the bad use of good vessels Osler meant overeating, alcoholism, syphilis, overwork of the muscles, and the stress and strain of modern life—I'm quoting his own words. The great medical teacher also mentioned hypertension (high blood pressure), renal disease (kidney disease, nephritis, chronic Bright's disease) and the involution process accompanying old age, and expression of the natural wear and tear to which the tubes (arteries) are subjected. This involution process is commonly called degeneration, meaning gradual replacement of functioning muscle and elastic tissue in the arterial wall by inelastic fibrous tissue—this is what physicians mean by the term cardio-vascular degeneration.

Dr. Osler was much impressed with the part played by overeating in inducing arterio-sclerosis. He said there are many cases in which there is no other factor, and he quoted advice given by George Cheyne, who reduced from 448 pounds to 150 pounds in his early thirties (about 1804) and lived to the age of 72, writing an essay on health and long life. Cheyne's advice was never more needed than by the present generation, wrote Osler a century later. Cheyne said:

"Every wise man, after fifty, ought to begin to lessen at least the quantity of his aliment" (food), "and if he would continue free of great and dangerous distempers" (ailments, complaints) "and preserve his senses and faculties clear to the last he ought every seven years go on abateing gradually and sensibility, and at last descend out of life as he ascended into it, even into the child's diet." (milk)

Of course we disregard the seven-year suggestion—whatever people imagined in Cheyne's day we know now that there is no seven-year cycle in life, no particular change that takes place in seven years, or seven months for that matter. Change takes place every hour, day, week and year as long as one lives. To estimate that any particular organ tissue or part of the body undergoes "complete" change from old to new in seven years, months or days is just speculation.

Cheyne's advice, which Dr. Osler thought people needed in his time, is as good today as it was for Osler's day. Anyway all three of us, Ol' George, Sir William and Doc Brady, heartily endorse and recommend milk—let us say an average daily consumption of three pints of milk for every mature adult who wants to keep his or her arteries nice and soft and elastic as long as possible.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Booze Has First Priority

My husband wets the bed once or twice a week. It never happens unless he drinks beer or whiskey. I beg him to stop drinking, but he ignores me. I don't think I can stand it much longer.

(Mrs. S. W.H.)

Answer—An alcoholic addict must have his booze and seldom will one deny himself the indulgence regardless of wife, family, children or self-respect. But there is one thing you can do and should do—try to get your husband to get in touch with an Alcoholic Anonymous group in your vicinity. Look in the Classified section for notice of the post-office address of a group.

Cancer Not Communicable

Aunt has cancer of liver. I am scared, as she lives with us and we have to take care of her.

(Mrs. M. S.)

Answer—Cancer is not infectious, contagious or communicable. Ordinary soap and water cleanliness is ample protection for the members of the household or for those who take care of the patient.

Biopsy

Year ago developed pain in left breast. Lump felt there. Physician removed portion for biopsy. Laboratory report: Fibroid tumor. Physician did not advise operation.

(Mrs. C. F. C.)

Answer—That is a benign (non-cancerous) condition The physician is a competent one—otherwise he might not have given you the advantage of biopsy (microscopic test of the character of the lump). Better remain under your physician's observation and do as he advises.

Frederick the Great of Prussia was a grandson of George I of England.

The word "democracy" does not occur in the Declaration of Independence or the Constitution of the United States and it was rarely used by the founders of the American republic.

"Caravansary" is derived from two Persian words. "Caravan" is from "karwan" and signifies a company of travellers, pilgrims or merchants on a long journey through wild country. "Serai" means a palace, house or inn. A caravansary or "caravanserai" is an inn for caravans.

A cribber is a horse that practices crib biting. Under "crib biting" Webster's International Dictionary says: "A vice of some animals, especially horses, in which they make peculiar movements with the head and at intervals grasp the manger or other object with the incisor teeth, arch the neck and swallow large quantities of air, in marked cases resulting in colic and indigestion;—called also cribbing." This act is sometimes known as "windsucking" and the horse that does it as a "windsucker."

The same authority defines the verb "to deacon" as follows: "With humorous reference to hypocritical posing: To pack (fruit or vegetables) with the finest specimens on top; to slyly alter the boundaries of (land); to adulterate or doctor (an article to be sold), etc."

"Hybrid" is derived from a Greek word meaning violation, outrage or wantonness and was originally applied to the offspring of a tame sow and a wild boar.

A Romantic Elizabethan Figure

By W. G. C.
(In Windsor Star)

Not only because he lived in an age of chivalry, as illustrated by his gallant act in placing his own elegant plush coat in a mud puddle for Queen Elizabeth to step on, but because of his adventures as a soldier, explorer and writer, few figures in English history have lived more romantic lives than Sir Walter Raleigh.

Many tales have been told about Sir Walter's adventures in his expeditions into America, perhaps chiefly noteworthy because they brought about the introduction of the tobacco and potato plants into Europe, but none have been better remembered than the legend of his first meeting with the Queen who was so pleased with his gracious act that she made him a knight and bestowed many other favors his way. Among the most profitable of the latter was the sole right to licence wine-sellers in England, privilege which enabled Sir Walter to attain a substantial fortune.

Although he gained fame and fortune accorded to a limited few, Sir Walter's life was far from a happy one, as he spent many years behind prison walls and finally was beheaded at Westminster upon a dubious conviction of treason one cold fall morning in October, 1618.

Dull and Dreary

While they were undoubtedly dull and dreary, the years that this remarkable man served in prison were not wasted in idleness. The solitude gave him the opportunity of showing his literary skill and he left behind a history of the world which rated at the time with some of the best in English literature. The work was particularly valuable for its spirited histories of Greece and Rome and it is perhaps not surprising that the fine literary eloquence and deep learning shown by a man better known as an explorer and soldier excited considerable wonder at the time.

Born on a farm in Devonshire in 1552 and educated at Oriel College, Oxford, he began seeking adventure when at the age of 17 he went to France and fought in the Continental wars. After fighting in France for five years, he was given the opportunity of going on an expedition to North America with his half-brother, Sir Humphrey Gilbert, and took it. After two years of adventure as an explorer, he returned to England and again took to soldiering, this time helping to put down the rebel Desmonds in Ireland where his bravery and military skill brought him new honors.

Act of Courtesy

It was some time after his return from the Irish wars that his little act of courtesy which brought him so much renown was supposed to have occurred. Within a few years he became a knight, was made captain of the Queen's Guard, and received a grant of 12,000 acres of Irish land; besides being given the privilege of amassing a fortune from licence collections from innkeepers who catered to the thirsty of the day.

Sir Walter put most of his fortune to use in outfitting expeditions for further exploring adventures in North America. It was then that he made his attempts at colonizing the state still known as Virginia. The name was given to the colony by Raleigh in honor of the unmarried queen, Elizabeth. Capital of the adjoining state of North Carolina received its name Raleigh in honor of the adventurer.

Adds to Fame

During the remaining years of Elizabeth's reign, Sir Walter added to his fame, first as a leader of English ships in the great sea conflict which ended in the historic victory over the proud Spanish armada, later as the gallant explorer of the Orinoco River and its neighboring shores and finally as the hero of the siege of Cadiz and the capture of Fayal.

The advent of King James I to the throne of England brought a change in Raleigh's fortunes. Instead of being a hero, Sir Walter soon found himself facing a charge of having taken part in a plot to seize the king and place another on the throne and, after a hearing which failed to produce conclusive evidence, he was sentenced to The Tower where he spent 13 long years. Here he spent his time in study and writing and his pen turned out the remarkable history already mentioned.

Ill-Fated Adventure

At length Sir Walter won temporary freedom when he appealed to the king's greed by offering to undertake an expedition to find gold for the Crown in America. His adventure was ill-fated from the start. Although he explored much of the coast and raided a number of Spanish settlements up the Orinoco River, he was successful in only obtaining two bars from enraged Spaniards. In order to appease the Spaniards, King James dissociated himself from the expedition, arrested Raleigh and subsequently the adventurer was executed on the old charge of treason.

The story is told that Sir Walter went smiling to his death. As he walked up to the axeman whose duty it was to cut off his head, Raleigh is said to have felt the keen edge of the blade with his fingers and, as he prepared to kneel down for the last time, remarked: "This is a sharp medicine, but it will cure all diseases."

THEY MUST NOT STOP!

"Canada at War," says in part: "Naval bombardment from Allied warships hurling 2000 tons of explosives in 20 minutes." 100 tons per minute! This is just one single instance out of thousands, taken as an example of the stupendous ammunition depletion on every fighting front.

The .45 Tommy Gun, the fighting soldier's "mopping up" stand-by, has a speed of fire of 120 rounds per minute, the same as the celebrated Bren Gun. It is handled by one man. Tommy Guns have proved most potent weapons in this war and are numbered in hundreds of thousands — from the Plains of Normandy to the jungles of Burma.

The Browning .303, the fighting airman's favorite weapon, has the unbelievable speed of fire of 1150 rounds per minute! When the number of fighting planes constantly in action is considered, apart from other operational planes using this gun, the enormous expenditure of ammunition can well be understood.

THOUSANDS AND THOUSANDS OF GUNS, large and small need millions of rounds of ammunition every day, every hour, every minute on every fighting front.

The Guns are hungry in their demand. Ammunition is swallowed up on a scale never before imagined.

And the supply must never fail.

We on the home front are in honor bound to meet this challenge and keep feeding the guns on land, at sea, and in the air. Even an hour's let-up in our combined effort at home may mean a delay in the ultimate Victory of which we are assured. We must not let our boys down.

So let us not flag nor falter for a minute. Let us prove our will to win by a sustained all-out effort and help speed up Victory, by investing in Victory Bonds as never before.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Offer Your Services.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

A friend of mine, with his partner, is opening a restaurant. The restaurant is not the usual type, but is to be in a large house. This is his first experience of this kind, and of course he hopes to make a success of it, and make it as pleasing and convenient as possible for his prospective patrons. Now I want very much to do something for this friend of mine, as an expression of my wish for his success in this undertaking. But because of many financial responsibilities, I cannot send an expensive floral decoration. So I am wondering if you can give me some suggestions as to what I may do.

Thank you, if you will. Tom.

I'm willing to bet the gift your friend will appreciate most is the gift of your service! In opening a restaurant, particularly this kind of "house" restaurant, there are a thousand-and-one jobs to be done (many at the last minute), and as you doubtless know, today it's agonizingly difficult to get helpers to do them. So I suggest that you go to see your friend at once, tell him you would like to be at his service for the hours possible for you, and make any definite suggestions you have as to how you can help him. I'm positive your offer of service will be a gift from Heaven to him! You might offer too to be "on hand" the opening night, to carry out any last-minute arrangements.

An Informal Wedding

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

Our daughter is being married next month . . an informal late-afternoon wedding at home. Only close relatives and a few intimate friends to be invited.

1.—For this type of wedding, would it be proper for me to write the invitations on white informals, with no printing or engraving on them? If proper, should I write only on the inside pages?

2.—I know that it is incorrect to write "R.s.v.p." on informal invitations. But since we are going to have a caterer, I do have to know how many guests to provide for. Will you please suggest a form of invitation to use to get a reply?

3.—At an informal wedding, is it proper to have a soloist?

4.—At such a wedding, is it proper to have her father escort her and give her in marriage?

5.—Are announcements sent to the guests who attended the wedding, as well as to distant relatives and friends? W. S.

1.—Rather than planning to use plain informals (your name not engraved or printed on them), it would be better taste to use white note paper; semi-note paper if you wish.

2.—If you wish, you may properly telephone your invitations to such a small, informal wedding. . .then you could have your guests' replies at once. Or your notes of invitation might read something like this:

Dear Marion,

Peggy and Tom are to be married here at home on Tuesday, November 14th., at four o'clock. It's to be a small, informal wedding, and it would make us all happy if you and Phil will be with us, for the ceremony and afterward for a toast to "the bride and bridegroom". Please tell us "Yes, we'll be there"!

Dearest love to you both,
Affectionately,

3.—Yes.

4.—Yes.

5.—No. Announcements are not sent to guests who attend the wedding, or even to those who have been invited and are not able to attend.

The Marry Go Round

Take it From Eve.

Nobody is so surprised when a man proposes to a girl as HE is.

A woman can always feel a cold, a headache, a proposal of marriage or even a divorce "coming on"; but to a man they are always totally unexpected—like a telephone call at midnight.

Cynical Sybil says man is still a savage, slightly tempered by woman. He may enjoy being civilized for a while, but he MUST break out now and then and follow his instincts, or he'll have heart-failure. Hence, she explains, these terrible wars every twenty-five years!

Never believe a girl when she says she is "through with love", a man when he vows he is "done with women" or a dentist when he says "It won't hurt much".

Nothing disturbs a man worse than to find out that he has stirred up a girl's jealousy—except to find out that he can't.

Nothing so astonishes a man who has married a quiet, cute little thing, as to start out to show her who's going to be "boss"—and suddenly find himself in the dog-house, begging for a pat on the head.

Grandmother hung on a man's arm, Mother clung to his coat-lapel; Daughter grapples him around the neck. But they all had the same idea —to keep him from getting away.

A husband, these days, is like a hotel towel or a restaurant spoon; almost any girl who takes a fancy to him seems to regard him as just something to help herself to.

Sometimes a man marries a girl because he thinks she understands him—and then wishes he hadn't because he discovers that she understands him too well.

Before marriage if a girl fails to finish a sentence, a man is curious—after marriage, he is merely relieved.

Fashion Flashes

THERE'S NOTHING so dainty as a white evening frock. Ivory white moire makes a long-skirted evening frock the skirt with puffed hip draperies partially concealing clusters of red roses and green leaves. Similar detail, but on a smaller scale, repeated at the shoulders.

Ready to team up with a skirt or dress for after-dark glitter is a jacket-blouse with short sleeves and flat neckline, with borders and scatterings of multi-colored sequins. Nice in pale pink or blue.

More than ever, color is reflected in the new millinery. An oval-shaped, forward-jutting toque of teal blue has its crown filled in with shaded pink flowers with tiny brown ostrich tips just curling over back.

the back. Pink velvet bows amid the crown flowers are repeated, filling in the hat against the hair in Brown is runner-up in the autumn color card. Beautifully marked deep brown moire is used for an afternoon frock made on simple shirtwaist lines with beautiful topaz buttons, links and belt buckle all set in gilt filagree.

Very smart town suits appear in every collection. A full length coat of black woollen, with wide tuxedo revers of ocelet, teams up with an ocelet waistcoat and black wool skirt to comprise a handsome outfit.

It's nice, this idea of sprinkling glitter touches on wool. Sheer wool in fuchsia color is used for a smart frock made with softly draped blouse with deep armhole and long sleeves. Bodice is cut to a long point, and the skirt is bias cut. Tiny matching sequins are generously strewn all over the frock.

THE MIXING BOWL

By ANNE ALLAN

Hydro Home Economist

Hello, Homemakers! There'll be no spoofin' about helping mother if you tell the children that they may have a quota of fresh doughnuts to be made for Hallowe'en eve.

The children may do lots of jobs such as sweeping, dusting and running errands while mother makes the fritters. The hot fat, used for cooking, is too dangerous for the children to work with and mother has to be Johnny-on-the-spot while doughnuts are being made.

Here are a few good recipes:

Cream Doughnuts

1 egg, slightly beaten, 1 egg yolk, slightly beaten, 1-2 cup sugar, 2 tbsp. heavy cream, 3-8 cup milk, 1-2 tsp. lemon extract, 3 cups bread flour, 1 tsp. salt, 3 tsp. baking powder, 1-4 tsp. nutmeg.

Add sugar slowly to eggs, add cream, milk and extract. Sift flour, salt, baking powder and nutmeg 4 times, and add to first mixture. Shape and fry. Makes 18 to 20 doughnuts.

Raised Doughnuts

1 cup scalded milk, 1-4 yeast cake dissolved in 1-4 cup lukewarm water, 1 tsp. salt, 1-3 cup butter and lard mixed, 1 cup light brown sugar, 2 eggs, 1-3 tsp. nutmeg, 2 cups flour.

Cool milk to lukewarm, add yeast cake in water, salt, and flour enough to make stiff batter. Let rise overnight. Add melted shortening, sugar, eggs, nutmeg and flour. Let rise again. It too soft to handle, add more flour. Turn on floured board, pat and roll 3-4 inch thick. Cut out with biscuit cutter and work between hands until round. Place on floured board, let rise 1 hour, turn, and let rise again. Fry.

Crullers

5 tbsp. sugar, 1 tsp. salt, 1 cup scalded milk, 2 tbsp. lard, ½ yeast cake dissolved in 2 tbsp. lukewarm water, 3 cups flour.

Add sugar, salt and lard to scalded milk. When lukewarm, add dissolved yeast cake and 1 cup flour. Cover, let rise until light, and add 2 cups flour. Turn on a slightly floured board and knead. Cover, again let rise, and knead. Repeat. Pat and roll 1-2 inch thick. Cut in strips 8 inches long and 3-4 inch wide. Put on board, cover, and let rise. Twist several times and pinch ends together. Makes 24 to 30 crullers.

Chocolate Doughnuts

1-4 cup butter, 1 1-4 cups sugar, 2 eggs, well beaten, 1 1-2 squares melted chocolate, 1 cup sour milk, 4 cups flour, 1 tsp. soda, 1 tsp. cinnamon, 1-4 tsp. salt, 1 1-2 tsp. vanilla.

Cream butter and add sugar gradually, while beating constantly; then add eggs, melted chocolate, sour milk, and flour, mixed and sifted with soda, cinnamon and salt. Add vanilla and enough more flour to handle mixture. Shape and fry. Makes 30 to 36.

Take a Tip

Do's and don'ts for shaping and frying doughnuts are:

1. Use only one-third of dough at one time. Put it on a lightly floured board, knead slightly, pat and roll out 1-4 inch.
2. Use 2-3 lard and 1-3 beef suet dripping for fat or vegetable fat.
3. Use a fat thermometer or drop an inch cube of bread into hot fat; if it is golden brown in 40 seconds, fat is about 390 degrees, and if in 60 seconds, at about 370 degrees.
4. Put a small number in at a time to prevent lowering temperature.
5. Doughnuts should come quickly to top of fat, brown on one side, then be turned to brown on other. Avoid turning more than once (except sour milk doughnuts).
6. Keep electric element on high or medium, whichever holds constant temperature. If too hot, the doughnuts will brown before sufficiently risen. If too cold, doughnuts will absorb fat.

The Question Box

Mrs. E. J. asks: How can I make boiled lima beans more tasty?

Answer: A tangy, satisfying dish is lima beans with mustard — Butter sauce made by simmering 4 tabp. melted butter, 1 tsp. sugar, 1 tsp. of mustard, 2 tsp. vinegar, salt and pepper together for a few minutes. Pour over hot lima beans.

Miss L. B. asks: Should grade B eggs be poached?

Answer: They may be poached in steaming hot water to which a teaspoon of vinegar is added. This sets the whites more quickly.

Mrs. B. H. asks: Recipe for Scotch fruit bars.

Answer: 1¼ cups flour, 1 cup fine rolled oats, ¾ cup brown sugar, ½ tsp. salt, ½ cup of shortening, 1½ cups mincemeat.

Sift and measure flour; add rolled oats, sugar and salt. Mix together and cut in shortening. Spread half the mixture in greased square pan. Cover with mincemeat and add remaining crumbs. Press down lightly. Bake in electric oven at 400 degrees for 30 minutes.

It's About Time

IT'S ABOUT TIME to make your teen-age daughter a woollen frock for dress-up occasions. Trim it with wool yarn the color of dress. With this crochet a lacy edging. Nice idea for mother-daughter dresses.

BEAUTY By HELEN JAMESON

Pick Up Your Good-Looks Threads.

There are times when the bravest women feel ragged, all in, don't care much if they go to seed. Something is the matter with their livers or their spirits. They can't put their fingers on the trouble. No woman can afford to give way to such feelings, to confess to a sense of defeatism.

If, by chance, you are in the dumps, get mad at your hair when you try to arrange it, fancy that your complexion is losing bloom, then take a good-looks whirl. Have a big time at the beautytorium—if you can get an appointment. Buy a new hat. Nothing like a pert hat to set one up. If you have a frock you don't like, don't wear it just for economy's sake. What it does to your soul is something terrible.

Turn your thoughts to a different style of make-up; don't keep to the same old pattern. Get a foundation cosmetic, slightly darker than your natural coloring; you will find it flattering. A foundation agent leaves the skin slightly moist. Try cream rouge instead of the compact; it sometimes blends in better. Touch your eyelids with rouge. Keep rouge away from your nose; that practice does not bring out the best lines of facial features.

Cultivate the natural design of the eyebrows. Extend them a trifle at the ends with the crayon if they fall short of the far ends of your eyelids.

Touch your ear lobes with rouge. Accent the lips with care, forming a clear-cut outline with the crimson pencil. Be fussy about the color you use. Bold red tones are seldom becoming; those inclined to wine and raspberry shades are more natural looking, less of a contrast to the skin.

Don't let birthdays bother you. What is time anyhow, but the ticking of the clock? Forty is a grand age. By that time a woman should have developed subtle charms, about which she never gave a thought before. It is the age of understanding. One realizes how necessary it is to be kindly and tolerant. If a woman has not learned something about the art of living, she has wasted her years.

At forty a woman has better judgment than she had at twenty or thirty. She goes in for self-scrutiny, knows her figure, knows what kind of clothes are most becoming. Should it happen that under-chin fullness has appeared, use a darker powder there. Be so deft with your make-up that it does not seem to be artifice, but just give you an appearance of vitality and animation.

Cultivate repose, which is a form of charm. Restrain gestures, be at ease. You will be sought after as a companion if you make other people feel cosy and comfortable. And don't forget that the outward self reflects inward harmony.

Imitation leather upholstery is easily cleaned by washing it with warm water and mild soap. Be sure to dry immediately.

The Secret Oil Wells of Britain

(In London Calling)

A British oilfield, the location of which must still be kept secret, is yielding oil at the rate of 100,000 tons a year (26,000,000 gallons), the production target set by Mr. Geoffrey Lloyd, M.P., Petroleum Secretary and Chairman of the British Oil Control Board.

Knowledge of the existence of oil in this country goes back some hundred years ago oil was found hundreds years ago oil was found flowing into a coal working where for more than a year about a ton a day was collected and sent to the celebrated James 'Paraffin' Young's refinery to be separated into burning oil, lubricating oil, and paraffin wax.

The first serious attempts made in this country to develop indigenous oil started in the spring of 1918, when, as a result of war needs, it was evident that no possible source of supply ought to be neglected. Drilling operations were commenced in two different parts of the country. By 1922 some fifteen wells had been drilled, but the results were disappointing, although a small production was found.

Oil production in England did not make much progress until the Petroleum (Production) Act of 1934 was placed on the Statute Book, thus establishing conditions which made it practicable for a search on scientific lines to be undertaken by properly-qualified concerns. Between the passing of the Petroleum (Production) Act and the outbreak of war licences to prospect for oil were granted to three or four well-known companies.

A scientific examination of the oil possibilities of the country was undertaken by geologists covering several unrelated geological possibilities in different parts of the country, and this work culminated in the location of the first drilling site 'somewhere in England'.

At the outbreak of war a total of twenty areas had been tested in Great Britain by sixty-one test wells, making a total of 60,000 feet drilled. Oil production had been obtained in shallow wells in May, 1939, and an oilfield had been proved at a depth of 2,300 feet, by the completion of the first producer on July 5, 1939, which came in with an initial production of twelve tons per day.

By September, 1939, a total of 967 tons of oil had been produced by one company, and the oilfield in question was then on a production rate of 328 tons per month, with an additional seventy tons per month from another.

At the outbreak of war test drilling activities were concentrated on the drilling of production wells on the newly-proven oilfield. In 1941, owing to the U-boat warfare, there was an urgent need to produce every ton of oil in this country as a direct contribution to the national war effort.

Mr. Geoffrey Lloyd, Secretary for Petroleum, expressed the wish that the most vigorous efforts be made to reach a target of 100,000 tons per annum, the production then being at the rate of about 25,000 tons per annum.

Until 1943 the work in this country had been undertaken by skilled British technicians who had returned from foreign oilfields, assisted by locally-trained labour, but early in 1943 these were augmented by the introduction of American drilling contractors to assist in this work.

Particular attention has been paid to improving the drilling speed in order to complete producing wells as rapidly as possible. As a result, production wells in one of the oilfields have been completed and put on production in as short a time as seven days from the time drilling started.

The time of moving the heavy drilling machinery from location to location has been reduced to as low as twelve hours for production wells, and a record stands where an outfit was moved and had drilled 960 feet at a new site in twenty-four hours from the time it left its previous location.

As a result of these activities 238 producing oil wells were completed, the total footage drilled amounting to 732,00 feet, and the oil production was stepped up from 300 tons per month at the outbreak of war to 9,000 tons per month in 1943—a grand total of approximately 300,000 tons (78 million gallons) having been produced during the war period.

The crude oil is of excellent quality and provides a raw material for the manufacture of high-quality petroleum products, petrol, lubricants, including aviation grades, and paraffin waxes.

The search for suitable oil structures in Britain can generally be undertaken only by means of the modern scientific developments known as geophysical methods, the most suitable being the seismic, in which artificial explosions are created at the surface and the distant measurements of the minute seismic waves thus created enable the underground structural conditions to be interpreted.

To fire the shots, shallow bore holes between 100 and 150 feet deep are drilled, at the bottom of which a small explosive charge is fired, and this work has necessitated the drilling of some 1,600 shot-holes with a total footage of approximately 200,000 feet, covering an area surveyed during the war period amounting to 1,300 square miles.

Offices, stores, workshops, and geological and engineering laboratories have been erected at the headquarters of these operations on the oilfield, and road construction totalling twenty-five miles has been necessary. Pipelines have been laid to a railway siding nearby, from which the oil goes by rail-tank cars to the refinery. A considerable number of British workmen have been trained in oilfield work by skilled British technicians from foreign oilfields. There are now about 1,000 men employed at this oilfield.

In view of the isolated position of this oilfield it is necessary to transport men from distant towns to the scene of their work, which, during the greater part of the war, has proceeded throughout the twenty-four hours and seven days a week. Hot food is supplied throughout the twenty-four hours from a central canteen, and the same meals are available by a hot food carrier service to the outside workers, including the well-drilling teams, wherever they are located.

One of the problems which has faced these oil-production activities has been to carry out the work with the minimum of disturbance to agriculture, and, in addition, to avoid damage to rural amenities. As soon as the drilling of an oil well is completed the derrick and machinery are removed, and as soon as practicable the site is cleared up and levelled, only a small area of a few square yards being retained around the actual well site.

Little Benny's Note Book

Us fellows are asking our mothers if we can have a party in one of our houses for Puds Simkins's birthday, and after supper I asked ma and she said, Well of all the preposterous ideas, is there anything the matter with his own house?

No mam, that's just a trouble, ma, I said. I mean Puds's house has just been all painted and everything inside, and his mother is afraid there will be too much the matter with the new paint and the new covers on the furniture and everything if she leaves him have a party there. So how about it ma? I said, and ma said, Absolutely and finally no, I tell you I never heard such a rediculous suggestion and I'm in no mood to enter on a long fruitless argument about it, so I dont want to hear another word on the subject, is that clear?

Yes mam, I said. And pretty soon I said, Hay ma?

Is this the same subject? ma said, and I said, No mam, G, it's entirely different. I was just wondering if you would mind if my birthday was next week instead of when it is, I said.

Well of course I wouldn't mind, I'd bow to the will of Nature, naturally, ma said, and I said, Well then G, ma, how about if I change birthdays with Puds Simkins and have a party here for my own birthday next Saturday, and then when my old birthday comes around it'll be Pud's birthday instead, and by that time the inside of his house will be looking like usual again, so Puds will be allowed to have his party after all. So how about that, ma? I said.

The result being ma claimed it was still exactly the same subject and she wouldn't listen to me long enough to give me time to prove my birthday is an entirely different subject from Puds's birthday, so I called up some of the other fellows to see if any of them was allowed to.

Which none wasn't.

ASSAULTED ON TORONTO STREETS

Toronto, Oct. 28 —(CP)— Police today were hunting a man and a 19-year-old youth after three women and a 16-year-old girl were attacked in the early hours. The girl told police she was raped by her escort after leaving a dance in a downtown hall. The three women were attacked while walking on Concord Avenue in West-Toronto but beat off their assailant, described as a blond youth.

SCORING POWER OF BOSTON BRUINS STILL A MYSTERY

Toronto Leafs Appear Better Than Any Team Which Finished Third Last Year

By ERIC SANDERSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Four teams hit the trail tonight that leads to the National Hockey League championship and the Stanley Cup when they make their debut in the 1944-45 campaign at Montreal and Toronto.

Manager Lester Patrick and his New York Rangers, which last season played to all-time record crowds in Madison Square Gardens while winning only six games out of a 50-game schedule, meet Toronto Maple Leafs in Toronto while the defending champions Montreal Canadiens, take on Art Ross' Boston Bruins at Montreal.

Rangers, says Coach Frank Boucher, are a much improved squad over the 1943-44 entry and will finish at least in fourth place at the close of this season's play. He hasn't predicted the outcome of tonight's encounter, but it is recalled that the two teams also met in a season opener last year, which the Leafs won 5-2. Later the blueshirts scored two wins over Toronto.

Coach Clarence (Hap) Day of the Leafs hasn't been saying much about his team's chances but admits that the squad is better than last year's which finished third in the regular league schedule.

Day has, for the second successive year, a new goaltender to face the opposition. He is Frank McCool of Calgary, who recently was discharged from the Canadian Army. Last season, Day started with Benny Grant of Owen Sound, Ont., between the post, but finished the schedule with Paul Bibeault. Paul is the property of Canadiens and is being retained by the Quebec Club as a spare goalie.

Quality of the Boston squad or its scoring power is a mystery. Ross has been silent, as in previous years, about pre-season training, but it is known he is having difficulty making a decision on his choice of a goalie. It is reported that either Maurice Courteau, who was with Boston Olympics of the Eastern United States Amateur League last year, or Harvey Bennett, goalie with Oshawa Generals, last year's Canadian Junior champions, will be between the pipes tonight.

As for Montreal Canadiens, Coach Dick Irvin says merely he has not only the best team "on paper" but also will have the best team on the ice. Bill Durnan, one of the leading Rookies in the N.H.L. last year, will guard the nets for the Flying Frenchmen.

On Sunday night Toronto moves over to Chicago to help the Black Hawks, fourth a year ago, inaugurate their home season, while Red Wings entertain Bruins at Detroit.

Sport Shorts From Britain

By ALLAN NICKLESON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Oct. 28 (CP)—Dante was a horse no one would buy. Now he can't be bought at any price.

The unbeaten two-year-old wonder colt climaxed a brilliant season by winning the important Middle Park Stakes by a couple of lengths at Newmarket from some of Britain's best youngsters. Now the experts are talking about Dante going on to win next year's Derby.

Dante could have been purchased for as little as $15,000 last fall. That was the reserve placed upon him by owner-breeder Sir Eric Ohlson when Dante went into the auction ring at the Newmarket yearling sales. Sir Eric, like everyone else, didn't realize the colt's potentialities.

The yearling didn't reach the reserve figure, was returned to his Yorkshire home and entrusted to 65-year-old trainer Matt Peacock to break and train. Peacock, a master of his craft, soon discovered that this gangling speedster was a racer out of the common and of a quality not seen in northern England for half a century or so.

Dante was left at the post in his first race this season but that made no difference. He raced past his field and won cantering by three lengths. Soon after his next race last April, which he won even easier several would-be buyers asked Sir Eric to name a figure.

There was talk that an offer of $225,000 was made but that Sir Eric replied. "He is not for sale at any price."

Dante is a son of the famed sire Nearco who never was beaten in his races on the continent. Sir Eric bought the dam, Rosy Legend, when she was carrying Dante.

Selection of two soccer players in their 30s, Bernard Joy and Len Goulden to play for England came as a surprise to the soccer public.

It is eight years since Joy, Arsenal centre-half and a flight lieutenant in the Royal Air Force, wore an England sweater. That was against Belgium in Brussels. Goulden, West Ham inside left, performed for his country three years ago.

Joy for a long time had been generally accepted as the second best centre-half in England, only a little behind Stan Cullis who is now with the army in Italy. Arsenal's defensive strength of recent years has been built about Joy.

Recall of Goulden came as a lesser surprise. He is considered the next best inside-left to Tom Hagan, now with the army in France.

Oft-maligned Chelsea plan to be the most talked of professional football club in southern England after the war—and not the butt of music hall jokes.

The youthful board of directors went into a serious huddle and decided to stamp out such a state of affairs that enabled topical comedians come out with such stories as that of the man who asked his friend if he was going to see Chelsea play and got the reply:

"No fear. They never came to see me when I was bad."

The directors have confidence in Manager Billy Birrell, who joined the club from Queen's Park Rangers in 1939. He has brought up many youngsters and is looking ahead to the best season in the club's career.

RAY ROBINSON STILL CONTENDER FOR WELTER TITLE

Fifteen Months in Army Halted His Bid for That Honor

Chicago, Oct. 28 — (AP) — Ray (Sugar) Robinson, the angular New York fistic sharpshooter whose 15 months in the army halted his bid for the welterweight title, today maintained his ranking as leading contender for the crown as he notched his second victory since he resumed civilian fighting.

The No. 1 man for Freddy Cochrane's welter title proved to himself and to 10,622 fans at the Chicago Stadium last night that military life was no deterrent to his fistic ambitions as he battered Sgt. Lou Woods of Detroit for a ninth-round technical knockout. Gross gate was $41,246.

Robinson, weighing 147 1/2 to 153 1/2 for the soldier from Fort Sheridan was the aggressor throughout and piled up a wide margin of points. Woods' defensive work, at times, apparently bothered the Harlem Negro, but the soldier was unable to land many effective punches and escaped a knockout only by hanging on. The bout, scheduled for 10 rounds, was halted by referee Tommy Thomas 50 seconds before the end of the ninth. Woods, recipient of many stinging blows, never was knocked down.

Although Robinson was a 5-1 favorite, Woods entered the fight with a record of 32 victories in 34 professional bouts. But his showing was anything but impressive, Robinson knocking him with left hooks and right crosses continually.

The victory was Robinson's 48th in 49 professional bouts, and his 31st knockout as a pro.

INTER-COUNTY LOOP TO MEET

Galt, Oct. 28 —(CP)— The annual meeting of the Inter-County Baseball Association will be held here Nov. 22, it was announced last night.

Highlight of discussions will be the recommendation submitted recently by the Inter-County executive that the association withdraw from the Ontario Baseball Association because of a ruling by the O. B. A. that London and Windsor replay their semi-final series which London had won in two straight games.

The order was the result of Windsor's protest on London using Hank Biasatti, Canadian Army Corporal, because he had played Sunday baseball in Detroit during the summer.

It was rumored here that a movement is under way to organize a Western Ontario Baseball Association.

What's Doing in Sport

By The Canadian Press

R. L. Anderson, secretary of the Royal Canadian Golf Association, said last night at Toronto that if a majority of the Association executive are in favor, all Dominion golf championships will be held next summer.

"Two years ago public opinion was in favor of the R.C.G.A. cancelling all National tournaments, and we did so," he said. "Now public opinion is in favor of resuming the tournaments."

The New York State Athletic Commission yesterday suspended indefinitely Tami Mauriello, Bronx heavyweight, for failure to go thru with a 10-round bout against Lee Oma, Detroit, Nov. 3 at Madison Square Garden. The suspension followed a physical examination of Mauriello by three Commission-appointed physicians, who reported they found nothing wrong with the fighter. Mauriello gave illness as his reason for declining to fight.

Right winger Paul Mundrick, 2nd high scorer in the Ontario Hockey Association senior "A" group last winter with St. Catharines, has signed a Buffalo Bisons contract, Eddie Shore, general manager of the American Hockey League club, said last night.

President Henry Parr 3rd of the Maryland Jockey Club announced yesterday that the first four days of the combined Maryland race meeting to be held at Pimlico would be devoted to war relief. Pimlico, Laurel, Bowie and Havre de Grace are the tracks jointly sponsoring the 22-day meeting wihch opens next Wednesday.

Phil Terranova, former N. B. A featherweight champion from New York City, won by a technical knockout in 14 seconds of the 3rd round of his scheduled 10-round bout with Georgia Knox of Newark at Worcester, Mass., last night. Knox, floored three times for nine counts in the first two rounds, was dropped by a left hook to the head in the third round when referee Johnny Drew called a halt.

Lieut. Lynn Patrick, former high-scoring wingman with New York Rangers of the National Hockey League, arrived at Toronto yesterday for a brief visit with his father Lester Patrick, manager of the New Yorkers. Lynn, a member of the United States Army said his younger brother Murray (Muzz), also a lieutenant, is en route overseas for the third time with the U. S. Army. Muzz has served in France and Italy with the American forces.

Prevention and treatment of injuries resulting from athletics was one of the main topics discussed last night at the opening at London of a two-day conference of the Western Ontario Association for Health, physical education and recreation.

Manager Lester Patrick and coach Frank Boucher of New York Rangers and coach Clarence (Hap) Day of Toronto Maple Leafs, members of the National Hockey League rules committee met at Toronto last night with the 1944-45 refereeing staff. No announcement was made on the outcome of the conference.

Phil Watson, member of last year's National Hockey League champions, Montreal Canadiens, and property of New York Rangers, conferred at Toronto last night with manager Lester Patrick of the Rangers. Patrick said Watson "is concerned over his status. He is the property of Rangers, but at the moment he is not regarded as eligible to play in the N.H.L. this winter. Further than that, Watson came in of his own volition to discuss the case. I have nothing to say in the matter."

Paul (Daffy) Dean, younger half of the celebrated baseball brother combination of the '30's, donned a United States Army uniform this week. The former St. Louis Cardinal hurler is 31 and father of three children.

The Allan Cup championship Quebec Aces last night handed Boston Bruins of the N.H.L. a solid 7-3 thumping at Quebec. A 3-0 first period lead for the Bruins was quickly erased by a five-goal Ace blast in the second. Aces had the services of Paul Bibeault of Montreal Canadiens in goal.

"This is a wonderful suit of clothes I'm wearing."

"It looks like an ordinary piece of goods to me."

"What I mean is the wool was grown in Australia, the cloth in New England, the thread made in Britain, the suit was made in New York, and the dealer I purchased it from has his store in Peoria, Illinois."

"What's strange about that?"

"Why, it's a wonder that so many people can make a living out of something that I've never paid for."

An ankle injury sustained in England two years ago may keep Jake Jopling from gaining a spot with the Hornets . . . Jopling will be remembered here as a promising Peterboro' forward.

Rumor is Denied.

Reports that Marty Marion, the National League's Most Valuable Player of 1944, is disgusted with night ball and delivered an ultimatum to Sam Breadon to the effect that he desired to be traded if the Cardinals planned another heavy nocturnal schedule next season, were rather far fetched, according to Elliott Cushing of the Rochester, N. Y., Democrat and Chronicle.

Speaking with Cushing during the World's Series, Marion told the Rochester scribe: "I got a great laugh out of that story. I don't like night baseball any better than the other fellows, but I never threatened anything like that. I wouldn't want to leave a championship ball club, even if we had to start our games at 7 o'clock in the morning."

Remember When.

Jimmy McLarnin, Belfast-born ring battler who migrated to Vancouver, became a naturalized United States citizen eleven years ago today. One of the hardest-hitting welters, McLarnin became champion in 1934. His manager, Charles (Pop) Foster, born in Leeds, England, also became a U. S. citizen. McLarnin now resides in California and is a war worker.

Entitled to it.

Local wrestling fans will tell you Pierre DeGlane is entitled to main bout billing at the Hume Arena. However, will they say Marse Tunney had to throw him to the unscrupulous Dr. Len Hall? One thing about DeGlane, he never picks his spots and will take his chances with the tough ones, as well as the scientific grapplers. He didn't get any concessions in Hall, however.

ST. LOUIS FLYERS OPEN WITH WIN

By The Canadian Press

A record crowd of 13,384 paying customers last night witnessed the home-ice debut of St. Louis Flyers in the American Hockey League and the Flyers didn't disappoint their fans: They came through with a 6-3 victory over Cleveland Barons. The previous attendance record in the A. H. L. was 12,225 when Indianapolis visited Cleveland March 4, 1942.

The Flyers were down 2-1 at the end of the first period, Les Cunningham and Agar scoring for Cleveland against George Blake's goal for St. Louis. Kendall and O. Smith netted early in the second to send the Flyers ahead and midway through the frame Gasparini knotted the count at 3-3.

From then on the game was St. Louis'. First Doran scored and N. Smith added another tally before the second period closed. Kendall claimed his second goal of the night in the third period.

Toronto, Oct. 28 — (CP) — The main thing wrong with box lacrosse is that there just isn't any future in it, says Carl (Vancouver News-Herald) Robertson. There isn't any prospect of advancement for youthful lacrosse players, no hope of making the big leagues as hockey and baseball provide. In fact, about all boxla offers is "broken teeth, cuts and bruises and a chance to travel either east or west every other year if you are lucky enough to be on a winning team."

The officials don't pay much attention to getting the game the right kind of publicity, either, continues the west coast writer. During the recent Mann Cup finals with its attending squabble, Canadian Lacrosse Association officials tried to keep the dispute hushed up, says Robertson. But that backfired beneficially, since none of the writers pulled their punches and as a result the largest crowd of the series flocked to see the fourth game at Maple Leaf Gardens.

Sporting Justice:

Hugh John Macdonald, new Justice for the Alberta Supreme Court Trial Division, was quite an athlete in his younger days. He was good at baseball, was captain of the University of Alberta track team in 1921-22, played hockey against the Jerwas, Joe and Frank, and dabbled in other sports. He is credited with being a past master of the "stop-'em-with-your-chest" school of third base play of the Pepper Martin variety, among other things.

Dots and Dashes:

The St. Louis Sporting News reported that Connie Mack plans to make Toronto Maple Leafs the leading farm club for his Philadelphia Athletics. With "B" league players moving right into class "A" ball, it looks as though Toronto will be the first "baseball baby farm in history," cracks Harry Eisen of the London Free Press...Joe Kirkwood, Jr., young golf pro who played in the Maple Leaf Moneybags tournament at Toronto this year, has been signed by a Hollywood studio for histrionics after the war when he leaves the R.C.A.F. ... Lester Patrick really must be getting old. He was quoted in an interview with a Winnipeg girl reported thusly: "I used to like blondes, brunettes and redheads, but now — well, let it go at that."

LESSON NO. 517

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

It has probably happened to you, too. Opponents were willing to stop short of a grand slam. But your partner had to open his big mouth. And it shoved them into a grand slam that they made.

That's what happened in this deal:

NORTH
♠ A 8 5 2
♥ 7 5 3
♦ 10 5 2
♣ A K 10

WEST
♠ 7
♥ 8 6
♦ J 8 3
♣ J 8 7 5 4 3 2

EAST
♠ K J 10 9 4 3
♥ K Q J 10 4 2
♦ None
♣ 9

SOUTH
♠ Q 6
♥ A 9
♦ A K Q 9 7 6 4
♣ Q 6

The bidding went like this:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
4 D (1)	Pass	4 NT (2)	5 S (3)
6 D (4)	Pass (5)	Pass (6)	6 H (7)
Pass (8)	Pass (9)	7 D (10)	All Pass

This is what the players say by their bids:

1. (4D) Partner, count on me for a long-strong diamond suit, a sure outside trick, and maybe nine tricks.
2. (4NT) With a cupple aces and a king in my hand, we can shop with confidence for a slam in diamonds. How many aces and kings have you?
3. (5S) You birds are not going to get this thing without a struggle.
4. (6D) This is my signal for uncle, showing two aces and only one king.
5. (Pass) Leave me out of this.
6. (Pass) Without all the kings, this looks like a good spot.
7. (6H) Over my dead body.
8. (Pass) You already know what I have, partner. Woddaya gonna do about it?
9. (Pass) Include me out.
10. (7D) Instead of socking the opponents, let's take a chance at a grand slam.

Thus, south became declarer at a grand slam contract of seven diamonds. West led a spade and south proceeded to take all 13 tricks. He did it with a squeeze play.

The War Today—

Allied Transport System One Of Wonders of Military History

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
Associated Press War Analyst

For those who are anxious because the all-out Allied offensive hasn't yet started in Western Europe, despite the fact that winter already is prowling about the fighting lines, let it be said that there's no cause to worry, for the drive is on its way.

The reason Gen. Eisenhower hasn't already struck is mainly due, as I see it, to the necessity of bringing up vasts supplies under fierce handicaps. We probably even are justified in saying that the Allies might be across the Rhine right now, headed for Unter Den Linden, if they had possessed the wherewithal when they first came up against the west wall in mid-September. That's not anybody's fault but is one of those ironic quirks of war over which nobody has control.

Supplies Outdistanced.

The Allies outdistanced their supplies in the amazing hare-and-hound chase across broad France, and were ahead of schedule when the hare went to ground in his own safety-zone.

Allied striking-power was temporarily short-circuited by coming up against the German frontier defences. While the chase continued over open ground, magnificent air and road transport kept the armies sufficiently supplied. But the Siegfried Line is another proposition. It demands heavy equipment and mountains of material. That means not only air and road transport but railways—and don't forget that it calls for ports, because the Allied armies are dependent on seaborne supplies.

Transport Wonder of History.

Actually the Allied transport system has performed one of the wonders of military history. Lt.-Gen. Somervell, commander of the Army Service forces, discloses that during the first 109 days of the invasion the Allies landed 2,500,000 troops, 500,000 vehicles, and 17,000,000 ship tons of munitions, vehicles and supplies.

Those 109 days a bit more than covered the period of the Allied charge to the German frontier. However, you'll note that Gen. Somervell says the troops and supplies were "landed" in the 109 days. This doesn't account for the titanic task of moving them—and subsequent cargoes—across France by air, by highways which the Nazis had damaged, and by railroads that still are far from normal.

Ever since the invading troops fought their way out of Normandy, endless lines of supplies have been following them faithfully. But the Allies have had to meet the huge daily needs of their armies, as well as pile up a reserve for the drive to the Rhine.

Pierre Deglane Billed for Main Bout at Arena

Pierre DeGlane, Montreal's gift to the top ranking wrestling fraternity, has been given feature billing for next week's rasslin' show at the Hume arena. DeGlane drew none other than the Hollywood ruffian—Dr. Len Hall—as his opponent.

"DeGlane has advanced strongly in the wrestling world and is a favorite in Belleville. Both Pierre and myself felt it was high time he was given main bout billing, but the Montreal adonis did not seek any soft spot for his feature attraction debut. If DeGlane can beat a rough proven wrestler like Dr. Hall he'll comand better respect of all wrestlers, as Hal has toppled more young aspiring matmen than any wrestler in the business. It is entirely up to DeGlane to win if he hopes to advance in the business. Pierre has a host of friends in Belleville, all of whom demand fair play, so this bout should prove a feature attraction to all concerned," commented Promoter Tunney today.

In support "Irish Tom" Collins of Buffalo, meets Babe Zaharias while Joe Christie and Al Dunlop pry off the lid at the Hume Arena next week.

Bing Crosby in "Going My Way"

Promising the finest entertainment to yet reach the screen this year, Paramount's "Going My Way" arriving today at the Belle theatre, direct from eight weeks of sensational business at Shea's theatre, Toronto, has already been hailed by critics as a truly great motion picture.

Reviewers gave many reasons for their high praise of this heart-warming and tenderly-drawn movie in which Bing Crosby plays Father "Chuck" O'Malley. The cast of film favorites certainly is an outstanding asset for "Going My Way." Seen in splendid characterization are Barry Fitzgerald, as Father Fitzgibbon; Rise Stevens, a lifelong friend of Bing's and now an opera singer; Frank McHugh, as Father O'Dowd, a school-mate of Crosby's; Gene Lockhart, cautious banker; James Brown and Jean Heather, romantic love couple and Porter Hall, neighborhood crank.

Many other roles are handled capably, too, it is said, by such sterling performers as Fortunio Bonanova, Carl "Alfalfa" Switzer and Stanley "Stash" Clements, a pair of young rowdies who are converted to gentlemen under Bing's ministrations, and Elly Malyon. An altogether delightful story, "Going My Way" seems headed for top Academy Award honors at this writing with Bing and Barry slated for laurels, too.

The Robert Mitchell boys' choir teams with Bing and Rise on several occasions resulting in some extra fine vocalizing, according to reports. The appealing movie was produced and directed by Leo McCarey with B. G. DeSylva as executive producer. Frank Butler and Frank Cavett wrote the screen play.

One of the great films is "Wilson," not yet released in Canada. The studio asked Raymond Massey, famed Lincoln impersonater, if he'd like the role.

"I'm sorry," he replied, "but since playing Lincoln I've become a Republican. I must now turn down the Democratic nomination for President of the United States."

The story, of course, is about the late Woodrow Wilson, president of the USA during the last war.

So the studio gave the role to Alexander Knox. Both Massey and Knox are Canadians from Ontario.

CHAPTER NINE.

And long before the first snow was on the ground talk had centred practically entirely on ski equipment, new types of harness and wax, whether the Frat should take a hut at St. Adele or at St. Sauveur. The smoker presented the usual wild scene when he walked in on a Monday when the first wisps of snow had fallen on the Campus outside and it was late November. He lit a cigarette and strolled over to where a heated discussion seemed to be in progress between Chet and Cuz, who held a number of records from last season's ski competitions, Sutton, Gus McDermott and Ab Newman. They hailed him cheerfully.

"Here's the man. . ."

"Yeah, Jimmy, how about it?"

"St. Adele or St. Sauveur?"

"Why ask me? Why not hold a meeting?"

"A meeting? Hell, the voting always turns out lousy. . ."

"Yeah, come on Jimmy, you pick it and to hell with the rest. . ."

"Hardly democratic", Jimmy laughed. "Who wants St. Adele?"

"Sutton, naturally. . ."

"Yeah, a social skier. . ."

Sutton grinned and hastened to defend himself. "It's not that at all. It's better skiing that's all". That brought a roar of indignation from the rest of the students. Finally Cuz found his voice and sufficient silence to say, "Where do you get that? Better skiing my eye. St. Sauveur's the only place you can ski. . ."

"All you want, Spike", Gus said, with a glint of humor in his eye. "Is to sit in the room and down about seventy-three Collins' per diem".

"With Verna Foster", Ab added, and Jimmy caught his breath. It was getting so that every time he even heard her name he was struck with a sort of physical shock below the ribs. And Spike had been running him a hard race with her lately. Now he encouraged himself by remembering the party he had been invited to at her home. He liked remembering little things like that, trying to draw the last bit of meaning out of them, and he wondered if he was in love with her. If he wasn't it was certainly a good enough imitation, he reflected. He remembered they had played 'Temptation' after everyone had gone home and they had danced to it, over and over again. . .

"All you want Cuz is to sit in the Pub".

"Well, so what's wrong with sitting in the Pub?" Spike didn't have an answer and the motion was carried unanimously. The talk switched onto the value of the new laminated skis and what was wrong with Chet's harness. The cables kept giving away on him. That occupied the time till the next lecture and Jimmy barely had time to ask Chet a question he had been wanting to ask him for some time and for a reason he didn't quite know.

"Heard from Eddy lately"? he asked. Chet looked at him. Jimmy had never been any particular friend of Eddy's, nor of Chet's for that matter—they went to the same University but they didn't chum around particularly—but now Chet smiled and seemed to come instantly closer.

"Got a letter from him yesterday, Jimmy, as a matter of fact. He likes it fine. Says there's nothing like flying. It's great. Of course he's right in there now".

"You mean he's actually flying already".

"Sure, but of course he was one of the first to get in. That's why. Hell, I hear they're really starting to pour in now, but they can't take them. They're turning 'em away—telling 'em they'll call them later. After all they've hardly started to build the hangars and sleeping quarters yet. Eddy was lucky to get in as soon as he did, and he's getting trained with the fields and equipment they had already. He's sure lucky all right".

"Yeah", Jimmy said. "He sure is". They went to the lecture.

They lived for 'up North', the boys and girls then. They could hardly wait to get aboard the trains for the first weekend, for a week or a fortnight's holidays, for as long as they could. And as soon as word came over the regular Ski-Cast—the subject was important enough to merit a special radio program then—that there was 'three inches of powder on a firm base' the season was on. The first weekend Jimmy made a dash for the train Friday night and swung aboard at the station loaded with his skis, a haversack loaded with steak and tins, wearing thick suede after-ski boots, parka, slacks, and colorful plaid skirt and thick sweater with his heavy ski boots slung on the haversack. It was standard garb and once in it he was a different person. And when he was once on the train he was in a different world. The train ride itself was part of the thrill and the boys and girls took it as a regular part of the holiday, hilarity reigned, and all the cares of life back in the city were forgotten completely. There were crowds of fellows and girls from the office, factory, plus the students. And on the way up song was in order, the tried and true ski songs that heralded the ski season and all it stood for.

More attention was paid on the train however to getting in the mood, and that was a record too that was very popular. It was the second big hit of the new band, Miller's, and somebody had a portable gramophone and 'In the Mood' and 'Tuxedo Junction' caused much hand-clapping and shouting.

"Solid band Glen's got", Jimmy said to Chet as he rewound the portable.

"Umn", Chet answered, but he seemed strangely glum to Jimmy. He forgot about that however as soon as the train pulled into the little Laurentian station. Crowds congregated on the platform and in the streets as the season got under way again, and then the gang started off to renew old acquaintances, awaken old memories, sing the tried and true chanties. A book could be written about the songs themselves, for they were the hybrid evolution of old marching songs and martial airs and ditties of every description, revamped and reversed to suit the climate and needs of skiers and there was not an original tune among them. . .but the verses were original. Very original.

After supper at the shack that the Frat had rented for the season, which was the custom of most of the regular visitors up North and the most economical, most of the town gathered in the Pub, the local hotel, and sang. Jimmy felt an exciting surge of emotion just seeing it for the first time after a year and as he walked he noted happily the red chairs and tables in profusion about the big room, the fireplace, the battered piano and the bar. It was the old Pub and he was very glad to get back into it. 'You can't get to Heaven', 'Chandler Shop', 'One Fish Ball' and the rest of the traditional ski-songs rang the rafters till late that night as another skiing season got under way.

The next day they stepped out of the shack at nine o'clock into a new beautiful world. Even Cuz, who was never very sentimental, was awestruck by the beauty of the Laurentian scene and he whistled. Snow ran white and clean and chaste through the valley and up the slopes of the hills and it gathered in little drifts against the fences and houses and the bases of trees. The sky was softly blue, so clear it had a sheen to it, a golden sheen on blue and it beat on the snow glaring white and warm almost. The snow itself was smooth and soft and very clean on the slopes, but by afternoon it had packed down, especially on the sweeping curves, into well banked and tamped saucers from the beating of innumerable skiers as they flashed down the slopes, Christied great swoops of snow on the curves from the downhill edges of their skis, flung themselves into Telemarks at the bottom, and then grabbed the ski-tow to ride to the top again. It was energetic living and clean and healthy and at noon in the Frat shack they tucked away enormous quantities of steak and potatoes and canned peaches and milk. And in the afternoon it was the same and after supper the gang was exhausted, Jimmy included. They relaxed in the dining room of the shack before a big stove, resting up before venturing into the village afterwards for the night's amusement and the war was still quite far away. But not quite as far as it had been.

Jimmy slumped into one of the big chairs and found himself beside Chet and he suddenly remembered the glum look Chet had given him on the train. He offered him a cigarette.

"Wow", Chet said a trifle forcedly. "Camels! Where'd you get these". Jimmy was nonchalant. He lit Chet's and then his own.

"Verna, she was down a little while ago. Good eh?"

"Solid, brother, Solid". Chet inhaled deeply. "Still in there pitching with Margaret?" Jimmy frowned slightly. He had not seen her for a few weeks, that is taken her out. He had been concentrating on Verna and finding the sledding tougher than he expected. But she always seemed to just give him enough encouragement to come back for more. Her reticence, in fact, made him try all the harder.

"No, not much lately", he said truthfully. "Verna's the big moment, I keep telling myself. What about you and Mary?" Chet shrugged while the conversation droned on around them.

"Not too bad, but she doesn't like my joining up". Jimmy jumped. Chet joining up too. Admittedly there had been quite a few students quitting already, following Eddy's example. Some had taken advantage of the Officers' Training Course and were going through for commissions and some had chosen the Navy. But the stream was still comparatively small and very few of Jimmy's friends had gone. In fact Eddy had been the only close friend to leave. . .and now Chet.

"You're joining up?" Chet shrugged.

"Sure, they'll be putting Conscription through pretty soon now and God knows I'm certainly not waiting for that".

"That won't affect students". Chet shrugged again and then made a remark that Jimmy had been hearing frequently and was to hear with much greater frequency.

"I know Jimmy. . .it's not that, but it's just no use trying to stick it out. I can't settle down. I don't know what it is but I'm dissatisfied as hell, and as for trying to study. . .gosh, everytime I try to swot up, no kidding, I start thinking of the war and Eddy and the Airforce and the fellows fighting all over the world and this all seems pretty damn useless to me. . ." He trailed off and grinned half-heartedly. Jimmy didn't say anything for the very simple reason that that was the way he was feeling too. After a while they left the shack and went down to the village. But it was not the same. And the war was much nearer.

It was the greatest skiing season ever. Everybody agreed on that. And just about everybody too took full advantage of it. Why not? After all the war was probably a phoney one, like some people were saying. And besides if you had to go, well, you had to go; and so why not take advantage of what the world had to offer before it came to that. It was the first black tinge of indifference that was to be fostered in the younger people by the way, and it was natural that it should take them a little while to get over it. It was quite normal that it should happen that way. Reared and accustomed to peace, though a farcical one, an armed truce between conflicts, it was natural that a feeling of disillusionment should become manifest, should make itself felt in more hilarity, in wilder parties, in one last fling, in a final trip up North. For that reason New Year's Eve was something that was long remembered for its uninhibited hilarity, for its sheer good neighborliness. Everybody loved everybody.

Jimmy, in a large party of boys and girls from the 'U' journeyed up two days before, established themselves at the shack, the girls in their sorority house down the road, and they proceeded to lay in provisions against the festive occasion. It was a good job they did. Everyone could feel tension building up during the week following the Christmas celebrations, and that feast too had been a mild foretaste, wilder than any other Christmas, of just what New Year's would be like. It was not disappointing.

They skied all that afternoon and about four o'clock consolidated their position and the inner men with a big dinner at the sorority house prepared by the coeds. They had enough turkey to last a week with all the trimmings including plenty of cold ale. Afterwards they went down to the Pub where celebrations were already starting. The rest of the night was something of a blur, so for at least as Jimmy was concerned. Things moved rather too fast for him after that, and although he kept abreast of them it was just about all he could do. He remembered the piano and Frankie at it playing boogie-woogie and it was ten. At eleven they were in a sleigh heading for St. Adele and they kissed the New Year in in the Room. He remembered dwelling quite lingeringly over the task when he finally got hold of Verna. Margaret had disappeared somewhere he noted automatically and then Spike Sutton came over, and for the rest of the night he remembered carrying on a campaign of not so friendly rivalry against the man.

Verna's lips were sweet and she was laughing. There was music and dancing and much hilarity and noise and he told Verna, "I love you". She smiled at him and at Spike who, sitting on her other side said, "I love you". And it was nineteen hundred and forty—and cold outside but very warm inside and inside themselves. Jimmy felt very happy. They went back to St. Sauveur. They went to bed. It was seven-thirty and broad daylight.

Old Cyrus had them down in Big Hall. Jimmy looked around at the students, all the male students of the University, who had assembled here on the eve of the Easter vacation and wondered what the old boy would have to say. All the students were there from every Faculty and they made quite a good showing. Jimmy had never realized there were so many, never having seen them all together before. It was not often that it happened, and it was even less often that Old Cyrus made a personal appearance. He had long since given up the job of being Dean to a thousand students and he was no longer anything but a figure head and guiding light to the authorities nowadays. But, nevertheless they clearly felt constrained to call upon him now in a time of crisis. And to Jimmy and the rest of the students the reason was quite clear and needed no explanation. No professor or Dean since Cyrus had ever come near approaching the reverence and awe he inspired, nor had any of them ever held anywhere near the authority he exerted, even among the latest students, some of whom had never even had contact with him other than seeing him pacing slowly in the garden of the big stone house at the end of the Campus which was his home.

He entered the raised dais at the end of Big Hall now, followed by the rest of the Faculty, and with one accord the student body rose, spellbound suddenly by the sight of the great man, still big in spite of some seventy years his huge mane of white hair flowing back from his massively protruding forehead, a black master's gown hanging from his huge shoulders. Old Smidley introduced him and Jimmy was amazed at the reverence even he put into his voice, Old Smidley who was something of a cynic. He got to his feet and there was not a sound in Big hall as they watched his oldness move across the stage, right to the edge and stand there, proud and erect still, and gaze out into the eyes of six hundred men. He didn't move or say anything for a full minute and then when he did his voice was still deep and sonorous and full of a compelling power that brought the attention of every student to bear, to hang, on his every word. And he spoke.

"Students, I will not deny, as I stand before you in this year of our Lord nineteen hundred and forty, that I feel strangely moved. And for a reason that is not entirely pleasant. Because in the year 1915 I stood here too, and said to many of your fathers the same words as I have to say to you today. And for the same reason. We are at war. You may wonder why nothing has been said to you previously here at the University regarding the war. Perhaps many of you are feeling the effects of it. For certainty some of you have already left us, and many more of you are contemplating doing so. And the reason nothing has been said is simply that there was nothing to say then. We did not know just where our Universities and other institutions of learning in Canada were going to fit in. . .just what their role was going to be in this new war. 'We know now'.

His voice rolled on and on, compelling with the power of the born orator who had many years before swayed hard-headed businessmen and financiers into building a University by telling them that a University was not only a bad risk but would definitely guarantee no return other than their names on a brass plaque in the Administration Hall of whatever building they wished to endow. And now. . .they would like to encourage all Engineering and Medical students to stay, at whatever the cost. But to all he would say, do as your conscience sees fit. Undoubtedly there would be a need for Conscription. Students would not be drafted. Instead they would undergo Reserve Army training, much more than they had been getting in the past, and to all again he would say, in spite of the conflict into which the world had again been plunged due to barbaric ideals that sought to overwhelm our own Christian ones of Freedom, it was the duty of every man at Alma Mater to remember what he had been taught here, no matter what his course might be during the next year and after. Christian gentlemen was the term he used and Jimmy thought about it as they stood up and cheered the old man off the stage. But he was beginning to see his course. He was not in Medicine or Engineering but even if he had been he doubted whether it would have changed matters much. The war was suddenly much nearer.

There had been Austria, Czechoslovakia, Poland, and there was Norway, Belgium and France and from the beach of Dunkirk, under a hell of planes and shells and bombs, protected by themselves, a living rearguard, what was left of the Army, waded out into the sea and climbed wearily into small boats. And after Dunkirk it was no longer a phoney.

He strolled along the edge of the Campus with Verna under the trees beside the Med building and thought . . . "We shall fight on the beaches. We shall fight in the streets, and in the fields, we shall fight in the hills". He held Verna's hand and knew he loved her.

GRADE 'A' EGGS TOUCH 50 CENTS

Inside Market is Larger and Outside Market Smaller by Reason of Cold

Showing a steady advance in price during the past several weeks, Grade "A" eggs brought 50 cents per dozen on the local produce market Saturday, a two-cent increase over last week. Mediums were quoted at 48 cents and pullets at 45 cents the dozen.

Comparatively colder temperatures resulted in a marked difference in the attendance on the inside market with farmers' wives being in evidence in the market building in much greater number than previously this season. In contrast attendance on the outside market was smaller than usual.

Chicken was offered quite plentifully with top prices for well-finished birds being $2.25 and averaging 38 to 40 cents the pound. A few ducks were offered at 50 cents the pound.

Apples again featured the outside market with Spys being offered for the first time this season, top grades bringing $2.75 the hamper and domestic grades fetching $2.25. Talman Sweets were $2 the hamper and cooking varieties ranged from $1.25 to $1.75 the bushel. Spys by the basket sold at 50 cents, while McIntosh sold at 40 and 45 cents, or up to $2.75 per hamper for best grade.

Apple cider was quite plentiful at 50 cents the gallon.

Potatoes held at $2 the bag or $1.60 to $1.75 per bushel with seasonal vegetables being offered at customary levels. Cauliflower sold up to 30 cents each.

Forecasting a hard winter for the squirrels in the Belleville district an unusually large number of farmers offered hickory nuts for sale with prices ranging from 20 to 25 cents the quart.

Young pigs seemed easier with farmers asking as low as $5 each, although the majority held out for higher prices. Mixed stove wood brought $13.50 per cord for elm and ash.

German Love for Expensive Military Toys

(By Robert N. Farr, in the Vancouver Daily Province)

The Nazi scientists delight in creating "secret weapons" which have proved to be little more than expensive military toys. Although some of these "toys" have cost many Allied lives and done much damage to civilian and military property, none of them can seriously be considered war-winners.

The "Goliath," a miniature tank, proved a fiasco in Italy and in Normandy. This so-called secret weapon is a miniature of a standard tank, five feet nine inches long, of spot-welded armor construction. Actually, it is a remote-controlled, mobile land-mine.

The tank is wheeled on a cart to an advance position near enemy objectives. Dispatched from the special cart, it is manipulated by an operator with a control box, who crouches in a hideout and unreels 1,800 feet of cable through which he keeps contact with the tank. The German tank cannot move backward, or turn, and it is not radio-controlled.

It was designed to explode mine fields, blow up tanks, and demolish pillboxes. It has failed in all three objectives.

Allied aircraft experts are still puzzled by what the Luftwaffe's "asymmetrical plane, Bv 141" was supposed to accomplish. The single-engine plane is radical in design. The motor is mounted in a thin, cigar-shaped fuselage, slightly off centre. A small cockpit of about the same size as an engine mount on a twin-motored bomber, balances the fuselage in an off-centre position. It looks like an Allied medium bomber, with the fuselage pushed to the position of the left motor, and the cockpit placed where the right motor is located.

The radio-controlled rocket glider bomber is one of the most famous of German war weapons. This is not to be confused with the even better known "robot" bomb used against England. The radio-controlled glider bomb resembles the standard German bomb, but has short-span wings and a tail.

A specially constructed tail contains the radio receiving control apparatus. The propelling rocket is carried in a separate case slung underneath. It is usually carried beneath the fuselage of a conventional plane. When the target is reached it is released and from then until the time it explodes it is controlled by radio.

The designing of tricky bombs has been one of the Nazi scientists' favorite pastimes. Recently they developed a "butterfly bomb," with wings that open up as soon as the bomb is released, and act like a parachute to slow its descent. The The new bomb is intended for use against troops on the march and in camp. The small but deadly charge explodes a few feet above the ground, showering bits of hot steel on any soldiers within range.

A real radio-controlled tank was first used by the Nazis against the 5th army at Anzio. The tank is 12 feet long, six feet wide and four feet high. It is an explosive carrier rather than a tank, since it carries no armament. Dual controls enable a driver to take the weapon as close to the enemy objective as he dares. After he leaves, the radio-control equipment is set in operation, guiding the tank to its objective. The machine drops an 800-pound explosive charge, reverses and returns to the driver, who remounts and drives it back to his own lines. Successful drivers of these tanks receive the Iron Cross second class.

The armor is only three-quarters of an inch at its thickest point. The driver has to expose the upper part of his body to see, since there are no vision slits or periscope. The tank has a gasoline motor and on a good road can move at speeds of about 28 miles an hour.

At least two German weapons have proved to be definite improvements over existing weapons, and very effective in combat. The Schmeisser submachine gun MP40 is light and compact. It takes a nine-millimetre cartridge and can use pistol ammunition. Using the standard cartridge, the range and penetration of the cartridge are superior to that of a .45 calibre gun, but its shocking power is not as great. Soviet soldiers use this gun, captured from the Germans in large quantities, and they are reported to like it.

Hitler's latest armored vehicle is the 45-ton Panther tank, which was copied from the Russian cruiser tank T-34. It is designed for all-round use.

The main armament consists of a 2.95-inch gun with an overall length of about 18 feet. The most striking feature of the tank, apart from the gun, is the long, sloping front plate, familiar in Russian tanks, giving it a streamlined appearance. It has one 7.92 millimetre mechanical guns.

The armor is four inches thick around the gun, but the side walls are only 1.75 inches thick. This is very thin armor for a heavyweight tank and has proved to be its Achilles heel.

WHO AM I?

Found suffering from amnesia in Baltimore, this boy is shown in the accident room of the Mercy Hospital. He can remember nothing about himself or where he came from. The name "Ernest Slosberg" on a silver identification bracelet is the only clue to his past. Because he mutters incoherently about a football game and the New York Giants, it is believed he may come from that city or nearby. He is brown-eyed, shock-haired, about five feet, six inches tall and weighs about 120 pounds. A check in New York revealed that an Ernest Slosberg had been missing since Oct. 24. He is the son of Beatrice and Joseph Slosberg of the Bronx.

DOG SHARES INVASION EXPLOITS

Cmdr. John D. Bulkeley of New York, naval hero who first gained fame when he took Gen. Douglas MacArthur from the Philippines in his P-T boat in 1942. Pictured in New York with "K-9 Capt. Penny" who was with the commander on his latest exploit. This was when his destroyer, the Endicott, with crippled guns, pushed to the rescue of two British gunboats off the southern coast of France, Aug. 17, and sank two German corvettes in a close-range battle. Bulkeley said the dog was on the bridge all the time.

Cold Baths Touted As Preventative for Colds

(By W. G. C. in Windsor Star)

In this kind of weather there are probably quite a few Windsor citizens who would be willing to give a good deal if they could be certain of keeping free from the irritating disease commonly referred to as a "cold."

In my home town of Orillia there lives a man 84 years old who claims he has never had to put up with the discomforts of a cold in his life.

And what makes this record more remarkable is the fact that colds generally are more prevalent in that northern community situated in the old Huron country between Lakes Couchiching and Simcoe than they are in this area.

Robert Starsmeare, for that is the name of this self-styled "man of nature," credits a very simple formula and he believes it will work as well for anyone else who begins the habit young as he did. One simply has to rise early in the morning and take a cold bath before breakfast!

Not a Cure

The Orillia bookkeeper does not say that getting up early one morning and taking a cold bath will cure a cold. Far from it. He simply means that if you are in good health and begin this routine when young and keep it up the chances are that you will never be bothered with a cold, no matter what the weather.

Regardless of what others may think, no one in the Lake Couchiching town who knows Mr. Starsmeare doubts his formula. For there is not a citizen in that town who can remember when the aged bookkeeper ever had a cold. On the contrary he is known as a man of unusual health and remarkable agility.

Mr. Starsmeare not only takes a cold bath every morning all the year around but from the first of May until the end of October he goes into the often chilly waters of Nearby Lake Couchiching for an afternoon swim. He has been known to go into the water when it has been snowing and has posed for photographs afterward.

While frequently he has continued daily swims in the lake until the middle of November, he quit a little earlier than usual this year. His doctor advised him that October was late enough for a man of 84 to chance the chills of coming out of the water wet into the cool breezes that swept across the "lake of many winds," the Indian meaning of Couchiching.

Main Credit

While he gives his morning baths main credit for overcoming colds, Mr. Starsmeare admits there may be other factors responsible for the remarkable health he has enjoyed. These include a brisk walk every day—usually from two to five miles—a plain diet and regular sleeping habits. He usually retires at the same time each night and rises punctually in the morning. Although he smoked in his youth, he gave up the habit over 50 years ago just because tobacco appealed to him no longer. He has always been a teetotaler.

Regardless of the other factors, Mr. Starsmeare believes his cold bath routine would help almost anyone find better health. He warns, however, that it might be dangerous if not started when one is young. The shock of frigid baths in cold weather for old people not used to it, he admits, could well prove fatal. This is because people aren't used to living normal, healthy lives, he says.

For one thing, Mr. Starsmeare believes the average person today eats too much fried food. He thinks fried food is responsible for much of the modern indigestion. A good cook, he argues, never has any use for a frying pan. Boiled meats are not only better flavored but better for your health, he maintains.

Canned Foods

Mr. Starsmeare is equally emphatic about canned foods. Generally, he says, they lack the quality of home-made varieties. A simple diet, made up of lots of fresh vegetables and fruit, is best for health he believes. This is why people in the country are usually more healthy than their city cousins, he says.

Not only is the kind of food important, but regular eating habits are also. He does not believe for instance that the modern idea of a heavy breakfast, a light lunch and a heavy dinner, is good for one's health. Balanced meals are much better.

Along with most other people, Mr. Starsmeare takes a keen interest in recent government plans to improve national health. He believes, however, that just as important as medical clinics for the sick persons are educational clinics which would teach people generally how to take care of good health when they have it.

Washington Spotlight

By C. R. BLACKBURN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Washington, Oct. 27 — (CP)—One of the most respected of Washington's columnists, Arthur Krock of the New York Times, has unearthed the information that no president as old as 63 (which President Roosevelt will be next January) has been inaugurated since 1857.

Then he shows from the record how many who are listed as great presidents took office when they were young and inexperienced, including Theodore Roosevelt who was 42 when he became president and much less experienced than Republican candidate Thomas E. Dewey, 42-year-old Governor of New York.

All this is apropos of the arguments being advanced for the support of Mr. Roosevelt because of his experience, and against him because he is too old.

But neither Mr. Krock nor others who have commented on this phase of the presidential election campaign pay much attention to the fact that the world situation, of which the United States is almost the focal point just now, is nique the focal point just now, is unique ities for destruction of all that is good and orderly in civilization.

How much consideration the American voters will give this aspect of the campaign probably will never be known, as Mr. Krock pointed out. But it would seem to be a safe guess that Mr. Roosevelt's experience will weigh heavily in his favor.

Fruitful gossip columns: Surprising how much home news one can get from the syndicated gossip columns written in New York, just in the last week these gossips have casually reported that Prime Minister Mackenzie King is writing a book about Canada; That Madame Chiang Kai-Shek has cancelled her proposed visit to Canada, and that either Field Marshal Montgomery or the Marquis of Linlithgow will be Canada's next Governor General.

Credit Note: Three weeks ago this column commented on the neglected appearance of the memorial cross erected in Arlington National Cemetery by Canada as a tribute to Americans who died while serving with the C.E.F. in the First Great War. Now it can be reported that the grass has been neatly clipped where it was high and rank about the memorial base, and the graceful cross itself is gleaming in all its original beauty. Manpower shortages make these things difficult.

GERMAN FRONT CRUMBLES SOUTH OF MAAS
58 JAP SHIPS SUNK OR DAMAGED IN BATTLE

Stand in Lowlands Cut Into Four Dwindling Pockets

Canadian and British Race To Moerdijk Escape Bridge

By WILLIAM FRYE
(AP War Correspondent)

London, Oct. 30—(AP)—The German stand in the southwestern Lowlands had been cut into four dwindling pockets today and German forces south of the Maas river were disintegrating under concentrated air attack and the drive of British and Canadian armies racing to the Moerdijk escape bridge only six miles away.

The four pockets were south of the Maas where the chief resistance centre of Breda had been taken; on Beveland Island; on flooded Walcheren Island, virtually cut off by a Canadian drive to within 3,000 yards of the causeway connecting with Beveland; and a tiny six-mile-long, four-mile-wide corner of Belgium on the North Sea southwest of the Schelde.

North of Tilburg a British column struck out from Loon Op Zand and seized the village of Kaatsheuvel, only three miles south of the Maas, and drove to within two miles of Waspik to the northwest, only three miles from the Geertruidenberg span across the Maas.

The drive across flooded Lowlands, laced by canals and dikes, in the campaign to clear the Schelde approaches to the Allied harbor of Antwerp, was gaining momentum and approaching a conclusion after some of the most difficult fighting of the war.

On Walcheren the remnants of German forces were fighting from islands within the island — bits of land and raised dikes around the principal cities of Vlissingen (Flushing) and Middelburg which stood above the flood waters loosed by R. A. F. bombings of the seawalls. The Germans admitted many of their guns were under eight feet of water.

Major Attack on Dunkerque.

The German high command said other 1st Canadian army forces, after heavy artillery bombardment, had landed a major attack on Dunkerque, only remaining coastal pocket in northeastern France, and htad achieved a "temporary" penetration.

Canadian and British units fighting westward on Beveland north of the Schelde had taken the chief centre, Goes, and pushed through Heinkenszland to within 3,000 yards of the causeway to Walcheren, virtually cutting the connecting link. They had captured nearly 4,000 of the 11,000 garrison on the two islands.

South of the Schelde Canadian forces had driven south until they had pushed the Germans entirely out of Holland into Belgium where the Germans held a six-mile coastal strip northwest of Brugge, including the towns of Knocke and Heyst, and running inland four miles to the town of Sluis. Cadzand, Zuidzande and Retranchement were captured. Only a few hundred Germans remained here after the capture of 6,000, 500 of them taken yesterday.

Pushed Against Maas.

To the east a four-day German counterthrust by two armored divisions, supported by tanks, planes and much artillery, had gained headway, but it was too late to be of great air to the remnants of 40,000 German troops being pushed against the Maas.

This thrust, from between Venlo and Roermond against the British 2nd Army's east Holland front, had swept through American-held Meijel and Liesel, progressed some 4,000 yards from Meijel toward Asten, and reached the vicinity of Nederweert, only two miles from Weert.

15 Tanks Knocked Out.

It apparently had gained a few miles and reached to within 15 miles of Eindhoven, but field dispatches said the German drive was being contained, and 15 of the enemy's 50 tanks were knocked out yesterday.

A British army spokesman said the fall of Breda had brought about the "disintegration" of the enemy south of the water barrier, the first of several major water barriers lying between the Allies and Rotterdam, 20 miles to the north. Already a bag of 8,000 prisoners had been taken south of the river and it was expected to grow to 20,000.

CITY OF COLOGNE BATTERED THREE TIMES IN 36 HRS.

Blow Sunday Night Climaxed Weekend Of Spectacular Raids By 3,500 Planes

London, Oct. 30 (CP) — The bat- than 800 United States heavy bombers attacked Hamm, Munster and the twin port cities of Hamburg-Harburg today.

Germany's largest freight yards at Hamm and the third largest serving the western front are at Munster. Hamburg area targets were oil refineries and processing plants.

The heavies were outnumbered by 950 escorting fighters, many of which veered off on transport-hunting missions of their own.

The three-pronged daylight attack followed another sharp attack on Cologne by R.A.F. Mosquitos last night.

The latest blow at the great industrial city on the Rhine climaxed a weekend of spectacular raids on Germany by at least 3,500 Allied planes and there were indications the record-breaking assault was continuing in full swing today.

Speedy Mosquitos also struck at Cologne Saturday night in the wake of a 4,000-ton blow by 1,000 R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. heavy bombers in daylight, Saturday.

The Air Ministry announced Sunday that R.A.F. Lancasters made a 2,400-mile round-trip flight to strike the crippled German battleship Tirpitz west of Tromsoe with another six-tone earthquake bomb and also pounded German U-boat pens at Bergen on Norway's west coast.

(A BBC report said Allied planes sank a German transport and ten other ships in north Norwegian fjord.)

The speedy Mosquitos also roamed far over Germany shooting up trains and road targets. Sweeping the areas from Peenemunde to Dresden and Stuttgart to Frankfurt, they knocked out at least 14 trains and left several others burning.

From more than a dozen operations by British, Americans and Canadian planes during the weekend, beginning with a double attack on Cologne fewer than 15 bombers and fighters are missing.

Here is the box score:

Cologne, one of the next major cities in front of the U.S. 1st. Army on the road to Berlin—hit five times, once by nearly 1,000 British and Canadian heavies that gave the city its worst pasting of the war.

ALLIED PLANES DESTROY 915 JAP PLANES AT FORMOSA

Tall columns of smoke are mirrored in the calm water of a southwest Formosa Bay, marking the funeral pyres of Japanese seaplanes destroyed by attacking Grumman Hellcats and Curtiss Helldivers of the U. S. Pacific fleet aircraft carriers. This seaplane base was struck on Oct. 12, when carrier based planes of the Allied fleet swept Formosa destroying 915 Japanese planes.

BRITISH TROOPS CAPTURE KOZANE NEAR SALONIKA

Germans Reported Demolishing Port Facilities Before Withdrawal

Rome, Oct 30 (AP)—British troops have captured Kozane, 58 miles southwest of Salonika, after the first sharp battle with retreating Germans in northern Greece, Allied headquarters announced today.

The Allied communique said casualties were inflicted on the enemy in a spirited fight west of the town, 40 miles from the Yugoslav border, on one of the main escape routes for the Germans.

British units entered the town at 2:45 p.m. yesterday, and were given an enthusiastic welcome by the populace, the communique added.

Advance British patrols maintained contact with the Germans as they fled northward.

Night-fighting Beaufighters of the R.A.F. reported seeking two large explosions and fires in the dock area of Salonika. The Germans were previously reported demolishing the port facilities preparatory to withdrawal from the city.

Attack Rail Traffic

Meanwhile Spitfires attacking rail traffic in the Salonika area destroyed seven locomotives and 10 cars and damaged 11 more locomotives, the war bulletin said.

The German retreat through northern Greece was under constant harassed from Greek Patriot forces, who yesterday captured the coastal town of Platamon in the Mount Olympis area, where more than three years ago valiant British rearguards checked for four days a conquering Nazi army sweeping toward Athens.

Patriot headquarters said Platamon was yielded by the enemy after seven hours of fighting. Greek guerillas were reported to have blown up two railway trains heading north toward Salonika and there were unofficial reports the Patriots were battling in the streets of Salonika.

Allies Make New Gains in Sector Around Bologna

Rome, Oct. 30 —(AP)— British and American troops of the Allied 5th Army have made new gains in the mountains southeast of Bologna, Allied Headquarters announced today.

Today's Allied communique said weather in Italy had improved sufficiently to permit "very active" patrol action, but did not specifically report any Allied gains or losses.

Flying 700 sorties, the M. A. A. F. attacked gun positions, bridges, enemy shipping, troop and traffic concentrations and targets in South Germany. Seven aircraft were lost.

Swift-running streams and wide areas flooded by recent rains kept the opposing armies still bogged down in the mud.

American infantry supported by tanks attacked the Germans north of Marano. Advance elements in a mile gain reached the area of Casalecchio, only two miles from the Bologna-Rimini highway and three miles southwest of Castel San Pietro, a main point on the highway 13 miles southeast of Bologna.

Two Hamlets Occupied.

The hamlets of Bosco and Serta were occupied.

British troops pushed up Highway 67 leading to Forli, 37 miles southeast of Bologna, maintaining contact with German forces withdrawing in order to avoid being isolated.

In the Adriatic sector mud kept British 8th Army troops mired down, but patrols were active in the flooded country beyond the Bevano River, about seven miles southeast of Ravenna.

The Germans were still holding out on high ground north of Predappio, the town south of Forli that includes the hamlet of Verano do Cost, birthplace of Benito Mussolini.

Polish troops who took the town were handicapped because the only road to it was impassable for vehicles. All military supplies were being transported across the Rabbi River on the shoulders of the troops.

She was alone in the store when the two entered, and told police she was so frightened she did not notice whether they escaped in a car or afoot.

$428,884,250 AMOUNT SIGNED IN FIRST WEEK

More Than Nine Millions Ahead of Sixth Loan at Present Time

Ottawa, Oct. 30 —(CP)— Canada's Seventh Victory Loan today moved into the second week of a three-week campaign with $872,000,000 still to be subscribed before the minimum objective of $1,300,000,000 can be reached.

National Headquarters announced last night that $69,470,950 was subscribed Saturday to bring total subscription to $428,884,250, compared to $419,332,550 in the sixth loan.

Individual Canadians, who have so far purchased $197,667,600 in this loan, are still $446,000,000 below the $643,000,000 which they purchased in the sixth loan which had a minimum objective of $100,000,000 less.

On Saturday individual purchasers contributed $37,608,350 towards the sales. Headquarters reported that an analysis of the first week's sales showed that the first three days of this drive were ahead of the first three days of the last campaign. But the following three days showed diminishing returns.

Urged to Convert Bonds.

Today, K. A. Henderson, executive chairman of the National War Finance Committee urged Canadians holding Dominion of Canada bonds callable Oct. 15, 1944 to convert these bonds into Victory Loan bonds. In making his appeal, Mr. Henderson announced that conversion of these bonds for the first week totalled $100,989,400, of which $17,678,800 were conversions by individuals. He said there are still some $87,000,000 of these bonds to be converted of which $65,000,000 are estimated to be in the hands of individuals.

"These conversions are not included in the announced total of $428,884,250 because they do not mean additional money being made available for the war effort," said Mr. Henderson. "We have been receiving reports during the first week of the campaign which indicate there is a belief on the part of some that conversion of their maturing bonds is sufficient.

The exchange of these maturing bonds for the new seventh loan is very important but it is essential that additional bonds be purchased by these holders out of their current income and savings."

From Montreal came the announcement that Yehudi Menuhin, world-famous violinist giving a concert in the metropolis tonight, has signified his intention of converting the entire fee for his recital to victory bonds.

LEYTE ISLAND IS TWO-THIRDS HELD BY MACARTHUR

Stranglehold Is Taken On Samar As Japs Take to Hills or Try To Escape in Barges

By C. YATES McDANIEL
Associated Press War Correspondent

MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Oct. 30 —(AP)— Ten days after he waded ashore, Gen. MacArthur today controlled two-thirds of strategic Leyte Island and had a stranglehold on adjacent Samar as retreating Japanese units took to the hills or sought to escape by barge through waters patrolled by American P. T. Boats.

MacArthur said the liberation of 1,500,000 Filipinos on the two Central Philippine islands was virtually completed.

MacArthur announced in his Monday communique that his men controlled 1,800 square miles on Leyte alone and that the remaining enemy garrisons on Leyte and Samar were isolated and helpless.

They can be "destroyed at will," he said.

(An unconfirmed Tokyo broadcast heard in Melbourne said 40 American transports convoyed by cruisers and destroyers were sighted yesterday heading for Leyte, and added: "The battle for the Philippines is about to begin in earnest.")

American troops, by seizing Carigara town on Carigara Bay, have eliminated the enemy's only effective point of reinforcement for the Leyte Valley, which has been bottled up with guerilla aid.

Resistance Ceases in Valley.

All organized resistance in the valley appeared to have ceased after last-ditch stands last night at Cavite bridge and the Dagami road junction were crushed by American tanks, artillery and bayonets.

Most of Gen. Shiro Makino's 16th division — the once-arrogant perpetrators of the infamous death march on Bataan—were scattering into the hills.

Motor patrol-torpedo boats patrolling Ormoc Bay on the west coast of Leyte attacked barges which the Japanese were believed using in attempts to withdraw from that side of the island.

A considerable enemy stronghold remained on the western side, and it is likely that Japanese troops fleeing the east-central zone before MacArthur's men might try to escape by way of Ormoc. P. T. Boat commanders reported sinking barges loaded with enemy troops.

The Americans held 212 unbroken miles of coastline from Panson Island, off the southeast coast, around to Carigara on the north coast. MacArthur announced that "enemy garrison and outposts in the coastal sectors have been liquidated" in fresh advances.

Fighter pilots operating off Leyte airstrips shot down 18 planes yesterday.

3rd and 7th Fleets Sank Twenty-Four Japanese Craft

1,000-Ton Australian Cruiser Suffers Damage

Pearl Harbor, Oct. 30 — (AP) — The victorious United States Navy has launched new aerial attacks against Manila, Tokyo reported today, after sinking or damaging 58 Japanese warships in one of history's greatest naval triumphs.

The 3rd and 7th Fleets and an Australian squadron sank 24 Japanese craft, including four aircraft carriers and two battleships, in last week's naval action off the Philippines, Admiral Nimitz announced Sunday night.

Thirteen more Japanese craft, including a battleship, were damaged so badly they may have sunk, and 21 other craft, including six battleships, were damaged.

The total — at least 500,000 tons —exceeds what Japan lost in all the four preceding major Pacific War sea battles combined.

American forces spent six warships for a victory by which, Nimitz said, "The Japanese fleet has been decisively defeated and routed," in addition, the 10,000-ton Australian cruiser, Australia, was damaged.

(Tokyo radio today reported, without Allied confirmation, that 200 U. S. carrier planes staged three raids on Manila and Clark Airfield Saturday — just three days after heavy fighting in the naval battle ended. Japanese aircraft, said another Tokyo broadcast, Sunday began attacking an American task force, including four aircraft carriers, in Lamon Bay, on the east coast of Luzon, opposite Manila.)

Overwhelming Victory

Nimitz's communique said "Amplifying reports, although still subject to revision as more information is received, indicate an overwhelming victory . . . the second battle of the Philippine Sea ranks as one of the major sea battles of World War II in the Pacific."

The three related actions, thus classified as the second battle of the Philippine Sea, were fought south of Formosa, off the east coast of Samar and in Surigao Strait off southeastern Leyte, Oct. 23, 24 and 25. Aircraft and submarines scored more successes in hunting down survivors the next two days.

Possibly only two Japanese ships escaped undamaged from the debacle. No modern nation has had its fleet so nearly destroyed in one engagement.

Japan has lost a total of 40 warships sunk or damaged, including 10 carriers and five battleships, in these previous Pacific engagements — Coral Sea, May 18, 1942; Midway, June 6, 1942; Guadalcanal, Nov. 15, 1942, and first battle of the Philippine Sea, June 19, 1944.

Japanese Losses

The Japanese loss in the second Philippine Sea battle, between Oct. 22 and 27:

Sunk—four carriers, two battleships, six heavy cruisers, three light cruisers, three small cruisers or large destroyers, six destroyers.

Probably sunk—one battleship, 3 heavy cruisers, two light cruisers, 7 destroyers.

Damaged—six battleships, four heavy cruisers, one light cruiser, 10 destroyers.

The Japanese lost at least 171 aircraft while American losses were 10 planes in the battle south of Formosa. Nimitz said air losses in other engagements, not completely reported, were "light."

How Nazi Sword and Flag Taken At Cap Griz Nez Get to Dover

By ALAN RANDAL
Canadian Press War Correspondent

With the Canadian Army in France, Oct. 30 (CP)—The people of Elmira, Ont., nearly got the sword and the flag of the commander of the Cap Gris Nes garrison and the German cross-channel guns there.

The sword and flag were part of the booty grabbed by L. Cpl. Ken Rupple of Elmira, Ont., who was with the company of the Highland Light Infantry which captured the commander, Capt. Schilling.

His first thought was to send them home. Then he talked it over with the boys, among them CSM. John McDonald of Vallens, near Galt, Ont., Rfmn. Arnold McKay of Vancouver and Rfmn. George Hancock of Galt, Ont., and it was decided these trophies would best be appreciated by the people of Dover who had so much shelling from the Cap Gris Nez guns. Next thought was how to get them there and in the end the sword and flag were sent by dispatch rider to Boulogne and the British naval commander there sent them across the channel.

Maj. T. R. Prest of Kitchener, Ont., was the commander of the company which captured Schilling and his knick-knacks.

American Sergeant Becomes Hero By Taking Wrong Turn in Road

By HAL BOYLE
(AP War Correspondent)

Somewhere in Germany, Oct. 30 —(AP)—Sgt. Thomas J. Gibbons had no idea he would capture 500 Germans singlehanded.

This military Pied Piper from Elmhurst, N.Y., became one of the heroes of his division—the infantry—by an error.

He simply made a wrong turn in the road.

Gibbons was speeding down a road in a captured German vehicle when he absent-mindedly took a wrong fork. He was jolted rudely out of his day dream by coming face to face with a Tiger tank and 18 German soldiers.

Without noise or fuss the ownership of the vehicle reverted abruptly to the representatives of Hitler and Gibbons became a prisoner.

The Germans dispatched him toward their rear lines. But here his captors ran into difficulty. For they no longer had any rear. They had been encircled.

American artillery pocked the fields around them. Planes strafed them.

Gibbons went to work on an escape plan. He got a German soldier to talk two guards into helping him.

At the first chance the two German soldiers killed two other German guards and Gibbons took charge. He raced across a field leading other prisoners and such German soldiers as were met and overpowered on the way.

Looking back, he noticed that his little army was growing steadily in size—and that the addition in personnel was all German.

"I didn't know whether we were being followed or chased—but I just kept going," he said.

What was happening was that as he passed through the fields little groups of surrounded German soldiers tagged on to his "army," thinking it was the safest way for them to surrender.

When Gibbons turned over his group of prisoners he found the number had increased from the original 22 to just over 500.

"Don't worry, I am doing fine and expect to be out of hospital within the next few days."

That is part of the context of a letter received by the wife and mother of Private Clinton A. Ryan, South Front Street who was reported severely wounded a few days ago.

TRACTOR SLIGHTLY DAMAGED BY FIRE

Believed to have been caused by backfiring through the carburetor as the machine was being warmed for the day's work, a tractor owned by Mr. Murney Reynold's 6th concession Sidney township was badly damaged by fire on Saturday morning. Before the blaze was extinguished by a fire extinguisher rushed from a neighbor's home the fire had melted the carburetor, burned off ignition wires and badly damaged the rubber tires. Only for the fact that there was little gasoline in the tank at the time of the fire, it is thought the machine may have been more seriously damaged.

NO CHARGES LAID AFTER SIDE-SWIPE

Property damage resulted to the sides of two motor cars on Station St. Saturday evening following a sideswiping motor crash. Police investigated and were informed that an automobile driven by William Matthews, Cannifton, was proceeding westerly on the street when the driver's vision became affected as the result of blinding headlights. Mr. Matthews was unable to see momentarily during which time his car sideswiped a parked automobile owned by Everett Stratton of Shannonville. Considerable damage resulted to the fenders, running boards and body of both vehicles. Police investigated and Mr. Matthews assumed all financial responsibility necessary to make repairs. No charges were deemed necessary as the collision was purely accidental.

SET OF TOOLS TAKEN FROM BOATHOUSE

Sneak thieves broke and entered a boathouse on the Belleville harbor off South Front St. some time last week and stole a box of valuable tools. The tools are the property of Lorne Munro, 176½ Front St., local taxi operator. The box containing the tools was secure in the boathouse late last week when Mr. Munro last visited the premises, police were told.

Assurance of a contest for the one seat in the local Hydro Commission which is up for election this year was given this morning with the announcement of Ex-Mayor George A. Reid that he would offer himself as candidate for the Public Utilities Commission. Therefore, with the present commissioner expected to again run for the office, at least a two-way fight is assured.

Previously it has been heard on the street that Ex-Mayor Glencoe Thompson was considering offering himself for the public utilities office and although admitting he had thought of offering himself, Mr. Thompson this morning stated he was not interested in a three cornered fight for the hydro commission.

70th ANNIVERSARY SERVICES HELD AT HOLLOWAY ST.

Rev. Dr. A. S. Orton of Toronto Special Preacher of Day

Holloway Street United Church congregation marked its seventieth anniversary with special services on Sunday in Church and school, the Rev. A. S. Orton, B.D., D.D., S.T.M., of Emmanuel College, Toronto, being the special preacher of the day while the Rev. J. A. Dilts, the minister was in charge. Mr. and Mrs. J. Livesey had with much taste decorated the front of the church. The music was festal in character, the anthems "The Roseate Hues of Early Morn" (Slater) and "How Lovely are the Messengers" (Mendelssohn) being sung with fine effect by the choir under the direction of Mrs. F. Houston, choir leader with Mr. W. Connor at the organ, an organ and piano duo "Thy Birthday is Come" (Bach), played by Mrs. E. Hubbs and Mr. Connor, the chorale "Onward Upward" (Bach) with arrangement for piano and organ by Dr. Fricker, the duet by Mrs. Goldie of Peterborough and Mrs. Houston "I Waited for the Lord" (Mendelssohn) and solos by Mrs. Dorothy Sager Goldie of Peterborough rendered in very fine style, one being "The Lord's Prayer."

Greetings from Rev. Dr. Semple of Bridge Street Church and Rev. Dr. Myers of the Tabernacle were mentioned by the pastor to the large union congregation of the three United Churches in Belleville, as Bridge Street and the Tabernacle congregations worshipped with their sister congregation of Holloway Street at the evening service.

Using the text: "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom, Dr. Orton drew a picture of the Kingdom. Jesus, he said mentions the church specifically only twice. The reference to the "little flock" infers the faithful remnant.

Jesus finds it difficult to use language to speak of the church. That is why He spoke in parable, Dr. Orton said. The kingdoms of the world depend on force and power. If one commits an offence he is brought before the court and tried. Taxes on property are force, he remarked "Try to get by without paying your taxes and see"

"But Jesus acted just the opposite of the world. He says man has to be born again. You see his conscience in history. People marvelled at Him because this great reality of God was making itself manifest in Him. In the eyes of some the coming of the Kingdom may seem a delusion. Some may wonder if it will ever come. The present aspect of the world seems to deny it."

Today, the preacher said Christianity has two facts to face, the attempt of the totalitarian powers to crush. Today the church in the enemy land is in the catacombs, ministers are in concentration camps Christianity has another foe to face in the modern world, the secular reign of today. This foe of secularism makes God irrevelant. Some say they won't believe in the atoning death of Christ, and that they will just be good.

"You can bow God out of the universe with that," Dr. Orton warned. "It seems to be so perfectly natural. That is the insidious foe of secularism.

History Overturns Godless Life.

"But our Lord knew the heart of men. You see today history discrediting and overturning before our very eyes the godless life. It is being condemned into the terrific events of today.

"In spite of all things to the contrary, it is a hard thing to be the devil. He has to appear as an angel of light, because in the nature of things the odds are against him.

"The long-postponed Kingdom of Christ is a challenge to the church. God has reason for not giving the kingdom now. Can you tell the line of demarcation between the church and the world?" Dr. Orton asked. He said God couldn't "bring the Kingdom to the like of us with our worldly ways and feeble effort. Today not only the kingdoms of His world are being judged but also the church. Christ's church would be the church in humility—the first step in the hope of realizing the Kingdom of Heaven out of this church being a penitential church, crying out for His mercy.

A Suffering Unpopular Church.

"The trouble with the world today is, it is trying to get security elsewhere except where it can be found. The church knows it is to be found only in the mercy of God and in the shadow of the Cross.

"It will be a suffering church. It will be an unpopular church.

"This church that will be given the Kingdom of God is the church that rests on the Resurrection of our Lord. The hope of the church is in Christ's Resurrection.

"We need to be far more Christian, we need to put all our hope in our Dying Lord and despite all the appearances against us, this will not fail for it is the Father's good pleasure to give us the Kingdom."

Rev. Dr. Semple Closes Pastorate On Note of Apostolic Benediction

"'The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Spirit be with you all.' There is no greater message in the New Testament, and this is my prayer, my wish for this congregation, this city and district and the good people that live in it," the Rev. James Semple, minister of Bridge Street United Church said in his farewell sermon to his congregation on Sunday morning.

The minister took the New Testament message of St. Paul to the Corinthians as his text. His dissertation based on the theme of the famous benediction combined pulpit eloquence with the simple language of a minister and a man saying adieu to people he loves and by whom he is loved.

It is perhaps more appropriate to say "people" than congregation. For in the crowded church auditorium were representatives of all denominations of the city. Roman Catholics, Anglicans, Presbyterians, Baptists, members of the Greek Church and others mingled with the congregation proper to pay personal tribute by their presence.

Benediction.

Quoting Phillips Brooks, the minister said, "This benediction of the Christian Church never grows old and never becomes monotonous. It is like the sunshine, which rises on us every day of our lives with a fresh beauty, or like our truest friendships which are forever new."

Dividing the trinity of the benediction in its individual parts, he interpreted them in their Divine meaning, blending the whole into an eloquent message of farewell and blessing tinged with the sadness of severance after eleven years of happy association.

In the original tongue the word "grace" meant beauty but as it is here used it means more than anyone has ever put into the word "beauty," Dr. Semple said, "It includes the wonder of the dawn and eve; the lilt of waters; bird songs; majesty of river and mountain; strength of man and loveliness of woman; laughter of little children; love of friend, miracles of chisel, brush and pen and the peace of duty well done."

Indwelling Light.

It means the attractive goodness of God and reveals the splendor of indwelling light that makes Him God. It is life, teaching and death. Grace sings its sweet strain in the words—him that cometh to Me—a lovely treatment of poor sinners.

The Love of God, the minister said, means His love for us. He loved us ere we knew Him and He loves us still to a degree that passes knowledge. Helen Kellar, the blind teacher, discovered the love divine when she was ten years old. In her perplexity she wrote to a friend, Phillips Brooks.

Dr. Semple used several illustrations of his theme, well-known theologians and men of letters. Tennyson, dying, asked for a "New Vision of God." That is what the world needs. That is the secret of all resurrections and revivals. This vision has its heights and depths, but its central fire is a love which suffers everything and loves on, he said.

Fellowship.

Defining the word communion as fellowship, Dr. Semple said the Apostolic Church cherished such a spirit of brotherly love but at Corinth, the congregation became divided into cliques. Perhaps that is the reason the Apostle closed his Second Epistle by invoking the Communion of the Holy Spirit.

The early church had fellowship, common faith, a great hope and there was present in its followers a way of living goodwill and faith and loyalty to one another. They had a sense of the presence of God.

The Gospel is essentially one of goodwill. Note the hatred, bitterness and strife of today. Good will is never more needed. Furthermore it will be needed after the war. The rumblings of bitter feeling between capital and labor and the different political parties already are disturbing and there is need to remember Hugh Price Hughes' statement, "The soul of all improvements is the improvement of the soul."

Dr. Semple related the instance of a great conference where 67 nationalities were represented. All said the Lord's Prayer in his own language," a great demonstration of fellowship in the love of Christ. When we are all entered into the communism of fellowship we are entered into God himself."

In conclusion Dr. Semple thanked his congregation for their demonstrations of love and loyalty throughout his ministry. He paid tribute to several friends who belonged to other churches and denominations and who were present.

Will Ever Remember Church

And Congregation.

"I am grateful that I have been the minister of Bridge Street Church. It and you will hold a special place in my heart until the end of time. I am grateful too, that I lived here and shared in the life of this beautiful city. And I must add that until my successor here has been appointed I shall continue to minister unto you. If I am needed here, I shall come back. I will not say goodbye, nor shall you to me.

"May the Grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the Love of God, and the Communion of the Holy Spirit, be with you all, and I repeat what I said on Friday night, 'I thank my God for every remembrance of you.'"

In the musical part of the service the choir under Miss Leona Riggs, with Mr. Alec Gordon at the organ offered the anthems "This is the Way of the Lord," by Galbraith and "The Lord Gave the Word" by Turner.

Chief Probert Warns Pranksters Against Property Damage

The novelty of Hallowe'en will be no excuse for deliberate infractions of the law and there will be no laxity on the part of the city police department in the enforcement of the law to the last letter when Hallowe'en rolls around on Tuesday night, Chief R. W. Probert warned today.

The city's law-enforcing agencies will be augmented by additional officers sworn in for the occasion, while streets will be patrolled with regularity in an effort to curb any attempts of wanton or wilful destruction of property.

"We all realize that boys and sometimes even young men usually feel that Hallowe'en is their night to 'howl,' so to speak, but the department warns them that no over acts of damage to property to inconvenience citizens will be tolerated," further warned Chief Probert, as he urged parents to bring this particular point home to the children.

"Of course we do not propose to put any drastic damper on Hallowe'en enthusiasm as long as it is kept in the realm of reason and obedience to the law," stated Chief Probert as he placed his approval upon the two Kinsmen Hallowe'en parties being held, one at the "Y" and the other at the Armouries, and suggested that all children could attain all possible fun in attending these programs.

Chamber to Send Out Questionnaire On Gas Question

The Belleville Industrial Commission, at its regular meeting held at the Chamber of Commerce on Friday night last, decided to send out a questionnaire to all the industrial and commercial users of gas in the city in an endeavor to ascertain whether gas was an essential factor in their operations.

It was felt that this would be a direct and effective means of arriving at the truth, in regard to the relative importance of gas, and whether it would be feasible to substitute electricity or oil in the various lines of manufacture or other commercial processes. Questionnaire forms will be mailed out in the very near future.

The Industrial Commissioner reported several promising new business developments for which building permits have been granted and which will result in important new employment in our city.

As several members of the commission had to leave to fill other engagements, the report of the Commissioner on his recent industrial tour of the United States was deferred until a later meeting.

Local Hunters Ready for North

Undaunted by a recognized scarcity of ammunition for their high powered rifles and dependent almost entirely upon a reserve of shells treasured like gold, local nimrods are preparing for their annual trek to the northland with the next weekend expected to see most of the hunting camps established.

Despite the inability to get additional shells, sales of hunting licences in Belleville are quite at par with the level of other years, it is reported, with many hunters already having made application with expectancy of getting away to camp during the latter part of this week. The hunting season commences the first Monday in November, which this year falls on the sixth.

Members of one hunting lodge north of Marmora expect to go in on Friday of this week and are full of optimism in getting their quota. With eleven members in the hunting party, they have never yet failed to come home without their full quota, it was stated.

POLICE BLOTTER

Not a single arrest was necessary in Belleville over the weekend. As a matter of fact the same report was tendered by Provincial Police on Monday.

On Saturday evening police were called to a Benjamin St. address where window peepers were reported to be prowling about. Investitions could disclose no such suspicious characters about.

Complaints regarding boys lighting bon fires in piles of leaves were registered by Pinnacle St. residents on Sunday. The lads were warned to refrain from such dangerous practices in the future.

A bicycle was found abandoned near No. 98 West Dundas St. over the weekend. Residents at that address reported finding the bike left on their property. Police are making an appeal for a safe and sane Hallowe'en. "Lots of good clean fun"—is their suggestion this year.

Restoration Fund For St. Thomas Ch. Inaugurated

Gradual disintegration and drifting of sand beneath the wall foundation of St. Thomas Church, believed to have originated with excavations for installation of furnaces years after the edifice was constructed, is the structure of a financial problem now facing the congregation.

So serious is the situation, that immediate steps have been taken by church officials to effect repairs at the earliest possible moment.

A Restoration Fund has been set up with an efficient committee in charge. Financial requirements for urgently needed repairs and installation of modern facilities are set at $15,000.

Heading the Restoration Fund Committee is Chairman Harold Carruthers. Associated with him are Mrs. Reg. Abrams; Mrs. Bernice Frederickson; Miss Margaret Tilley; R. A. Pringle; J. V. White, Norman Edwards, Mrs. S. E. Morton and Mr. George Wilkinson. Wardens Col. E. A. Geen and Frank Potter are also actively engaged with the Fund work.

Appeal to Congregation

An appeal to the congregation by the Rev. Rural Dean A. Beauchamp Payne through the media of pulpit and brochure has been issued. Payment or contributions may be spread over a period of three years.

To date approximately $3,200 in cash and $2,500 in pledges have been received, and it is hoped this amount will be swelled considerably by the end of this year's activities of the Fund Committee, which, it is expected, will close on Nov. 15. However, the Fund Committee will receive contributions at any and all times.

Interior decoration of the edifice is badly needed, as are modern facilities in various parts of the church. It was felt by the Committee that these works could be completed by the addition of the cost to the actual restoration requirements.

Heating of the church at the time of construction was done through the medium of stoves. Later, when furnaces were installed excavations in the basement were necessary and the passing of years has seen a slow drifting of the sandy soil from beneath the foundation walls to these holes. Repair activities are expected to start early next year.

British Sub Brings In 33 Jap Prisoners

London, Oct. 30—(CP)—The British submarine Truculent returned from Far Eastern patrol recently carrying 91 persons, 33 more than her maximum complement. The passengers were Japanese prisoners, captured when the Truculent attacked a convoy of four supply ships and two submarine chasers.

The Truculent scored two torpedo hits on the largest vessel, then dived — and hit the bottom at 58 feet. Eight depth charges dropped dangerously close to her, but she escaped with her prisoners.

Poles Defeat Huns For Steaks of Cow That's Blown Up

By MAURICE DESJARDINS
Canadian Press War Correspondent

With the Polish troops in Holland, Oct. 30 —(CP)— Maybe this frontline Vignette should be entitled "to bully beef or not to bully": We don't know. But here are the facts of the victorious six-hour battle waged by a Polish Polish armored company for the edible remains of a Dutch cow.

It seems that the cow, which the Germans had been using for mine detecting in these flooded flatlands, made the mistake of stepping on an "s-mine." It fell dead between two dykes in full view of (a) the Poles and (b) the Germans.

Editorialists may say that this is a war between ideologies, but both Poles and Germans decided they needed that cow and what was left of its fresh meat.

The Germans attacked first, but a burst of Polish mortar sent them back.

Then the Poles attacked but were repulsed by moaning Minnies.

For six hours there was a stiff fight for the potential steaks and finally our side won.

When I happened to be in the neighborhood I was treated to a nice medium-done steak. "That was worth fighting for," said the beaming Polish sergeant.

Vote-Heavy Eastern States To Hear Candidates

By R. J. ANDERSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Oct. 30 —(CP)— The hunt for votes in the red-hot United States presidential campaign narrows down this week before election to the northeastern states, where voters are thickest.

President Roosevelt, who returned to Washington Sunday after a seven-state swing through the mid-west, will address a meeting in Boston Saturday night. On the same night, his Republican opponent, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, will speak in New York's Madison Square Garden. Mr. Dewey will precede the President to Boston, appearing there Wednesday.

Thus the race, which all observers agree may be one of the closest in American history, nears the finish line with both candidates campaigning strenuously, aiming at the populous eastern states with the greatest electoral vote. The running mates of both men, John W. Bricker for the Republicans and Senator Harry S. Truman for the Democrats, also centred their last-moment attention on the east, each with a number of speeches scheduled this week.

While foreign affairs kept to the forefront in the campaign last week, as has been the case throughout, both presidential candidates toward week's end bore down heavily on post-war prospects for farmers and businessmen. Mr. Dewey promised firm support for farm prices and Mr. Roosevelt talked of plans to stimulate industry.

In Soldiers Field at Chicago Saturday night, before a crowd estimated at 110,000 with 150,000 unable to gain admission, the largest "gate" of the campaign so far, Mr. Roosevelt laid out a 60,000,000-job program for post-war prosperity in a country freed of wartime controls and dedicated to private enterprise. Earlier in the day, at Syracuse, N.Y., Mr. Dewey declared "three square meals a day" for every American would solve the post-war farm problem.

The War Today—
Port of Antwerp Soon Ready For Flood of Allied Supplies

By DeWITT MACKENZIE
(AP War Analyst)

British and Canadian armies have been doing a workmanlike job during the week-end in ousting the Germans from bitterly-disputed southwest Holland, and the task nears completion.

This means that the great port of Antwerp in neighboring Belgium shortly will be available for the movement of much-needed supplies to support the Allied assault on the Siegfried defences. Thus far the Nazi heavy artillery has been able to block shipping by commanding the estuary of the river Schelde on which Antwerp lies.

There also has been an unusually heavy bombing of the German defences, communications and industries in the Cologne-Arnhem sector —the type of bombardment which precedes big offensives. So on the whole the week-end developments have been in effect reaffirmation that our Allied high command intends to launch a major drive at the earliest feasible moment. A lot, of course, depends on the opening of Antwerp.

Nazis Hang on for Time

The Germans are continuing their tactics of hanging on for time, and these delaying actions — Holland is a prime example — are producing stiff fighting. However, Hitler's effort to stall off going to the dentist is merely piling up pain for him on the inevitable day when he has to give in. Germany is enduring terrific punishment.

Still, there's no sacrifice the Nazi dictator won't demand to save his own skin. Under his directions the German command is rushing work on fresh fortifications west of the Rhine in preparation for the Allied assault. Hitler's idea is to hold this river and so protract the war into next year. That's the most formidable line of defence still facing the western Allies.

Terrible Pressure on Germans

Nevertheless, once the United Nations forces have reached the west bank of the Rhine they will be in position to exert a new and terrible pressure on the Germans even before the crossing is made. This will be by bombardment of vital war industries.

Veritas, British official commentator who has just made a personal survey of the fighting front, in calling attention to this prospect, points out that the Allied artillery will "be within easy range of almost all the important industrial centres of the Ruhr and the Saar. These two regions together represent between 60 and 70 per cent of Germany's heavy industry and over four-fifths of her coke supplies." And he reached this grim conclusion:

"The arrival of the Allied armies on the Rhine will entail the total destruction of a high proportion of Germany's heavy industry, upon which all her war production ultimately depends. In addition, Silesia and the great industrial centres of Czechoslovakia are now indirectly threatened by the Russian offensive."

Huns Say British Attack Dunkerque

London, Oct. 30 (C.P. Reuter) — British forces opened an attack on Dunkerque yesterday, the German D.N.B. agency reported today.

The agency said: "For the second time since the beginning of the siege of Dunkerque, the British launched a strong attack on the fortress after a thorough artillery preparation and with the support of many tanks and aircraft.

"The enemy forced a breach in the eastern approaches to Dunkerque, but this breach has been sealed off for the time being.

"All other attacks broke down under the German fire."

A 24-hour truce at Dunkerque during which some 20,000 civilians were evacuated into the Allied lines, ended October 6th.

RUSSIANS BLOCK LAST ESCAPE ROUTE FOR NAZIS

Capture Csap in Northeastern Hungary After Day of Street Fighting

London, Oct. 30 — (CP) — The last rail escape route for Germans in northeastern Hungary was blocked by the Russians today with capture of Csap (Cop) on the upper Tisza River, while to the North Berlin reported further gains in the liquidation of an estimated 100,000 Germans pinned against the Baltic Sea.

Csap, junction of four rail lines at the southwestern edge of liberated Ruthenia, was occupied yesterday by troops of Gen. Ivan Petrov's 4th Ukraine Army which fought their way 550 miles across mountainous Eastern Czechoslovakia, Moscow announced.

A midnight bulletin said the Russians seized the town after a day of wild street-fighting during which hundreds of Germans were killed.

A Berlin announcement said Soviet troops attacking in Western Latvia had penetrated to the Priekule area 20 miles southeast of the Baltic port of Leipaja, and had captured Auce, communications centre 70 miles east of Leipaja.

The Moscow communique, one of the briefest in weeks, did not confirm Berlin reports on the Latvia offensive, nor did it mention the East Prussian front, where heavy fighting has been raging along the Kaunas-Konigsberg highway.

Attacks Growing Weaker.

(Berlin said Soviet attacks against thick German defences southwest of Ebenrode and south of Gumbinnen, important highway points, were growing weaker.)

The Moscow communique asserted that fighting only of local importance occurred along most of the vast battlefields scattered from the Arctic to the Balkans.

Meanwhile, it appeared Petrov's forces and those of the 2nd Ukraine Army of Marshal Rodion Y. Malinovsky were strenuously attempting to maintain the momentum of their attacks in northeastern Hungary. They were encountering stubborn enemy resistance, which at least temporarily checked hopes of an early occupation of Budapest and kept a Slovak patriot resistance force isolated from land support in the mountains about 100 miles north of the Magyar capital.

Yugoslav Partisans At Zagreb Outskirts

London, Oct. 30—(CP)—Yugoslav Partisan troops have reached the outskirts of Zagreb, Yugoslavia's second city and capital of Croatia, Marshal Tito announced today in a communique.

The broadcast communique, which said most of Savonia in northern Yugoslavia had been cleared of the enemy, reported the capture of Visegrad, 40 miles east of Sarajevo.

Born In Another Age

Death of Princess Beatrice, of Britain, youngest and last surviving child of Queen Victoria, removes a link with the great past and reveals in what a changing world her life was cast. When her mother came to the throne of Britain, it was but twenty-two years after Waterloo. When the Princess Beatrice was born much of modern history yet remained to develop. Germany was yet to begin her expansionist program with the war with Austria and Denmark in the sixties of the nineteenth century. She was yet to wage the war against France in 1870 and 1871. There came many inventions which have modernized life in that long life of 87 years, there have been the vast industrial developments, the broadening of the boundaries of knowledge in science, the opening up of moden relations with many parts of the world, the great developments in shipping, the wireless invention, the coming of the airplane for use in peace and for war, and there have been the two greatest wars in history fought in the last thirty years of her life.

Late Archbishop of Canterbury

The Church of England and the world have lost one of the great religious and social leaders of his time in the death of the Most Rev. and Rt. Hon. William Temple, Archbishop of Canterbury. The late Primate of All England was deeply concerned in a practical and ideal way with the problems of this age. He was one who has held the church in the highest position in the eyes of men in its vital relationship to human life. It was natural that there would be disagreement with some of the views of so bold and outspoken a leader but the fact remains that he saw the need of facing these problems.

He joined in one man great scholastic gifts with the gifts of a practical and inspired administrator.

One of his statements was "Your duty to God makes it necessary for you to forget Him for the greater part of the day, while you are performing those duties that He has given you to do. People say that conduct is all-important and that worship helps it. That is true as far as it goes, but it would be truer to say that worship is all-important and conduct tests it."

In Assisi

Canadian soldiers among the Allied troops who are redeeming Italy from the Germans have been privileged to come upon countless places of deepest interest in that historic land, known not only in Italy but throughout the world. One of the loveliest spots is Assisi where was born one of the most remarkable figures in history, St. Francis. Assisi is a small town of 5,353 persons, according to the 1921 census, it rests on the spur of Monte Subasio and has a beautiful view of the River Tiber as it winds down to the sea past the city of Rome.

Assisi has many fine ecclesiastical buildings, the Franciscan monastery in the finest Gothic style of architecture with paintings over the high altar of the lower church by Giotto, illustrating the vows of the Franciscan order founded by St. Francis while there are frescoes in the upper church by the same great artist Giotto and his pupils, illustrating the life of Saint Francis and scenes from the Old and New Testaments. Here is the church of St. Chiara, founded by St. Clare, who established the order of Poor (There are the cathedral, a medieval castle and two miles away in the Ravine a hermitage of Della Carceri (of the Prisons) built partly out of solid rock and given to Francis by the Benedictines. In the large pilgrimage church is the original oratory of the saint.

St. Francis impressed the world of his day and has always intrigued the minds of man, for he was a man of many-sided richness, of great piety and tenderness, whose originality and poetic spirit are revealed in countless ancedotes. Every association suggests he was a man of the most lovable nature. Of him it has been said that possibly no one has so earnestly set out to imitate and live out the life of Christ as this mystic. He was gentle to others, strict in self-denial, but firm in enforcing the rule of constant joyousness in nature. He loved nature so deeply he spoke of its manifestations as "Brother Sun," "Sister Moon," and "Brother Wind." His hymns have never lost their power and are sung today in the churches. He is described as a mystic irradiated with the love of God and endowed to an extreme degree with the spirit of prayer.

Red or White?

The old argument about whether a hunter should wear a red or white outfit in self-defence against other impetuous nimrods will be tackled scientifically according to officials of the Manitoba Department of Mines and Natural Resources, says The Winnipeg Tribune.

Color photographs of both red and white garbs against the same backgrounds under similar light conditions will be taken to determine which color offers the most safety. This is all to the good—there is nothing like practical scientific tests to settle arguments.

It should be borne in mind, however, that while the red habille might be the last word in a certain spot, half a mile farther on it would blend neatly with the landscape. The same might be said of the white finery.

The question then arises, would it not be possible to make the outfits out of material consisting of eight-inch red and white checkerboard? In such a costume hunters should be safe against a variety of backgrounds. Of course, it might be objected that hunters roaming around so garbed would cause game to retreat even farther north. Or someone might get the idea of making a pair of slacks out of the material with unforeseen results.

Perhaps a better solution would be a white outfit lined with red which could be reversed to meet the needs of the changing locale. Provision could be made for a small steam-whistle to be affixed to the cap which could be blown while the hunter was making his chameleon change.

Logistics

The word "logistics" has bothered a good many, as it has come to be used frequently, comments The Edmonton Journal. At one time it was taken to mean only "that branch of the military art which embraces the details of transport and supply," this being the definition in a fairly recent dictionary. But it is now being applied to all war planning, and in his speech recently Mr. Roosevelt extended it further when he said: "We are even now organizing the logistics of the peace just as Marshall, King, Arnold, MacArthur, Eisenhower are organizing the logistics of this war."

Church Funerals

Bishop Carpenter, Alabama) refused to buy a burial policy from an insurance salesman when he found it provided only for a funeral from a home or the funeral home, saying, "I have strong convictions on having church funerals," says The Canadian Churchman. The salesman passed the obpection to his superiors—result that company has changed the policy to provide for "funeral from church, home or funeral home."

As Conquerors

(New York Herald Tribune)

Germany is the enemy; Americans are fighting on her soil, against her people in arms and against a wily regime which will again, as in the past, use the unarmed as weapons. Treat the Germans justly, "in conformity with the civilized standards as exemplified by our governments," as General Eisenhower said. But "we go in as conquerors"—for Germany would have it so.

There is but one virtue—the eternal sacrifice of self.—George Sand.

SELF-PITY

The sorriest fellow that ever I've known
Insisted the rain fell on him, all alone.

He pitied himself when he got out of bed.
"I never get sleep enough," often he said.

"When they passed out Good Luck I got never a bit.
I'm first on the job and the lost one to quit.

"The flowers in the garden next door are all fine,
But the bugs and the cut worms raise havoc with mine.

"My breath isn't good, but there's no standing still.
I'm unlucky and I can't afford to be ill.

"And what's worse in my trouble, whatever it be,
I've only myself to be sorry for me."

IF I WERE TO HAVE A BABY

Shall we consider the obvious wisecracks as made? With that out of the way we may get down to brass tacks.

I'm as great a coward as one can be without incurring popular obloquy. In my early professional life, believe it or not, I felt sorry for patients who had to submit to a major operation, often wondered how, even without anaesthesia such as is now generally employed, they could face the experience so bravely. But luckily my own turn came in due course, acute gangrenous appendicitis, and after five hours of anxiety or distress (not pain), instead of being fearful I was greatly relieved when the doctor decided on an immediate operation. The experience taught me a good deal I could never have learned objectively. I have never wasted much sympathy on such patients since. Any one who undergoes such an operation must thank his lucky stars for American surgery, and especially any one who knows what may happen without it.

I've been around— intern in a large city hospital, country practitioner, city practitioner, hospital staff service, accoucheur at birth of my own children, kibitzer in absentia at the birth of my grandchildren, so I'm entitled to have an opinion about childbirth.

If I were to have a baby, I'd prefer my own home for the event to any hospital. That is, provided I had a home fit to have a baby in. And provided I could afford the attendance of a trained nurse. And provided my doctor and nurse were available. And provided I could take time out to lie abed for three or four days. And provided—

Come to tot up all the incidentals it is not so remarkable that the Joneses and their friends or neighbors are so easily persuaded to go to the hospital to have their babies. And of course the obstetrician has things much easier in the hospital—indeed can materially shorten his working time, thanks to the nurses and interns, and the neat rule excluding the expectant father from the delivery room.

There is one factor of vital importance which we have not considered here at all. That is the factor of safety from septicemia, puerperal or childbed fever, infection, blood poisoning. I believe I'd be much safer having my baby at home than I would in any hospital—provided I had a home fit to have a baby in, a doctor and a trained nurse in attendance, and time to lie abed for three or four days.

If I seem to want but little time out to have a baby, that is not because I'm so old-fashioned, but because I am convinced, by my own professional observation and experience and by the newer concepts of physicians, surgeons and obstetricians, that one gets along better and gets back in the game earlier if one lies abed only three or four days than if one lies abed two or three times as long.

QUESTIONS and ANSWERS

Hernia Cured

I wish to thank you for recommending Dr. —— as skilled in the ambulant (injection) treatment. He has done wonders in the cure of my hernia of long standing and apparently incurable. (O.A.E.)

Answer—Thank you. Your doctor is one of the most successful practitioners of ambulant treatment, not only for hernia but also for hemorrhoids and varicose veins. There is an art about such treatment that too many five-thumbed "surgeons" just can't savvy. They try it, botch it, and conclude the method is "no good."

Iodine for Cold Feet

As soon as the weather gets the least bit cold I begin to have cold feet. I believe you suggested that people troubled with cold feet need iodine. (Mrs. B. W.)

Answer—Many do. Send stamped self addressed envelope, ask for "Instructions for Taking an Iodin Ration." I say ask for it, do not send a clipping.

Expectancy and Reducing

Please send your pamphlets "How to Lose Weight" and "Preparing for Maternity." (Mrs. K. P.)

Answer—No, Ma'am. It would be extremely unwise for a pregnant woman to attempt reduction, except under supervision of her physician. I'll send the booklet "Preparing for Maternity" on request to any one who sends ten cents and stamped self addressed envelope. I'll send the pamphlet "How to Lose Weight" to any one over eighteen who asks for it and encloses self addressed envelope. If an expectant mother asks for the latter she must assure me it is not for herself.

Full Employment—The Canadian Goal for the Post-War Years—

Into what sort of economic picture will Canada's veterans be asked to fit when the war is ended? Will there be jobs? Has Parliament taken any steps looking to increased employment? These are questions to which every service man and woman and their relatives want the answer. The people of Canada have said that the fighting men and women must come home to a better Canada, one in which Canadians must have an opportunity to do a full day's work and to receive a full pay envelope. Many measures have been passed by Parliament, representing the people, to help attain this objective.

RECONSTRUCTION DEPARTMENT

To unify steps taken to provide employment, an Act has been passed, creating a new Department of Reconstruction in Canada. It will be one of the duties of this Department to bring about constructive steps which will mean employment. Since March, 1942, a Parliamentary Committee on Reconstruction has been sitting, hearing evidence of experts as to measures which may be taken to help make Canada prosperous.

TRANSITION PERIOD

Canada has taken steps to provide employment, should there be a slowing down in industry while it is changing from the production of wartime goods to those things needed for the peace. A survey of necessary public works has been made not only by the Dominion, but also by the provinces and the municipalities. These works, not an unemployment program, but needed, constructive projects, will provide employment in this period.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

This Act has been passed and makes $275,000,000 available at low interest rates for the building and repair of houses. It will provide a considerable amount of employment.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK

An industrial development bank is provided for under a new Act of Parliament as a subsidiary of the Bank of Canada. This bank is to extend loans to develop sound business enterprises in cases where the necessary financing cannot be arranged with chartered banks. It will have a capital of $25,000,000. New industries, financed in this way, will add to the national economy.

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT

This Act provides for a corporation with a capital of $5,000,000 and a credit surplus of $5,000,000 to permit Canadian exporters to insure themselves against the risk of loss in export trade. It also provides assistance to foreign governments in the purchase of Canadian produced goods. This is a measure to help keep Canadian export trade at a high level.

AGRICULTURAL PRICES

At its last session Parliament passed an Act designed to establish a floor price for all agricultural products during the transition from war to peace. A three-man Board is given power to handle and dispose of products and a fund of $200,000,000 is provided. It will prevent a slump in agriculture in the immediate post-war years.

FISHERIES PRICES

Like the Act putting a floor price under agricultural products, an Act has been passed to stabilize the price of fishery products during the transition from war to peace and $25,000,000 has been provided for this.

TO AID BUSINESS

To give full employment, business must be profitable, and several amendments have been made to the Excess Profits Tax Act and the Income War Tax Act to assist business to plan and finance changes in the post-war period.

BANK LOAN

The Bank Act has been amended to reduce the interest rate on loans from 7 per cent to 6 per cent and to provide intermediate and short-term credits to farmers.

French - Speaking Albertan on Good Terms With Town and Country Folk in Invasion Area

By MARGARET ECKER
(C.P. War Correspondent)

With a Canadian Medical Unit in France (CP) — Fred Lavoie of Camrose, Alta., seemed just another Canadian private soldier doing a job over in France. Fred's work was in the kitchen of a nurses' mess at a Canadian General Hospital.

It was a pretty exasperating job sometimes, keeping contented those nurses who were working their heads off, but Fred managed to stay cheerful. The short, wiry Albertan would admit the job was humdrum for a man with a French-Canadian imagination, but then he might let you in on the secret of his colorful off-duty life.

Because Fred is one of those Canadian soldiers who have been real ambassadors of goodwill among the French people, he's one of those men who have made Canadians the favorite Allied soldiers among the country folk of France.

Fred speaks French and English equally well, and like most French-Canadians, he's keenly interested in the life of the country his forefathers left centuries ago. So, when off duty he ranges the countryside, visits farm houses, talks to people in the bistros of small French towns, sits silently in churches built before William the Conqueror went to England.

He doesn't go on these trips empty handed, and in his pockets are things from his parcels from home, a package of tea, a tin of sardines and he's welcome everywhere he goes.

When the hospital unit he is with was near Bayeux, Fred introduced me to the cathedral there. He showed me the reproduction of the Bayeux tapestry and as he talked he proved he knew more about the history of Normandy than even some of the people.

Talked as Friends

Later in our army boots we clattered up a narrow cobbled street to a small cafe where the whole family rushed forward to greet Lavoie who already had become a friend. And so until dusk came, they talked to us as friends. They reminded us that in the 17th, century it was people of St. Malo and Bayeux who had gone to Canada, and they laughed at Lavoie's slang because it was the same as their own.

Lavoie knew the country folk as well as the townfolk, and as he passed the grey walled farms, children would call to him, and the farmer would stop his horses to speak to the Canadian soldier who seemed, as they put it, like one of their own people.

With him as our sponsor we often visited these houses in the evening and saw at close quarters the fascinating interior which we could only glimpse from the road as we passed. The houses are large but most of them have only four rooms, a large kitchen-dining room, living room and a bedroom downstairs and two bedrooms upstairs.

The countryfolk guard their privacy jealously but as Lavoie's friends, the women of one house, a thin peasant woman in grey cotton dress and wooden shoes, invited us into the kitchen-living room. The room was the sort interior decorators in Canada try to copy in cottage type houses. The floor was of red tile, the table, the benches, the cupboards were rough hewn of wood scrubbed until it gleamed like satin.

On a Dutch dresser rows of copper kettles shone and a copper-trimmed grandfather clock would have brought a fortune in Canada. The housewife showed us a small iron stove but admitted she still cooked at the huge fireplace, in which she could have stood upright.

WHAT PRICE SAVINGS?

The hopes and dreams of a lifetime, gone up in smoke! Wiped out in a few minutes before their very eyes! And it's too late to start over!

That little house was the symbol of their dreams, the result of years of saving. Then came 1940 and the blitz. They were lucky, then. Others lost, but their home came through the merciless pounding of those terror-stricken months. They're not so lucky now. Their dream has been smashed by a robomb.

MAYBE you're dreaming, too? Perhaps there's a growing balance in the bank, earmarked for a little home of your own. But, while you're waiting and working, are your dollars working, too? Are they working to put an end to a tyranny that is robbing millions of their dreams, their hopes, their lives?

WEDDINGS

BOARD—INSLEY

St. Andrew's Church at high noon on Saturday last, was the scene of a charming Autumn wedding when Jean Barbara Insley, formerly of Picton, became the bride of George Edward Board, of Brockville. Rev. J. G. Hornsby, minister of the church officiated.

The church was most tastefully decorated with Autumn foliage, bittersweet and ferns; baskets of 'mums graced the altar rail.

To the strains of the Wedding March from Lohengrin, played by Mrs. John W. Deacon, the bride entered the church on the arm of Mr. C. B. Morgan, a close friend of the family.

The bride wore a very lovely imported gown, combining aquamarine and black in the new two-tone effect. The short sleeve featured the new petal fullness. Her French room hat of velvet, carried out the same beautiful color scheme, and the rose nestling in its folds accented the corsage of roses and bouvardia.

Mrs. Walter Harden, the bride's sister, was matron of honor, and was gowned in a very striking model of Risque Rose, vividly accented by black. The bodice with its long full sleeves was beautifully beaded in seed pearls and crystals. The complement to the ensemble was the waist corsage of Sweetheart roses and the individuality of her matching hat.

Mr. Garn E. Dobbs, was groomsman. Mr. Walter Harden and Mr. C. D. Tice were the ushers.

Following the signing of the register, the assembled guests repaired to the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Morgan, 240 Bridge Street East, where a reception to the bride and groom was held. Mrs. Morgan with Mrs. Walter Harden, received the guests, the former being gowned in soft dove grey with marquisite trimming, matching hat, and wore an orchid corsage. Little Dianne Martin opened the door for the guests.

Mrs. Allen Schryver, and Mrs. J. E. Marsh poured, while Mrs. Franklin Martin, Mrs. Jack Cook, and Miss Joan Morgan assisted.

The home was very beautifully arranged. The table was adorned with Viennese lace cloth accentuated with tall white tapers with a centre bouquet of Johanna Hill roses and mauve and white baby 'mums. The rooms were a profusion of yellow and bronze 'mums, which added to the beauty of the whole arrangement.

Immediately following the reception, the bride and groom left for a motor trip through the Adirondacks and on their return will reside in Belleville, where Mr. Board is an inspector of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board. The bride's going away ensemble was a smart black crepe dress with a coat of aquamarine wool with Persian Lamb trim in Tuxedo style. Her accessories were black. She wore a corsage of roses.

Out of town guests were present from Picton, Brockville, and Ottawa.

ELEY—JEFFREY

Holloway Street Church was the scene of a pretty October wedding, on Saturday, the 14th., when Julia Ellen Jeffrey of Belleville, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Jeffrey, Bancroft, became the bride of Alfred David Eley, son of Mrs. Eley, of Mountain View, and the late Mr. George Eley. The Rev. J. A. Dilts solemnized the wedding ceremony.

Ferns and cut flowers formed the floral background for the happy occasion. Mr. William Connor presided at the console of the organ, and Mrs. Fred Houston delightfully rendered "I Love Thee".

Given in marriage by Mr. William Bush, of Aikens, the bride was wearing an exquisite gown of white sheer, appliqued with satin lovers' knots. It was fashioned with sheath-tight bodice from which fell a full sweeping skirt. The neckline was made in sweetheart mode and the long tight fitting sleeves ended in points over the wrists. Her cape length veil of soft illusion fell in dainty folds about her head from a halo of orange blossoms. She carried an arm bouquet of American Beauty roses and maidenhair fern.

Miss Jean Holden, of West Huntingdon, as bridesmaid, was wearing a delightful frock of turquoise wool crepe. Blush-pink rosebuds nestled softly in her hair. She carried an arm bouquet of pink roses and fern.

Mr. Edward Eley, of Mountain View, attended his brother as groomsman.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Gray, Jr., 135 Dundas Street East. The groom's mother chose for the occasion an attractive flowered silk jersey ensemble accented with green accessories and corsage of American Beauty roses.

On the wedding trip to Niagara Falls, the bride selected a Nigger brown wool crepe dress, tweed coat, and accessories in the same shade to her dress.

The bride's gift to the groom was a wrist watch and the groom's gift to the bride was a chest of silverware. Gifts to the bridesmaid was a gold locket; to the groomsman, a gold signet ring; to the soloist, earrings, and to the organist a tie pin.

Mr. and Mrs. Eley will take up residence at Mountain View.

FOX—CHAPMAN

A quiet Autumn wedding took place at St. Paul's Anglican Rectory, Roslin, on Saturday, October 28th., at two p.m., when Hazel Maude Catherine, younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Chapman, of Roslin, became the bride of Reginald Newton Fox, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Fox, of Shannonville. The Rev. F. C. Beazer officiated.

The bride was attired in a becoming street-length dress of Queen's blue crepe with navy accessories, and corsage of American Beauty roses. She wore a gold locket, gift of the groom.

Miss Evelyn Fox, sister of the groom, was bridesmaid, wearing a street length dress of dusky rose crepe with matching hat, black accessories and a corsage of Talisman roses.

Mr. Norman Boldrick, of Plainfield, was best man. The groom's gift to the bridesmaid was a compact, and to the best man a leather billfold.

Following the ceremony, the bridal party dined at Dickens' Tea Room, Belleville. Later the happy couple left amid showers of confetti and good wishes for a wedding trip to Toronto and points west. The bride donned a navy blue tailored suit with matching accessories. On their return they will reside at the groom's home near Shannonville.

ROSS—McKEE

An impressive floral arrangement of chrysanthemums in riotous Autumn bloom formed a lovely setting for an early evening wedding on Saturday, October 28th., at seven o'clock in Wellington United Church. It was the occasion of the marriage between Laura Anneta McKee, daughter of Mrs. McKee of Wellington, and the late Mr. J. A. (Bert) McKee, and Mr. Allan Beauchamp Ross, of Belleville, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Ross, of Cowansville, Quebec. The Rev. J. P. Lane was the officiating clergyman.

Miss Velma Vanderwater, of Wellington, played soft wedding music during the ceremony and at the signing of the register. Mrs. D. G. Rowntree, Toronto, was guest soloist.

The bride entered the church on the arm of her uncle, Mr. D. A. Tolmie, of Toronto, to the strains of the Bridal Chorus from Lohengrin. She was charming in her wedding gown of white silk jersey and lace. She wore her mother's wedding veil of misty white tulle which was caught to her hair with an elegant coronet headdress. She carried an arm bouquet of American Beauty roses.

Mrs. R. C. Ketcheson, of Belleville, as matron of honor, chose a Madonna blue crepe frock and the bridesmaid, Miss Leila Robinson, cousin of the bride, from Toronto, selected Winterberry red crepe. Both wore dainty Juliet caps in matching shades to their dresses and misted with ostrich plumes and shoulder length veils. They carried arm bouquet of Johanna Hill roses.

Mr. W. E. Ross, Detroit, Michigan, attended his brother as groomsman. The ushers were Mr. Reg. McKee, brother of the bride, of Wellington, and Mr. Ralph Ketcheson, of Belleville.

Bronze 'mums and potted foliages decorated the bride's home at Wellington for the occasion of the reception following the ceremony. The mother of the bride was wearing a Hacienda purple crepe ensemble complemented with hat in matching hue and corsage of Talisman roses. Acting as serviteurs were Misses Carmen Dillon, Thelma Gordon, Mary Rutherford, Marjorie Bonter, Mrs. Grace Edgar and Mrs. Margaret Orr.

The bride's travelling costume was a fuchsia crepe dress and hat to match, black seal coat with grey Bombay lamb collar and black accessories.

Mr. and Mrs. Ross will reside in Belleville.

WOMEN'S MISSION AT ST. MICHAEL'S IS CONCLUDED

Franciscan Fathers End Week's Mission for Women, Open Mission for Men

The solemn conclusion of the Women's Mission, conducted by the Franciscan Fathers of New York took place on Sunday afternoon at three-thirty o'clock in St. Michael's Church. The church was packed to capacity for the inspiring ceremony. The evidence of great faith and Christian spirit was manifest. The Missionary Fathers expressed their profound admiration for the solid devotion and the sincere fervor of the women of St. Michael's parish. They reminded the large congregation that their presence and prayers contributed greatly and immeasurably to the moral and religious consciousness of the city of Belleville. The Franciscan Fathers exhorted the women to perseverance in their religious duties and spiritual practices, reminding them that the virtues of Christian spirit of a nation depends upon the christianity of its women. This great religious scene was climaxed by the renewal of the Baptismal Vows. The congregation pledged its love and loyalty, its devotion and duty to Jesus Christ as the Lord and Saviour of the world. Solemn Benediction of the most Blessed Sacrament terminated this great spiritual movement and ended the women's mission with prayers for peace and victory and the welfare of our armed forces.

The men's mission opened last night at seven thirty o'clock and will continue throughout the week at the same hour. The mission masses are at 5.45 and seven o'clock each morning. The parish mass is at eight o'clock.

Decatur, Ill., Oct. 30 — (AP)—A private stationed in Wyoming spotted a home town railway company's tank cars and got an idea. Pte. Robert Fisher chalked messages on the cars. Red Cross Report for September

The regular monthly meeting of the executive of the Belleville Branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society was held on Oct. 26 with the president, Mr. M. P. Duff in the chair.

The treasurer, Mr. Zeran, reported for September:

Receipts $232.50.

Bills $74.14.

Several communications were dealt with.

Mrs. Kinnear and Mrs. Ketcheson were appointed a committee on awards, to look into the question of recommending any Belleville Branch persons for long service awards granted at the Ontario Division Annual Meeting.

Mr. Ackerman was asked to arrange with Mr. Payne and the Y. W. C. A. Service Rest Room for possible night accommodation for war brides who are not met by their relatives at the station on their arrival.

The request for the use of the Red Cross Rooms for other than Red Cross purposes was refused.

Miss Lynch reported having received a reply from Hungary for a local civilian and a reply from Belgium to a message sent in October, 1943.

The secretary was instructed to write a letter of appreciation for his services to the Red Cross and Dr. Semple who is leaving the city.

The report of the Women's War Work Committee follows:

Report for September, 1944, of the Women's War Work Committee

9 cartons of Red Cross Goods were shipped to Headquarters in Toronto during September consisting of 882 articles. There were 130 for the army and airforce, 60 seamen's comforts, all hand knit. Besides there were 35 articles for British Civilian Relief, 15 for the Women's Auxiliary, 12 for Liaison, 32 quilts, 4400 hospital and 198 for British Civilian Relief in sewn articles.

We have new requests for 700 of knitted and sewn articles. This means much work and the Branch is hoping that our groups in the country will be able to help us out now that the summer work on the farms is about done. We are missing their help very much. This applies also to some city groups.

Instructions from Toronto are most emphatic that the work must not slacken because the Allies are in sight of conquest. So many of the occupied countries are so devastated.

Respectfully submitted,
Lillian E. Mikel,
Chairman, Women's War Work Committee, Belleville Branch.

CHINESE CRISIS SEEN BY RECALL OF GEN. STILWELL

Decisions It Appears Must be Made in Chunking in Next Few Weeks

By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER
Associated Press Staff Writer

Washington, Oct. 30 — (AP) — China has been plunged headlong into a new military and political crisis by the recall of Gen. Stilwell to Washington, and information reaching here indicates that decisions which must be made in Chungking in the next three to four weeks may well determine the fate of the Chinese war effort from now on.

Among American officials there is hope, but little real confidence, that Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek will be able to put his military and political affairs in order without further delay.

High strategy of the war against Japan hangs on the outcome. But this crisis has been months in the making, with a virtual breakdown in China always possible.

Stilwell's recall was announced at the White House Saturday. The War Department said he would get an important new assignment. The action is linked directly with the thus far unsuccessful American efforts for a complete shakeup of the Chinese High Command and subsequent reorganization of the Chinese armies.

Keep Free China Functioning.

Allied strategy has called for a drive across the Pacific, via the Philippines, to the China coast and a drive from interior China to the same coastal point.

Considerable effort has been made to keep free China functioning effectively against Japan.

Evidence of the despair now overtaking this effort was seen in a dispatch from New Delhi, India, by Associated Press Correspondent Preston Grover. Writing through Allied censorship, Grover reported last night that Stilwell's withdrawal appears "to have pulled the props from under American activity in this area."

Grover pointed out that it had been Stilwell's dual task to obtain for China a maximum amount of supplies from the outside and to get the Chinese to use them in the most effective manner.

The situation within China will come to a head in mid-November when the Central Executive Committee of the Kuomintang is scheduled to meet. As controlling agent of China's one party, the committee is the most powerful political organ in the country.

The three great problems which, in the opinion of authorities here, confront President Chiang and the Central Executive Committee are these:

1. Reorganization of the army at the top, for immediate improvement in the conduct of the war.

2. Establishment of relations between Chiang and the communist elements in North China. This would help current fighting in South China little but would be an enormous gain for the future in which Russia may enter the fight against Japan.

3. Broadening the base of the government under Chiang to give it closer contacts with the people, regarded here as a critical need.

WOMEN OF FRANCE TO AID IN FIGHT AGAINST GERMANY

New Auxiliary Service Includes Many Who Suffered as Members of Resistance Movement

By MARGARET ECKER
(C.P. War Correspondent)

Paris (CP) — When women of France don uniforms—which is contrary to a French woman's outlook on life, they do it because they have suffered, because they know what war is.

The Auxiliary Forces of the French Volunteers formed recently is a group of women in austere navy blue uniforms who have volunteered for work as stenographers, secretaries, nurses, social service workers.

Many of the volunteers, who retain the French women's charm of long hair, exotic makeup, bare legs and high heeled shoes even in uniform, have volunteered to go to Germany to help in the repatriation of 3,000,000 French people there.

"They call themselves "hard boiled eggs." They are women who suffered for their work in the resistance movement and they look down their noses a bit at new recruits who do not know what torture, mental and physical is. After their hair raising adventures of the past four years they find liberation a bit dull, and beg to go to Germany to fight.

In the headquarters of the group we met Madame Olga, who must still retain what is known in France as her "resistance name".

"Here are three girls who represent the type of volunteer we have," she said. Josette and Colette were slim, young brunettes, the other was Andree, taller and blonde.

With the help of an interpreter, this is their story—an average story, according to Mme. Olga.

In Resistance Movement

Josette and Colette had been working as stenographers in the Paris bureau of the resistance movement. Their job was typing orders to go out to underground workers. Naturally, this mean they had a lot of information about the people who dared resist the Nazis. On May 11 the bureau was raided by the Milice (French collaborationists) and the girls dragged off to a house on the left bank of the Seine.

The Milice took these two young girls and flung them into a windowless cellar. At intervals they appeared in the dark dungeon with strong lights and pounded the girls with questions.

"Of course we didn't reply," said Josette. Then, in the middle of the night, the two girls along with four others were dragged up from their cells to a room flooded with light. Their clothes were stripped from them, while their captors taunted them vulgarly.

"Women talk faster and have less defence when they are naked," one Milice taunted. Electric wires were attached to their fingers and their toes, their mouths were gagged and electric currents were forced thru' the wires so violent that the girls were thrown to the ground and paralyzed temporarily.

When they fell to the ground they were beaten by half drunk men. When one man was so drunk he couldn't stand, another replaced him. When the girls were unconscious with fatigue they were thrown back into the cellar where fifty other girls were waiting for the same treatment. For 26 days this nightmare persisted and still the girls had not talked.

Finally from the house in Paris they were taken to the prison Petit Rouquette where nuns were allowed to visit and comfort them, until on August 17 Paris and the prisoners were freed.

Andree's story was much the same. She had worked as a stenographer for the resistance in Lyons until she was seized and sent to the same house in Paris as the other girls.

POLAND HONORS BELGIAN GIRLS.

Roulers, Belgium (CP) — Simone and Elizabeth Brugge of Roulers, near Passchendaele, have been awarded the Polish Military Cross by General Maczek, commander of the Polish Armored Division in Western Europe.

When the Allies were outside Roulers the girls, aged 18 and 16, crept through the German lines to the Polish tank division which was to liberate the town and offered what information they could.

Asked what German regiments were at Roulers, they disregarded the Polish commander's orders to avoid danger, ran back, met a German sentry, offered him biscuits and got him talking. On the basis of information they brought back Roulers was captured almost without bloodshed.

WOMAN LOOKOUT WATCHES ALONE ON SIERRA PEAK

Mrs. Gregory Wesson Watches for Forest Fires From Sardine Mountain; Has Only Her Dog for Company

By BONNIE WILEY
(Associated Press Writer)

Sardine Lookout, Calif. (CP) — High above the treetops in the Tahoe National Forest, Mrs. Gregory Wesson, fire lookout on 8300-foot Sardine peak, keeps house in a 30-foot high tower. When the fire season is over she figures she'll have her crocheted bedspread just about finished.

Spotting fires is Mrs. Wesson's business and she rates high in efficiency, sweeping the landscape with her powerful binoculars in search of a tell-tale wisp of smoke that might grow into a roaring forest-fed inferno.

"When I see smoke, I rush to my finder and by lining up the sights I can telephone the exact location of the blaze to the ranger station," she explains.

Hiking two miles over frozen snow to her perch last spring Mrs. Wesson's first problem was that of a water supply.

"I was supposed to use the snow water. The snows melted away from the tower rapidly but blocked the road below so they couldn't haul water up to me. My housekeeping problems became acute," she says.

County Supervisor Everett Deerwater, Sierraville, Calif., however, marshalled his road crews and rode to the rescue on a snow-plow.

Supplies are brought to the lady lookout by Forest Ranger Francis A. Land, Sierraville, who packs them in on his back until the snow-clogged road is opened.

No Blue Curtains

Mrs. Wesson does her cooking over a tiny wood stove in one corner of her 14 by 14 tower room and, for exercise, wields an axe on the high woodpile below her tower. Fears of some die-hard forest men that lady lookouts would hang blue ruffled curtains at the tower windows have not materialized.

Her bed stands on the other side of the be-windowed room and, to quote the lady outlook, "without an axe in it."

"Last year," Mrs. Wesson explained, "one of our lookouts boasted that she wasn't afraid of being alone but when they were packing her stuff out in the fall, they discovered she slept with an axe in her bed."

Mrs. Wesson is in no danger of having unexpected company drop in. She can see her visitors coming miles away.

"It's fun having company," she says. "I don't get too lonely in here because I have my dog with me, but she isn't much of a conversationalist."

It's cold in the High Sierras these black nights and the wind moaning and groaning around Mrs. Wesson's lonely tower sounds like the Brotherhood of Ghosts in convention session, but the lady lookout isn't afraid.

"There's work to be done," she explains.

Men who think of tomorrow
Invest in Victory today!

ONE day the whistles will blow, sirens shriek and bells will ring. It will be a day of rejoicing and a day of thanksgiving. We will have won our war.

Yes, we will win this war. We know that now. But the enemy has not yet surrendered nor has the fighting ceased. Canada's sons must continue to wage war on battlefields the world over. Here at home we, too, must carry on: building the ships and planes, making the guns and shells, producing the food on which our fighting men depend. And, we must continue to help pay for all these things through our purchase of Victory Bonds.

When V day dawns, when our boys come home, we all want to be able to hold our heads high—be able to say, "I did all I could."

Are you buying all the Victory Bonds you can? When we lend our money today we hasten tomorrow's victory.

Men who think of tomorrow invest in victory today!

Toronto Maple Leafs Score Pair of Wins to Open N.H.L. Defeating Rangers and Chicago

New York Downed 2-1 Saturday and Black Hawks 11-5 on Sunday

By ERIC SANDERSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Possibility that high-scoring games will be the vogue in the fifth war-time season of the National Hockey League was indicated during the week-end when all six teams made their debut in the 1944-45 campaign for the Stanley Cup.

After the smoke of battle cleared away, Toronto Maple Leafs were left leading the league with two victories, one a 2-1 verdict over New York Rangers at Toronto Saturday night and the other an 11-5 decision over Chicago Black Hawks in the windy city Sunday.

The defending Stanley Cup champions, Montreal Canadiens, had to go all out to hold off Boston Bruins before winning 3-2 at home Saturday and in the only other game Detroit Red Wings handed Bruins their second loss by whipping them 7-1 at Detroit Sunday.

Altogether more than 55,000 fans watched the four opening games further indicating attendance records may be set before the 150-game schedule ends next spring.

Led by veteran Dave (Sweeney) Schriner of Calgary, who returns to the N.H.L. hockey wars after a one-year absence, Maple Leafs won a hard-fought opening game before 13,049 spectators Saturday. The 31-year-old winger, who is known for his tricky stickhandling around the nets, sank the only goals of the match. Kilby Macdonald netted the lone goal for Rangers.

First Line Leads Scoring

On Sunday, Leafs walloped Paul Thompson's Chicago Black Hawks before 18,618 fans. Once again, Schriner and his first-string mates, Gus Bodnar of Fort William and Lorne Carr of Calgary, led the pace. Schriner and Carr each netted three and Bodnar counted once and assisted in four. Other Toronto snipers were: Bill Ezinicki, Nick Metz, Bob Davidson and Virgil Johnstone. Chicago marksmen were: Earl Seibert, Bill Thoms, Bill Mosienko, Johnny Harms and Clint Smith.

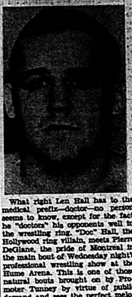
Manager Art Ross sent out Harvey Bennett, goalie with Oshawa Generals, last year's Canadian junior champions, to guard the nets in Boston's opening game against Canadiens Saturday. He turned in a first-class display in his pro debut before a crowd of 12,000 holding the Cup champions scoreless after the 3-minute mark of the second period.

Canadiens scored the only goal of the first period, Fern Gauthier finding the mark. Bouch Bouchard and Toe Blake then found the range early in the middle session to give Montreal a 3-0 lead. Ken Smith and Norm Calladine sank the Boston counters.

No Pity on Boston

Detroit Red Wings, who manager Jack Adams announced recently are 50 per cent better than last season, took no pity on Boston as they ran up a 7-1 victory. Modere (Mud) Bruneteau, rookie Jud McAtee and veteran Syd Howe scored two each and defenceman Bill (Flash) Hollett sank the other. Ken Smith drove in Boston's only goal two minutes before the end of the middle session. A crowd of 12,021 witnessed the contest.

HOLLYWOOD WRESTLER



What right Len Hall has to the medical prefix—doctor—no person seems to know, except for the fact he "doctors" his opponents well in the wrestling ring. "Doc" Hall, the Hollywood ring villain, meets Pierre DeGlane, the pride of Montreal in the main bout of Wednesday night's professional wrestling show at the Hume Arena. This is one of those natural bouts brought on by Promoter Tunney by virtue of public demand and sees the perfect melodrama atmosphere when it will be one of those straights—the villain versus the whitehaired hero. Get your bets down, but quick.

To start the night off Tunney signed Irish Tom Collins, a willing victim from Buffalo, to meet the hefty Babe Zaharias. Added to the show is a go between Joe Christie and Al Dunlop.

WEEKEND STARS

By The Canadian Press

Sweeney Schriner, Toronto, who scored both goals as his team defeated New York 2-1 Saturday night in the curtain-raiser at Maple Leaf Gardens. Schriner also bagged three goals and an assist in Toronto's run-away 11-5 win over Chicago Sunday night.

Fern Gauthier, Canadiens, who scored the first goal of the season in Montreal and paved the way for Canadiens' 3-2 win over Boston Bruins.

Lorne Carr and Gus Bodnar, Toronto. Carr scored three times and bagged two assists against Chicago Sunday night and Bodnar collected a goal and four assists in the same game.

Syd Howe, Detroit, who scored twice and drew two assists as the Red Wings whipped Boston 7-1 Sunday night.

Mud Bruneteau and Jud McAtee, Detroit, who each scored twice and got one assist against Boston.

HORNETS RETAIN DIVISION LEAD IN AMERICAN LOOP

Pittsburgh Squad Picks Up Three Points During the Weekend

By The Canadian Press

After five straight victories, Pittsburgh Hornets could do no better than draw with Indianapolis Capitals last night, but they maintained their lead in the American Hockey League standings just the same.

The Hornets were one of three teams to pick up three points in double games during the weekend, defeating the Caps 4-1 Saturday night before running into suddenly-stiffened opposition from the same quarter Sunday. Providence Reds whipped Cleveland Barons 3-1 Saturday while Hershey Bears were shutting out Buffalo Bisons, 3-0, and the Reds and Bears split 3-3 Sunday.

The Barons atoned somewhat for their Saturday night loss by whipping Buffalo 3-1 Sunday.

The Pittsburgh-Indianapolis clash Sunday night turned out to be the wildest game of the weekend, with linesman Rabbit McVeigh suffering a foot injury in a wild mixup in the second period, and Gordon Sherritt of the Caps suffering a head cut that bathed his neck in blood after a check by Ross Knipfel.

The Caps tied the count mid-way through the third period on Johnny Correll's counter after Bill Gauf had shot the Hornets into the lead early in the game. The Saturday night encounter was tame by comparison.

Hershey Had Little Trouble

Hershey had little trouble white-washing the luckless Bisons Saturday night, with goalie Nick Damore playing a flawless game while his team-mates fired two goals in the first period and another in the second. Cleveland had little more trouble with the Bisons last night, when goals by Les Cunningham, Whitey Prokop and Lou Trudel offset the lone Buffalo counter from the stick of Doug Lewis.

It was a different story for Cleveland the night before when they ran into the Reds at a time when the Providence crew were out for their first road victory in two seasons. Archie Lauson, Paul Corteau and Jerry Gravel scored for the Reds before Lou Trudel collected the only Cleveland score of the night late in the game.

Providence came from behind twice to gain their 3-3 draw with Hershey Sunday night. The Bears went ahead 2-0 on goals by Bill Moe and Bill Gooden before Paul Corteau and Florent Lauzon tied the score. They went ahead again late in the second on Lloyd Mohns' goal, only to have Courteau tie it up again with the only goal of the third.

RECORDS SAVED

Toronto, Oct. 30 —(CP)— Church records, communion vessels and a large cross were saved by Rev. A. E. Slemin, the Rector, when he entered blazing St. Agnes' Anglican Church in suburban Long Branch Saturday. Damage was estimated at more than $88,000. The fire is thought to have broken out in a cupboard.

OTTAWA TROJANS SPRING SURPRISE BEATING BEACHES

Toronto Team and Hamilton Wildcats Now Tied for First Place

By The Canadian Press

The unbeaten record of Toronto Balmy Beach in the Ontario Rugby Football Union and the last mathematical play-off chances of the Camp Borden R.C.A.F. Hurricanes in the Ontario armed services league disappeared in single scheduled games in each of the leagues Saturday.

Ottawa Trojans came up with an unexpected display of power to defeat Beaches 14-9 at Toronto, leaving the Toronto team and the Hamilton Wildcats tied for first place in the O.R.F.U. standings with four wins and one loss apiece.

It was a day of misery for Hurricanes, who were defeated 13-2 by Wildcats in an exhibition game at Hamilton and then watched Hagersville R.C.A.F. crush St. Thomas R.C.A.F. in the second game of a double-header. The Hagersville win removed Hurricanes' last chance of gaining even a tie for the second-place play-off spot.

The Hagersville win put them in first place in the services league, one point ahead of Toronto Navy which had an open date. Navy still has a chance to take over first place again in the final scheduled game Saturday against Camp Borden.

Although the first and second place positions in both leagues remain to be settled in this Saturday's games, the play-off teams in each are decided. It will be Wildcats and Balmy Beach in the O.R.F.U. and Hagersville and Navy in the services league.

One Ontario team still remains undefeated — the University of Western Ontario Mustangs. Although they are not entered in any league the Mustangs have won 3 exhibition games this season, their third victory being scored Saturday over Navy, 20-14.

Arnie McWatters was the key figure in the Ottawa win over Beaches. The veteran quarterback who formerly played with the Sarnia Imperials in the O.R.F.U. scored 7 points and gave a brilliant display as Trojans avenged the 33-0 setback they received from Beaches in Ottawa. Other Ottawa point-getters were halfback Red Edwards with a touchdown for five and inside wing George Fraser with two converts.

Sparkplug Billy Myers was not in uniform for Beaches and they missed his fleet running and passing. Earl Selkirk scored four points with a placement and a single and J. Becker got a touchdown.

L.A.C. Doug Smylie ran wild in the Hagersville-St. Thomas game, scoring two touchdowns and three singles for 13 points. L.A.C. Mickey McGee got five points with a touchdown, Cpl. Walter Gigg kicked a placement and a convert for four and FO. Bill Douglas kicked a single. L.A.C. Ray (Moon) Mullins got the one St. Thomas point.

H.M.C.S. Donnacona rugby team of Montreal, which went down 3-1 to University of Western Ontario's Mustangs two weeks ago, journeyed to Halifax to lose another close one on Saturday, going down 3-0 to H.M.C.S. Stadacona in an exhibition game.

CASUAL COMMENT

by K.J.C.

Some Truth.

Two boys met on the street, when one said:

Jimmie—Johnny's going to kill you.

Johnny (carelessly)—Yes, I know. No excitement and no fear.

A girl says:

Girl—I'm dying for a drink.

She looked good for another fifty years.

A mother says:

Mother—I'll skin you alive if you touch that cake.

He touched it, grinned and made for the door.

These are words of exaggeration. Apparently some expressions are not to be taken too seriously.

Football Fannings.

For three long periods Illinois' speedsters battled Notre Dame's fighting Irish into the ground Saturday and were leading 7-6 when suddenly the Irish struck for 71 yards and a touchdown to keep the Notre Dame record clear at five wins and no defeats....However, over 65,000 fans were thrilled in the day's greatest grid battle. They came to see Illinois' Buddy Young do his stuff and the Illinois speedster didn't disappoint them as he raced for the game's first try.... However, the Irish soon took care of Young and then went on to win.... The Army eleven from West Point also remained one of the game's undefeated teams by beating Duke 27 to 0....Penn was knocked out of the unbeaten bracket by Navy, the latter winning 26 to 0 to avenge the previous week's reverse .... Ohio State smashed a stubborn Minnesota eleven 34 to 14 at Columbus to extend the Buckeyes' undefeated record to five games....The Buckeyes roared through early paced by Wayne Williams....In the Big Ten Michigan went aviation-minded to beat Purdue 40 to 14....So, some of the best left are Army, Notre Dame, Ohio State, as Tulsa lost its first regular season defeat in three years when an underrated Oklahoma team did the trick 46-40.

Here and There.

Dixie Howell, former Cleveland Indian pitcher, is reported missing in Belgium, he's with the American army....Don't be at all surprised if Pinky Higgins, the Detroit Tigers' infielder, is named playing coach of the Bengals another year....Promoter Mike Jacobs is back seeking bouts for Madison Square Gardens, which brings out the fact Bill Crawford had a change of heart and is tossing Hub Smith at "Jiber" Ellis here this week....Things change, but quick, in the leather-pushing business....Denny Galehouse, the Browns' surprise pitcher of the 1944 world series, received his military call-up for the American Army....He's married and has three children....Don Barnes, president of the Browns, is said to have "cooled off" regarding moving the Brownies franchise out of St. Louis, at least for the time being....Maybe the stockholders had something to say in the matter....Lester Shiels, who guided the destinies of B.C.I. football and hockey for many years, has called a senior grid practice for this p.m.....What puzzles the grid railbirds at B.C.I. is "what about that line?"....At that there is a vast difference from the ball-tossing six-man game.

Remember When.

The Illinois State Commission barred Harry Thomas, Tony Galento, Max Schmeling, Nate Lewis and Joe Jacobs from Illinois boxing rings five years ago today pending complete hearing of "fixed fight charges" brought on by Thomas. He was a heavyweight fighter and had charged that bouts he lost to Schmeling and Galento "had been decided weeks before the fighters entered the ring."

Page Marks Bros.

Remember when Bob and Ernie Marks used to play stock through Eastern Canada featuring their oldtime melodramas of the hero arriving in the nick of time? Those shows should have nothing on Promoter Frank Tunney's main bout of Wednesday night at the local palace de sport when Pierre (The Hero) DeGlane tangles with Dr. Len (Bob, the villain) Hall, who learned his villain act in Hollywood. However, the present-day show might outdo the old time melodramas, as in this modern age the villain wins quite frequently. (Wanna bet?)

To Restore Ban.

From Chicago comes word that despite the brilliant play of some of the freshmen this season, the Big Ten Conference will restore the ban of first-year men after the war, Conference Commissioner John L. Griffith predicts. Yearlings had been barred in the past to discourage proselyting and to avoid the danger of developing "tramp athletes". Griffith praised this season's frosh crop for its excellence in studies and in grid competition as well.

LESSON NO. 518

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Attempt escape as much as you please. There is no squirming out of a squeeze. Each player must play a card to each trick. And when you've got to let go, you've got to let go.

South was declarer at a contract of seven diamonds in this deal:

NORTH
♠A 8 5 2
♥7 5 3
♦10 5 2
♣A K 10

WEST
♠7
♥8 6
♦J 8 3
♣J 8 7 5 4 3 2

EAST
♠K J 10 9 4 3
♥K Q J 10 4 2
♦None
♣9

SOUTH
♠Q 6
♥A 9
♦A K Q 9 7 6 4
♣Q 6

The opening lead from west was his lone spade. Dummy won that with the ace and south ran seven trumps and two clubs, landing in the dummy hand. This left each player with three cards.

By this time south is down to the spade queen and the A 9 of hearts. Dummy has left the club ace, the heart seven and the spade eight-spot, having shuffed or played everything else.

It made no difference what west had left. But east was in the embarrassing position of trying to protect both major suits. To do that, he hung onto the spade king and the K Q of hearts.

During the bidding, east had struck in some aggressive calls. So, declarer had it figured out that east held all the outstanding dangerous cards.

Therefore, he planned on making east the victim of a squeeze. Having placed east in the position of trying to protect two suits by this time, dummy led the club ace. That was the squeeze card.

East is now in bad shape for the shape he is in. If he lets go of the spade king, south drops the heart nine. South then takes the last two tricks with heart ace and spade queen.

When dummy leads the club ace, east may not give up the spade king. Instead, he may decide to cough up the heart queen. In that case, south flings the spade queen.

The heart from dummy then gives south both last tricks with ace and nine of hearts. And that's the end of the story.

When squeezed, you may as well give yourself up.

The Ontario Baseball Association at a special Sunday meeting at Hamilton announced it recognizes Welland Combines Champions of the Niagara District League as the 1944 Senior "A" Champions of Ontario. The decision was reached after it was agreed a sub-committee was misled on evidence presented at a meeting last Sept. 27, when they suspended Hank Biasatti for playing Sunday baseball in Detroit and ordered Windsor and London to replay a semi-final series which London won two straight. Biasatti, Canadian Army corporal stationed at Chatham, played for London in both games

The winner of the London-Windsor series for the Inter-County Baseball Association Championship was scheduled to play Welland for the provincial title. Because of Biasatti's suspension the inter-county league accounced they would not abide by the sub-committee's ruling and consequently London played a best-of-seven series with Welland, which London won, for what they termed the "real championship" of Ontario.

University of Alberta's Golden Bears walloped the University of Saskatchewan Huskies 26-0 at Saskatoon Saturday in the second game of the Hardy Cup series, taking the trophy back to Edmonton with them. The Bears won the first game of the series 33-0 on their home field.

ASSEMBLY

Victory Pictures: The assembly this week was postponed until the 7th period on Friday to allow for the presentation of two patriotic pictures entitled "The Four Corners" and "In All Thy Sons Command."

The first of these dealt with the meeting of three Empire soldiers with an English civilian in London. The Englishman takes them to a point of vantage from which they survey the great Capital sprawled out before them and, after a discussion, decide exactly for what they are fighting. The latter film gave detailed pictures of the great industrial battle which the United Nations fought and won in order to make D day a reality, and showed the great part that Canada played in this massive struggle.

Jingle, Jingle: Once again, the treasurer of the Students' Council, James "Gold Digger" Watson, was on hand to give the students a short lesson in subtraction and finally ended by stating the returns from "L'affaire Don Cossack" to be $262.68. (Did we say, some weeks ago, that we netted over $300.00? Okay, so we made a mistake.)

Announcements: "The Christmas Cards are coming!", said Ann Nicholson, speaking on behalf of the Library Club in the assembly last week. She went on to announce that the same number of cards have been ordered as were ordered last year and, due to the much larger student enrollment this year the demand for these little pieces of greeting will be very great. So ask for yours soon or you may not get them at all. See?

Two victories in the interscholastic football league were predicted by Reg Edwards for this week. The first game takes place Monday between B. C. I. V. S. and St. Michael's Academy Juniors. Then on Tuesday night, the victory flushed Seniors will stand off the attack of the invading "Sons of Trenton". Concerning both games, we are hoping and praying constantly.

Junior House League Basketball
Bankier vs. Wood—22-10.

On Tuesday, Oct. 24. Team A. coached by Gord Bankier, clashed with team D, coached by Stuart Wood. Wood's team moved to the fore early in the game and at quarter time were leading 8-4, but Bankier's team rallied strongly to tie the game at 10-10 at half time. Then, during the last half, Bankier's team started a close-checking style of play that resulted in their team running up 12 more points for a total of 22, while Wood's team was held scoreless and finished the game with their half-time score of 10. For Bankier's team Buchanan was high scorer with 10 points, with Lockyer, Ethier, Graham, and Summers turning in a good game. For Wood's team Galbraith and Gibson carried most of the attack.

Lineups:

Bankier—Buchanan, 10; Lockyer, Ethier, 4; Graham, 4; Drumm, Burke, Allison, Summers, 4; Maxwell, Baldwin. Total 22.

Wood—Cameron, Galbraith, 4; Diamond, 2; Ward, Pigden, Gibson 4; Hannah. Total 10.

Bankier vs. Rollins—16-13.

On Thursday, Oct. 26, at 4 p.m., Bankier's team met Rollins in a scheduled game. Bankier's team was leading at quarter time and at half time by scores of 6-2, and 10-6. However Rollin's team started to click in the third quarter for 7 points while Bankier's team was only collecting 4, thereby bringing the three-quarter score up to 14-13 for Bankier's team. Then in the last quarter Drumm put the game on ice for Bankier with the only basket of the final quarter. This was one of the best games played this year, and if these two teams meet in the playoffs, the student body can be assured of a close series.

Lineups:

Bankier—Buchanan, 2; Ethier, 4; Graham, 4; Lockyer, 4; Drumm 2; Burke, Allison, Maxwell, Summers, Baldwin. Total 16.

Rollins—Bridger, 6. Bongard, 2; Massey, 3; Marsh, Best, 2; White, Thompson. Total 13.

Wood vs Spafford—14-8.

On Friday, Oct. 27, at 4 p. m., Wood and Spafford met in a League game. This match was rather loosely played, as the inability of Spafford's team to watch their checks and the ability of Wood's team to capitalize on these opportunities cost Spafford's team the game.

Lineups—Wood: Barlow 6, Galbraith 2, Cameron, Ward, Pigden, Edwards, Gibson 6. Total 14.

Spafford: Clare 2, Pappas, Watson 3, McIntosh 2, Hitchon, Smale 1. Total 8.

The results of these games places Bankier's team in first place. Rollins' and Wood's teams tied for second, and Spafford's team in last place. With more than half the schedule completed, Mr. Townsend has announced that playoffs will be between the 2nd and third place teams, with the winner meeting the first place team in a best two out of three series.

B.C.I. 8, Albert College 1.

Our Seniors on Wednesday Oct. 25, began to show a little of the form which has been expected of them as they trounced Albert College 8-1. Despite the last of press notice Stew Wood's kicking and running were a feature of this game. The College students scored 22 points against our Seniors, all of which should add up to a good game when next our Seniors meet St. Mikes. Next week it's B.C.I. Juniors vs St. Mikes on Monday, and B.C.I. Seniors vs Trenton on Tuesday. The continued support of the student body is a "MUST."

Exhibition Volleyball.

On Friday, Nov. 3, the masters are playing the students an exhibition volleyball game in the Girls' Gymn at 4 p. m. For the masters, Miss Morton, Miss MacLaren, Mr. Turner, Mr. Townsend, Mr. Davies, Mr. Mott, Mr. Hancock, Mr. Hill and Mr. McGuire have signified their intention of playing, while Agnes Hinchcliffe, "Babe" Rutherford, Margie Taylor, Bill Holway, Gord Bankier, George Wonnacott and "Fearless" Watson will uphold the honor of the student body.

COMING EVENTS

Week of Monday, October 30th—Friday, November 3rd.

Monday, October 30th — Juniors vs. St. Mikes at B. C. I. St. Mike's walked off with everything last year; this year it will be a different story. Be sure to see the first struggle between this year's teams.

Tuesday, October 31st — If the law of averages holds good Tuesday should mark another victory for our Seniors. Trenton was defeated by Albert, who in turn was defeated by B. C. I. There should be no doubt as to the outcome of this game.

Wednesday, November 1 — Item of interest to all boys interested in Junior or Senior Basketball. There will be a meeting of those wishing to play in the boys gym at four o'clock tonight. Please turn out, for with so little remaining of last year's Senior team it is almost certain that Coach Townsend will have to call on some to play Senior who might otherwise be Junior players. This act would probably leave little more than a foundation for this season's Junior team.

The Junior House League Basketball game originally scheduled for Tuesday, October 31st, will be played tonight so as not to interfere with the Seniors vs. Trenton Rugby game. It's Bankier vs. Spafford to all concerned.

Thursday, November 2 — Wood meets Rollins in a Junior House League affair. Their first game to be replayed, was very close and this game will be a real battle from start to finish. Incidentally it may decide a play-off spot for either of the teams.

Friday, November 3rd — Today Spafford vs. Rollins winds up the regular House League schedule except for a replay of Wood - Rollins and one scheduled game next week. These games are worth watching and a better attendance would be much appreciated.

A challenge Volleyball Games-the Masters challenging the Students-will be payed tonight. This is the feature event of this week and a full house is hoped for.

CUFF NOTES

The Dramatic Club still staggers about waving the script for Act III madly about its collective heads while down in the cellars the stage—crew wades knee-deep in pink and green paint. About the paint, I am not jesting — I have actually seen it with my own eyes. It will be worth the price of admission to come and be overawed by the painting.

'Tis rumoured that by the efforts of our Students' Council we may possible be able to get school sweaters done in scarlet and black to bolster ye olde school spirit. Speaking of school spirit, it should be pretty high after the game with Albert, although one of our mainstays, Stew Wood, is in pretty sad shape af ealhrvngt Imand shape after having several lads from Albert tramp jovially on his ribs.

The Quartet, (remember?) has been seen slinking around the corridors under a weird assortment of instruments. Rumour has it that they are to perform at the Sadie Hawkins Day dance at the "Y".

Social activities were running high the past weekend with form parties and barn dances in the vogue. Yoho for the life of the collegiate student! Yeah?

AT THE CAPITAL — Sidney Toler stars in the role of Charlie Chan, in the exciting film "The Chinese Cat," now showing at the Capitol. On the same program "None Shall Escape."

AT THE McCARTHY — Jack Oakie, Peggy Ryan and Donald O'Connor as "The Merry Monahans," in that musical film now at the McCarthy Theatre. The second feature is "The Black Parachute," with John Carradine, Osa Massen.

To Reorganize Basketball Here

Provincial basketball will be sponsored in at least five categories at the Belleville Y.M.C.A., it was revealed by J. E. Shortt, general secretary of the "Y", here today. A rally of all basketball personages will be held at the Y.M.C.A. Wednesday evening at which time plans will be formulated to attempt a complete revival of this popular winter pastime.

In the Provincial Ontario Basketball Association for the past few years only a girls' intermediate and boys' juvenile teams have been sponsored, but if suitable competition can be procured Belleville will return to the men's Intermediate ranks and also add boys' juvenile and girls' junior cage teams to complete the five-team picture. All players, coaches and supporters of basketball are urged to attend this reorganization meeting.

AT THE BELLE

"Going My Way"

A combination hard to surpass resulted in one of this season's finest pictures which opened at the Belle Theatre Saturday, when Paramount's "Going My Way" arrived in a blaze of glory. The combination consists of a superb story, delicate direction by Leo McCarey, who also produced the film, and a pair of screen priests in the persons of Bing Crosby and Barry Fitzgerald.

Perhaps the most remarkable thing about "Going My Way" is its simplicity. In the war, moving characterizations by all members of the cast, pathos, comedy and whimsical humor play a large part. Miss Stevens, Metropolitan Opera Star, lends her singing talents with a rendition of the "Habenera" aria from Carmen while the Robert Mitchell chorus joins her and Bing in several choral numbers.

The delight of theatre patrons proved to be Barry Fitzgerald. As Father Fitzgibbon, founder of a small parish, his little world of peace and serenity is rudely interrupted by financial difficulties. But along comes Bing (Father "Chuck" O'Malley) who immediately sets out to remedy the situation. He does just that, but oftimes his measures are seemingly a bit modern and drastic to Fitzgerald. Bing organises a boys' chorus from the neighborhood gang, sanctions a love match between Jean Heather and James Brown, sells an original song to a music publisher and winds up by clearing the parish of debt.

Three new songs by Johnny Burke and Jimmy van Heusen are already in the top popularity bracket — "Going My Way," "Swinging on a Star" and "The Day After Forever." Other immortal melodies sung are "Ave Maria," "Adeste Fidelis" and "Silent Night."

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

New York, Oct. 30—(AP)—A young pitcher named Dick Blow was breezing through a game for the Albany Eastern Baseball League club one day last summer and shook off the catcher's signal...The catcher repeated the sign and again Blow shook his head...Then they staged one of those conferences where they shoot the breeze—between the plate and the mound...In the course of it, Blow blew his top and they came to blows...Seeing what was in the wind, manager Rip Collins stormed out of the dugout and chased both off the field...That night, Ripper handed the pitcher his release, saying, in effect, "Blow, Blow."

CHAPTER TEN

He hadn't seen much of Margaret lately and he didn't think of her hardly at all. It was funny. He used to think about Margaret all the time even when he was out with another girl, and that was often, and he had always come back to her. But not this time. It must be the real thing he thought. He found Verna fascinating as he turned and stopped and looked at her. It was funny, that May afternoon, the green carpet of the Campus looked slightly damp it was so fresh, but it wasn't damp really. There wasn't a cloud, the sky was deep blue, the sun blazing warm, comfortable, not sweltering. A big white-bellied Liberator, its four motors thundering, banking, crossed the Campus then a Boston, than a V of five Harvards. They were sweet little ships. He knew a lot about planes now. Funny he never used to think about them much; but now it was planes instead of law.

They lay down on the grass in the shade of the big elms and he turned on his back and gazed right up into the sky. It was a million miles high and he thought, there must be a God.

"What do you think?" he asked her, and she looked at him blankly for a moment.

"Think about what?" she asked. He watched a squirrel for a while, running along the limb of one of the elms.

"Oh, about the war, for instance." She sighed and turned towards him, her long legs stretched out, one bent at the knee on top of the other, and she looked right at him.

"Why, you're not thinking of joining up, are you?"

He was a little disconcerted. "Why not?" She didn't say anything for a minute. And he tried to divine the thoughts that were passing through her head. It wasn't very successful, for her face remained a beautiful mask.

"Oh, nothing. It just seems a little silly, that's all. After all, there's no reason."

"No reason? Good heavens, do we have to wait until they're in the St. Lawrence?"

She laughed gaily and threw one arm around his shoulder and drew his head down. She kept laughing and then she kissed him lingeringly. "You take everything so seriously, Jimmy. You ought to learn to relax." And suddenly he felt a little foolish, naive, and realized that this was a very beautiful girl and he was in love with her. "After all, it'll hardly come to that." ". . on the beaches, in the streets. .". Her arm was still around his shoulder and she had on a green wool suit, soft and clinging. Her eyes half closed and suddenly his arm was across her breast, warm and alive and exhilarating under him and her lips were inviting and warm next to his own. He breathed her perfume.

"You'r very lovely, Verna," he murmured. She smiled at him and swayed closer her lips a fraction of an inch. They were soft and sweet and thrilling under his own, open and relaxed, and he was half aware of her hand, caressing his neck, the back of his head and he pressed into her, strong and carefree and trembling. The squirrel ran along the limb and into its nest and came out again and looked around at the other elms that bordered the campus. It was quiet and peaceful and later he got to his feet and leaned over and pulled her up with both her hands in his. They walked back towards the U.

There was a Final in Roman Law tomorrow and after lectures he went up to Ab Newman's room in one of the Frat Houses. He looked at the notes and got them into order and then tried to study. It was no use. Outside the sun was shining on the green Campus and some Cadets were drilling on the grass, the commands carrying clearly. "Left, right, left, right," but they still looked pretty sloppy. They must have had good spirit though, he thought, to turn out for drill on a day like this.

Things were moving faster now. Doc Gagnier, Major Gagnier, R.C.A.M.C., had made a name for himself at Dunkirk and had been decorated. Eddy had got his wings and was last heard from at Halifax. Jimmy's sister had married Charlie yesterday on the eve of his embarkation, and he remembered her saying "Wish me luck" that night on the stairs when he was phoning and it seemed long ago.

The cadets halted and a lazy hush hung over the whole University. "Heads up," one of the officers said and from the baseball diamond came the thud of ball on bat. "Left—turn." "Run, Johnny boy, slide." "Halt—stand easy." Below along one of the paths bordering the buildings old Prof. Smidley walked with some girl who was talking to him earnestly. To the right the tennis courts lay clean and newly repaired with the tapes still white. A truck sounded somewhere and then came into view over near the dining room, and a dog barked. The sky was brilliant blue to the point of being white in the West. "Hey, hey, swing at that. ." The lawns were well kept and the grass lay smoothly green. A plane droned overhead. an Anson .. there were Mitchells, Bostons, Liberators, Hudsons at the new field; there were mostly Harvards at St. Hubert.

On the diamond the Navy was playing a scrub University team. He was supposed to be on it but he knew if he didn't study now he'd flunk. The fruit truck drove away from the dining room and old Smidley came back alone, puffing his pipe, and he could see his white hair and pink face; and another big plane went over the Campus with its multiple motors growling. With a groan he threw down the notes and went out.

There had been Munich and then Poland but on September tenth when it was declared that a state of war existed between the Dominion of Canada and the German Reich, the Luftwaffe was an unknown factor on the lap of Mars. The public was unaware in general of the need for 'air-power', unaware that they faced an entirely different kind of war. There were some who were not unaware. On October tenth was incepted the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan, to provide twenty-five thousand aircrew a year, pilots, observers, wireless operators, stupendous figure at the time but one that was, after Dunkirk, entirely inadequate. Canada, New Zealand, Australia, were to provide the men, Canada the sites for the schools, huts, bunkhouses, permanent buildings, hangars and fields. On December seventeenth Prime Minister King announced the agreement, total cost six hundred and fifty million, Canada's share to be three hundred and fifty million, eighty airfields, sixty-seven schools, forty thousand personnel. "To achieve by co-operative effort airforces whose co-ordinated strength will be overwhelming." It was a tremendous and apparently well-nigh impossible task.

In favor of the known flair of Canadian youth for aerial combat, witness the Barkers, Bishops, and Collishaws of the last war; the great steps made by commercial flying and bush fliers over the vastness of Canada; the national airway, major airfields the width of the continent; the natural adaptability of the Canadian terrain as a magnificent training area, consisting of great unpopulated areas, huge flat lands. On the credit side too was the indomitable courage and determination of a free people. It added up to success.

From Cape de la Madeleine and St. Eugene to Borden and Uplands and Moncton and Edmonton and Jarvis and Mossbank and Trenton and Rivers and Portage la Prairie the country began to be ripped apart as bulldosers and scrapers and graders, rollers, cut and spread the countryside into new shapes and sizes. Surveyors appeared, transits and levels were set up, little stakes were driven into the ground and pushed over as the bulldozers plowed along on their heels, cutting, levelling, clearing, and buildings and runways appeared under the frantic but well-directed efforts of hard-pressed contractors. Runways a hundred feet wide and twenty-five yards long in triangle or tee or plus sign form took shape as twenty-six Elementary Flying, sixteen Service Flying, ten Bombing and Gunnery, ten Air Observer, and two Air Navigator schools were erected.

There were planes, DeHavilland Tiger Moths, Fleets, Harvards, Ansons, Norsemen, Cessnas, Forts, Sharks, Hudsons, Fairey-Battles, Moths, Cubs, Sharks, Hurricanes, Catalinas, Hampdens, Lancasters, made in Canada and Mosquitos poured out later in a quickening stream that spelt airpower and destruction to the Axis. There were forty thousand personnel for the new RCAF nubbed by the Sunday pilots, the Civilian Flying Clubs waiting to train more and more young Canadians. And they came in droves, in thousands, tens of thousands, a hundred thousand in action by 1941. They came from the farm, from the country towns, from the University Campuses of Alma Maters across Canada, from garages and offices, sons of Seigneurs of Quebec and the plainsmen of the West—Young Canada came, with a light in their eyes as they looked and saw and liked what they saw. Flying was a natural. In the spring of '40 the first aircrew candidates were accepted and by the end of Summer the plan was in production, and the first Wings Parade was held at Camp Borden on October 28th. But in June of '40 it was Dunkirk and No. 1 Fighter Squadron Overseas, and after that it was the Battle of Britain. The Spits took off in little groups and went up and tore into big banks of Dorniers and Heinkels and Messerschmitts and Junkers and tore big holes in them, clawed them from the sky. "Never was so much owed. ." and to Bishop and Barker and Collishaw were added such names as Deane Nesbitt and Ernie McNab; 'Jeep' Neal, Ian Ormston, Doc Morrison and later 'Buzz' Beurling.

Air Minister Power had said, "There is flowing forth a steady, continuous and ever-increasing stream from the new fountain of youth which will go on endlessly, inexorably and remorselessly until such time as the enemy territory will be darkened by the shadow of the wings controlled and manipulated by the intrepid young men of the Empire." And the RCAF boys were in Britain, India, the Middle East. They comprised one-fifth of the bombing crews that began the remorseless retaliatory bombings of Germany.

He went to war unafraid somehow, yet thrilled. It was June and as he walked into the Recruiting Centre he tolh himelf, "I'm probably not coming back." But there was no turning back. Dunkirk. "On the beaches, in the streets." It wasn't the same anymore and he met Punchy and Gus on the way down. They were going too. Everybody was going to be in it and he certainly wasn't going to be left out. The war wasn't far away any more; it was right here and they were all in it. Everyone was in the front line. In after years when the score was reckoned he thought, they'll not find that I sat back when the biggest fight that ever waged for Liberty was being fought.

"For what avail the plough or sail
Or land or life, if Freedom fail?"

That was what the little plaque said on Professor Smidley's desk. He had a long talk with the prof. He had seen it his way. They saw eye to eye. It was even better than he had imagined.

"It's up to you fellows," the prof. said. "To show them that the democratic peoples are not decadent. To show that it is the very opposite in fact; that compared to the stagnancy of a dictatorship there is nothing, aside from all matter of opportunity and freedom, nothing quite like the competition, rivalry of a living Democracy to make men independent, self-sufficient, living examples of what initiative consists of." He said more. He used the term Christian gentlemen too.

It was no lost generation. They knew where they were going and what would happen. He looked at a motto on the front of one of the pamphlets they gave out one night at Reserve Training. It said, "Sons of Empire, forget it not. There are such things as love, honor and the soul of man which cannot be bought with a price, nor die with death!" and he wondered what death would be like. His generation went into war and faced death unafraid even though the call of the flesh was strong and man by nature tends to cling to life. The drowning man clutches the straw. Perhaps they were slightly disillusioned by what they had seen of life so far. It wasn't ideal. There was poverty. They knew it wasn't all love songs and love. But they went away from it knowing they liked it, knowing they might not come back. A lot of them didn't. The notice appeared and the conversations lagged and a girl said, "Alan is missing, presumed dead." And Alan was in the Channel and Alan was on a torpedoed merchant ship, and Alan was sprawled awkwardly in the mud on the beach at Dunkirk. Alan was dead.

MARMORA

Memorial Service For Pte. J. O'Brien Held at Marmora

Marmora, Oct. 30 — A memorial service for the late Private Johnny O'Brien who died in Italy on September 23rd. from wounds received that same day, was conducted in St. Paul's Church at 11 a.m. on Sunday by Rev. J. M. Brownlie L.Th., S.Th. newly appointed rector of the parish. Included in the large congregation were relatives of the deceased soldier and members of Marmora Branch No. 237 Canadian Legion. Flowers in the sanctuary and chancel in his memory were the gift of the Legion and former fellow employees of the late Private O'Brien of the Deloro Smelting and Refining Company Limited. Other flowers sent in memorian of the late James Hickey were from his widow and his two sons, Warren and John. Hymns of an appropriate nature were sung and an eloquent discourse delivered by the rector who spoke of Johnny O'Brien as a representative soldier as one who went into service not for anything he could boast of but to give his all in the cause of humanity. His text was chosen from Matt. 22 Verses 37 to 39 which contains Christ's statement of the two great commandments. His theme was "The Purpose of Life". He declared at the outset that the greatest need in the world today is for a clear cut purpose in life and later in his sermon emphasized that lack of faith in the world to come is always equated with lack of joy in the world that now is. The remainder of the sermon was an elaboration of the three parts of the purpose of life. 1. That we should glorify God. 2. That we should train our souls for eternity. 3. That we put religion into practice. Prior to the recessional hymn, the Last Post was sounded by Comrade George Brooks.

Obituary

LATE MRS. J. M. MATTHEWS

Marmora, Oct. 30 —St. Paul's Church was filled to capacity on Friday afternoon as the funeral of the late Mrs. Jane May Matthews, beloved wife of Fred Matthews, was held. The casket was covered with many beautiful floral emblems, evidencing the respect in which the deceased was held. The hymns were "Nearer My God to Thee" and "Abide With Me." A trio composed of Mrs. L. R. Rundle, Mrs. I. B. Nichol and Mrs. P. Gray, at the request of near relatives, rendered "In the Garden." Rev. J. M. Brownlie who officiated, spoke comforting words to the bereaved. The interment took place in Maple Grove Cemetery, Havelock. The pall bearers were S. Glembiski, P. Gordon, W. Rice, G. Brooks, J. Hagadoren and N. Willman. Flower carriers were Floyd Gray, John Richardson, H. O. Loveless, W. Neal and George Davidson.

JAMES JONES

Marmora, Oct. 30—James Jones, well known farmer of Marmora Township, died suddenly at his home about half past nine on Saturday evening. He was lying on the couch at the time listening to a radio program and suddenly expired. With him in the room was his brother-in-law, Thomas Moffatt. His wife had gone to the village on a shopping expedition, where the sad news was conveyed to her. He had enjoyed excellent health and had never complained of feeling unwell. He had attended to his farm duties that day as usual, and his death came as a distinct shock to relatives and neighbors. The late Mr. Jones was highly respected as a man of integrity, a total abstainer and one who was never known to smoke. Seventy-two years of age he was the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. William Jones of Marmora Township, and spent all his life in his native district. For many years since its erection, he attended Holy Trinity Church in North Marmora as one of its most faithful worshippers. In politics he was a Conservative but had a host of friends among men of various political leanings. He was married to Ann, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Moffatt, who survives him as well as ten children of the marriage, namely William, Peterborough; Hugh, Rawdon Township; Arthur, Wyandotte, Mich.; Herbert, Peterborough; Gordon, Marmora Township; Mrs. Roy Brown, Springbrook; Mrs. George Fox, Malone; Mrs. Herbert Young, Welland; Mrs. Bruce Baker, Peterborough, and Mrs. William Kelly, Malone. He is also survived by three sisters, Mrs. Robert Phillips, Marmora; Mrs. John Simmons and Miss Goldie Jones, Campbellford, and twenty-three grandchildren. The funeral takes place on Tuesday afternoon in St. Paul's Church, Marmora with interment in Marmora Protestant cemetery. Rev. John M. Brownlie rector will officiate.

300-Pound Bear Escapes Exhibit, But Is Lassoed

Richmond, Va., Oct. 30 — (AP)— A 300-pound black bear escaped from a Fish and Game Commission exhibit on a crowded downtown parking lot yesterday.

Attendants said the bear, Bootsie, was struck squarely in the schnozzle by her cage companion, 400-pound Blackie, in a fight over an apple. Blood spurted and Bootsie flew into a rage.

A keeper cautiously opened the cage door and tossed in another apple in the hope of placating Bootsie but she rushed for the door, bowled over the attendant and escaped. Bootsie made her way through the squealing crowd, including many children.

M. C. Wade, Richmond, a spectator, cut down a rope and looped it over Bootsie's neck just as she reached the street. The bear turned, jumped on Wade with four feet and started clawing. Attendants and police swarmed in and got her under control.

AMERICANS FIGHT IN CANADIAN ARMY

1st Canadian Army Most International in Present War

By ROSS MUNRO
(CP War Correspondent)

With the 1st Canadian Army, Holland, Oct. 30 —(CP Cable)— For the first time in Canadian army history American troops are fighting under over-all Canadian command.

The Americans came into the line several days ago and have been fighting on the southwest Holland sector between Bergen op Zoom and Breda, where the Canadian army is making a great surge northward toward the lower Rhine.

The Americans already have captured several villages in their advance.

The 1st Canadian Army now is the most international army of this war. Fighting with it are Canadian, British, American, Polish and Czecho-Slovak troops and previously Netherlands and Belgian brigades fought under Lt.-Gen. Crerar.

Czech troops of the 1st Canadian Army celebrated their national holiday Saturday—their Independence Day commemorating the establishment of the independent Czech republic by Thomas Masaryk in 1919.

The Czechs really celebrated. They attacked on their particular sector of the front, stormed into German positions and collared 340 prisoners. It was their best Independence Day for years.

Sixteen 350-Ton Coastal Cargo Ships Will Be Built

Ottawa, Oct. 30 (CP) — Contracts have been let to four Quebec and west coast shipbuilders for sixteen 350-ton coastal cargo ships, the Munitions Department announced today.

Steel-hulled, with an 8½ foot draught and a length of 140 feet, these sturdy little vessels will serve as all-purpose cargo carriers in the Pacific. They are similar in design and capacity to the Dutch coasters built shortly after the First Great War.

Four of the vessels will be built at the George T. Davie and Sons Ltd., shipyard at Lauzon, Que., and four by Morton Engineering and Drydock Co., Ltd., at Quebec. North Van Ship Repairs Ltd., at Vancouver, has contracted to build five more, while Victoria Machinery Depot, Victoria, will deliver the remaining three.

The vessels will cost $450,000 each and will be completed late in 1945. They are being built for Wartime Shipbuilding Ltd., on behalf of the British Ministry of War Transport.

SANDBAGS USED AS STUDENTS FIGHT

Lethbridge, Alta., Oct. 30—(CP)— Sand bags and iron pipes were brought into play here Saturday night as two "gangs" of students rioted in the downtown section.

The brawl between the north side gang, said to be zoot-suiters, and the collegiate boys from the south side of the city, followed an election at the collegiate celebration "snake dance." The fight broke out as result of grievances between the two groups. Four boys were apprehended on assault or disturbance charges.

Red Cross Needs 5,000 Blood Donations Daily for Supply

Toronto, Oct. 30 —(CP)— Dr. John T. Phair, chairman of the Canadian Red Cross National Blood Donors Committee, today issued an appeal to Canadians to become blood donors. He said the Canadian Red Cross needs 5,000 donations of blood daily to assure an ample supply for battle front casualties in Europe.

Almost all blood donor clinics were below their quotas and in one week alone, the society was 7,000 donations short of its objective.

"Contraband Control"

by

COMMANDER J. R. ADAMS, R.N.

(B.B.C. Press Service)

For the past two and a half hours I've been in command of our Naval Contraband Control Base at Gibraltar.

The object of Contraband Control is to strangle the enemy's overseas trade, both import and export. To do this, we have to exercise strict control over neutral shipping. This we do mainly at ports of loading by means of the Navicert system. This means that cargoes can be authorized by us in advance and so reach their destination with the minimum of delay. As a rule, any ship carrying a fully navicerted cargo, is allowed to proceed without interception by our patrols at sea. But now and again it is necessary to divert a ship to one of our ports for closer inspection, and this is usually done at a Contraband Control Base like the one at Gibraltar. Let me give you an idea of a typical day at such a Base.

We may have to examine, say, two or three neutral vessels which have been sent in, because we have reason to be suspicious, either about the cargo, or possibly about the passengers or the crew.

Now I'll tell you how a Boarding and Search Party goes about its job.

This Party consists of about a dozen ratings, two or three officers and interpreters, and, if it's a passenger ship, some Wrens. With as little delay as possible, they go on board. An officer interviews the Captain and gets from him all particulars of the ship, her voyage, and the cargo she is carrying. The Skipper's statements are checked, as far as possible with the ship's Log Book, Manifest and other papers, which are then sent ashore for more detailed examination. Meanwhile, everyone on board is mustered on deck, and checked with the crew and passenger lists. This is how we make sure that no stowaways are being carried.

Then, while the Intelligence Officers are interrogating all passengers and crew, a thorough search of the ship begins.

I needn't tell you that searching a merchant ship requires specialised knowledge and much patience. There are so many places where contraband can be hidden—lifeboats, ventilators, tanks and store rooms — as well as, of course, holds and cabins. All these have to be thoroughly examined — and other most unlikely places too. We have found contraband hidden in navigation lights, diamonds in knife-handles, keys and the handle of a lady's bag.

Then we have to give close attention to the engine-room and the stokehold. This means that the searchers must be familiar with all types of machinery. The same goes for the wireless room; more than once articles of small bulk but high value have actually been found hidden in the radio itself.

So you see, searching a ship is a big job. To do it thoroughly, every space above and below decks must be rigorously examined. Ropes and gear have to be moved from the fore-peak, bunker coal turned over—all cabins and personal effects searched. All this means much sweat and toil.

If the ship has a bad name, the search will be carried to almost unlimited lengths. Panelling will be removed, cabin fittings taken down, books carefully examined for smuggled letters and everybody, from the Captain downwards, made to turn out the pockets of their clothes they're wearing. Sometimes we even have to make them strip completely.

Finally, we open the holds and examine the cargo as far as possible. If a ship has a general cargo, we open a large number of cases. We note their marks and number and check their contents with the manifest. If we are doubtful about any particular items, we have them taken ashore for closer examination. Sometimes this means the opening of inner containers and an analysis of the contents by a chemist.

While all this is going on, the ship's papers are being examined ashore by a Manifest Officer. As it's impossible to examine a whole cargo thoroughly without discharging it—and this is rarely practicable—we have to rely, to a large extent, on papers to tell us what a ship carries. So these, too, have to be closely scrutinised. Every item on the manifest is checked with the relevant navicert. Quantities and descriptions shown on these documents are compared with the Bills of Lading and Mate's receipts. In this way, we often discover discrepancies. It may be fairly easy to forge one document, but—mainly because so many people are involved—it's very difficult to make a good job of altering all the papers relating to a particular consignment.

Very often, of course, after all this trouble, we find nothing incriminating and the ship is allowed to sail. Even so, it's only by continual watchfulness that neutral ships are kept on the straight and narrow path. When we do find goods that have enemy origin or destination, we land them. The ship herself may be detained and a report signalled to the Admiralty and Ministry of Economic Warfare. This usually results in an order for us to seize the goods.

• •

Now the legal position is this. A neutral is at liberty to trade with any belligerent; but a country at war has the right to seize any contraband bound to or from her enemies. In short, a neutral may trade with a belligerent if she can get away with it. If the bulk of a ship's cargo is found to be contraband and is carried with the knowledge and consent of the owners, the ship herself is liable to be seized as well.

Once a ship or cargo has been seized, it passes out of the Navy's hands into those of the Civil Authorities. The full story is told later in a Special Court of Law known as a Prize Court. Here, the owners of the ship or cargo seized, have the right to appear and fight the case, to save their property from condemnation. It's then up to our legal experts, representing the Crown, to justify the seizure, and satisfy the Judge.

You may have read in the newspapers about one of our most recent "Hauls." It happened like this. We were examining some cases from the cargo of a ship from South America. Some of them were supposed to contain a product often exported from this cattle-raising country. But when we examined them, we found that the tins were filled with liver extract. This, as I daresay you know, is highly valued by the enemy; as an energy-giving tonic for their shock troops and air crews. When we inspected closer, we found that some of the tins were fitted with double bottoms, each containing a disc of platinum weighing about a pound. Now, platinum is used in the manufacture of nitric acid for explosives as well as for electric points. It is an essential commodity, which the Germans are desperately short of. This instance shows, to what lengths they will go, to get hold of even a comparatively small quantity. Other cases in the same contingent, contained tins of peptone; but when we opened them up, we found they were fitted with inner containers filled with a gland extract, which the enemy uses for treatment of shock. Of course, the whole consignment was seized. It will be interesting to see, if the neutral firm to which it was consigned, will fight the case in the Prize Court, and if so, what explanation they will have to offer.

Many other attempts at contraband running have been discovered, but I have only time to tell you about a few of them.

Some months ago, a neutral ship was brought in; we suspected her of having loaded goods at a South American port, without a navicert. Sure enough, hidden away in the fore-peak, were 25 cases apparently containing soap. But when we opened them we found the soap was just a lining inside the boxes, which were actually filled with valuable drugs and highly concentrated meat extract.

Then there was a passenger ship, which we intercepted en route to Lisbon, and brought to Gibraltar, rather to the annoyance of all on board. We did this, because we knew, there was a traffic in fishskins, which the Germans were using to make gun-grips, and for other war-like purposes, and we thought this particular ship might be one used by the smugglers. Our unpopular action was fully justified when we found that all the baggage of two of the passengers consisted of large trunks, full of these skins. In addition, among the cargo, were cases marked "tinned fruit" which also contained nothing but fishskins.

Another valuable haul was a ship with a full cargo of lemons. This cargo was consigned to a neutral port, but from information received and from careful scrutiny of the documents on board, we were able to piece the whole story together, and discovered that the lemons were eventually going to Germany. Soon after this, we managed to intercept a vessel bound for a French port, with iron-ore for Germany. This too was brought to Gibraltar and seized in Prize.

More recently still, we captured a ship built only two months before, especially for running the blockade. In her short career, she had carried more than one cargo for the enemy, mainly by using neutral territorial waters, where ships were safe from interception. Now, like the other two ships I have just mentioned, she is doing valuable work under the British flag.

From the little I have been able to tell you, you will see that apart from the preventative side of the job—which is the main part of it—we do sometimes get tangible results from our efforts. And when our day's work brings no material return, we have to be content with the knowledge, that we are an essential link, in the chain being drawn, ever tighter, around Germany and her allies. For without overseas trade, they cannot replace the many materials essential for equipping the armed forces, for running the factories and transport and for feeding the people. And there are many signs, that many of Germany's recent military reverses have been largely the result of the lack of these supplies. And I hope they'll be shorter still before this racket's over.

British Occupy Piscopi Island Close to Rhodes

Rome, Oct. 28 (AP)—Allied troops landed from the British cruiser Sirius and occupied the island of Piscopi, northwestk of Rhodes, the night of Oct. 26, Allied headquarters announced today.

Piscopi (Tilos) is a small mountainous island of the Dodecanese group formerly held by Italy and now claimed by Greece. It is less than 25 miles from Rhodes.

The communique said also that the island of Melos (Kilo) one of the Cyclades group, was bombarded by four British warships, Thursday.

There was no report of resistance to the landing at Piscopi.

Historic Melos, the southwesternmost island of the Cyclades, is 17 miles east of the Peloponnesus and approximately the same distance north of Crete.

Yesterday an Allied air force announcement said that the Germans "have practically no prospect of saving" forces totalling some 23,000 men in Crete, Rhodes and the remaining Nazi-held Aegean islands because they lack aircraft and their air evacuation lines are under constant Allied observation.

Japanese Open All-Out Drive In Kwangsi Prov.

Chungking, Oct. 28 (AP)—The Japanese opened an all-out offensive against the northern Kwangsi defence centre of Kweilin yesterday and now are attacking Chinese positions at the outskirts of the city, a Chinese communique announced today.

The Japanese also advanced six miles in a renewed thrust westward from Pingham, 115 miles south of Kweilin, and at the same time struck westward from the recently-occupied east China seaport of Foochow.

Frankford

Frankford — Over 600 persons were on hand to enjoy the first dance held in Frankford's new community hall. Music for modern and old-time dancing was furnished for the evening by Graydon Sheldon and his Variety Band, heard over CHEX, Peterboro.

During the evening a floor show was put on with Carl Monk, CHEX Master of Ceremonies, Miss Lenore Gordon, tap dancer and Mr. Andrew Dalton, cowboy singer. Mr. Graydon Sheldon played old-time tunes and several novelty numbers on the violin.

The large lounge room at the east end of the dance hall has been furnished with several occasional chairs and end tables. Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Miller of Frankford donated a wicker suite consisting of table, table-lamp, two large chairs and settee, for use in this room.

"Peace means a free Canada for your Daddy to come home to, and for you to grow up in — a Canada in which everyone will have the right to build, by his own sturdy effort, a secure and self-reliant future for his family.

"But Peace and that better Canada won't come, sonny, until Victory is won. That's why Grandpa and your Mom bought a Victory Bond today ... remember?

"We can't fight, sonny, like your Dad. But if everyone like us buys Victory Bonds, it won't be long before he comes marching home again ... to be your pal while you grow up through Canada's bright years of Peace."

GERMAN ARMY FLEEING ACROSS MEUSE RIVER
VICTORY MAY NOT COME BEFORE EARLY SUMMER

—Churchill

All of Schelde Is. Of South Beveland In Allied Hands

Allies Soon To Get Use Of Great Belgian Port

By WILLIAM FRYE
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

London, Oct. 31 — (AP)—Under cover of a heavy fog which grounded Allied aircraft, the German 15th Army retreating from southwestern Holland was fleeing across the Maas (Meuse) River and the Hollandsch Diep today in motor columns from six to 12 miles long.

Victorious British and Canadian armies harried the retreat as the Netherlands coastal corner and the related Schelde estuary action reached the mop-up stage. The German defeat means the Allies soon will get the use of the great Belgian port of Antwerp for the flood of supplies to feed the coming drives into the heart of Germany.

A front dispatch said it was estimated that perhaps only 10,000 to 20,000 Germans had been left south of the Maas River line to attempt to slow up the pursuit of the victorious 1st Canadian and British 2nd Armies. A British spokesman has said the bulk of the enemy forces probably would escape across the water barrier.

East of Eindhoven, the strongest German counter-attack yet launched on the west front "made no headway" yesterday, Allied supreme headquarters announced, and failed to blunt the offensive north of Antwerp.

All of the Schelde island of South Beveland now is in the hands of British and Canadian troops, who are poised at the narrow causeway leading to the trapped enemy garrison on flooded Walcheren Island. A few enemy guns remaining on Walcheren bar the passage of Allied ships from the long water approach to Antwerp.

Attempts Repulsed Claim

(A Reuter dispatch from 21st. Army Group headquarters said an attack across the causeway from South Beveland to Walcheren Island was launched at dawn Tuesday and met heavy German 88-mm. and mortar fire.

(The German high command communique asserted attempts to thrust onto Walcheren Island were repulsed.)

In the collapsed Schelde pocket 60 miles west of Antwerp the capture of Retranchement, south of Cadzand, compressed the remnants of the German forces into a rapidly diminishing square of land on the north coast.

A field dispatch from Ross Munro, Canadian Press war correspondent, said Canadian detachments crossed the canal system screening Knocke and Heyst in Belgium, the last enemy strong points in this pocket.

South of the Maas and its seaward outlet, the Hollandsch Diep, converging British and Polish columns sweeping up from Breda and Tilburg met in Oosterhout, drove forward and captured Raamsdonk, less than two miles from one of the main bridges over the Maas near Geertruidenberbg.

Farther west, Roosendaal was abandoned yesterday by its German garrison, and British troops dashed beyond it to the vicinity of Oud' Gastel. Canadian units neared Steenbergen, eight miles north of Bergen Op Zoom.

Black for Miles

The roads leading to the bridges and ferries over the Maas and the Hollandsch Diep were black for miles with columns of German transport.

A spokesman at British 2nd. Army headquarters, however, said there still was no sign of a German rout. It is an orderly withdrawal, he said, screened by extensive use of mines and booby traps, as well as elements of five or six enemy divisions acting as rearguards.

On American sectors of the western front, the French city of Maizieres Les Metz, six miles north of Metz, was cleared after three weeks of bitter street fighting.

Farther south the villages of Bru and Jeanmenil, approximately two miles east of Rambervillers, were captured.

Otherwise there was little but patrol activity from Aachen to the Swiss border, with the lull on the American 1st. Army front continuing.

Must Not Run For Street Cars Nor Pass on Left

Toronto, Oct. 31 —(CP)— Citizens of Toronto — the Queen City — now must walk sedately in the streets.

So says the law!

Nor may they run for street cars or pass each other on any other side but the right when walking on city sidewalks. For these, among others, are clauses in a new civic by-law which passed in City Council today with only two dissenting votes.

The new regulations do not allow horses to walk along the streets unattended. Old dobbin, who pulled a milk, ice or bread wagon, and knew the customers as well as his master, must wait for the "giddap" or "whoa" signal henceforth, lest his master land in jail.

Restrictions were also placed on parking as well as children using tricycles and roller skates, but before the new law's clauses can be legally applied the Ontario Municipal Board must give its approval.

Nearly every section of the traffic by-law has been in effect since 1939, Alderman E. C. Roelofson told the council.

"The by-law was not new, it was just revised," he said. "The whole intent in presenting the new one was to clarify the old one, which has now become added to until it has become complicated."

Jap Premier Blames Shortages, Situation Now 'Unfavorable'

San Francisco, Oct. 31 — (AP) — Japan's armed forces, fighting a passive defence since the battle of Guadalcanal, have been forced to "withdraw gradually" and now face a situation which is "regrettably unfavorable to us," Premier Kuniaki Koiso told the Japanese people today.

Koiso repeated the Japanese claims of naval victories off Formosa and the Philippines and attributed the "unfavorable" situation to a shortage of materials.

His statements, made at a mass rally in Osaka and broadcast by the Tokyo radio for domestic consumption, were recorded by the Federal Communications commission.

RUSSIANS OPEN NEW OFFENSIVE AGAINST HUNGARY

Attack Across Tisza River on a Broad Front Fifty Miles From Budapest

London, Oct. 31 —(CP)— Swarms of Red Army tanks, planes and artillery are attacking across the Tisza River on a broad front 50 miles from Budapest in a new major offensive against the imperilled Hungarian capital, the Germans announced last night.

The Soviet communique did not mention the drive, but the Moscow radio broadcast a Geneva report that the pro-Nazi Hungarian Premier, Ferenc Szalasi, had hurried to Hitler's headquarters "to present a plan to remove the seat of the Hungarian Government from imperilled Budapest to Berlin."

German broadcasts said the roar of German and Russian cannon could be heard in Budapest 50 miles from Szolnok, threatened stronghold on the Tisza.

Soviet forces have been astride several all-weather roads leading across the plains to Budapest. The Germans said the big Russian push came after weeks of preparation.

Thousands of civilians were reported erecting breastworks outside Budapest.

The Russian communique was silent on the Red Army offensive in Western Latvia, where fresh Soviet gains were reported by Berlin.

Storms Harass East Front.

A Moscow dispatch said wintry storms are harassing the long eastern front, miring in the mud the Red Army's mechanized attack.

The Soviet communique said Gen. Ivan Petrov's 4th Ukraine Army, which has already won Ruthenia and is invading Slovakia to the west, had captured 10,160 Germans between last Friday and Sunday, bringing the 10-day total to 21,390.

Berlin acknowledged that Marshal Rodion Y. Malinovsky's 2nd Ukraine Army had smashed across the Tisza River at many points, forcing the last natural defence line before Budapest.

Red Army forces driving across the northeast corner of Hungary on a 20-mile front captured Guyre, 18 miles south of Csap, the Czechoslovak rail junction taken Sunday, Moscow said.

Capture of seven localities in Czechoslovakia was announced by Moscow. These included Cabulovce, four miles inside Slovakia from the Polish frontier south of Lupkow pass.

HOPE BEATS BING TO DRAW

Twin Falls, Idaho, Oct. 31 (AP)—Bing Crosby, here for the pheasant hunting season, said he found on his recent trip to England that Bob Hope had beat him to the draw. "I found Hope had libeled me pretty extensively in London and England" Crosby told a reporter. "In the station a cockney circled me three or four times and when I inquired what was up he said 'that 'ope told us you were a little short fat fellow.'"

25,000 Aircraft Flown Across Atlantic Ocean Within Four Years

By HAROLD FREEMAN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Montreal, Oct. 31 —(CP)— Twenty-five thousand aircraft have been flown across the Atlantic from North America within the last four years, in the snowballing development of an idea which was considered impractical when the war began.

The variety of planes flown to the fighting fronts in running up that amazing figure—almost half of it within the last year—range from Mosquitos that make the Newfoundland - Scotland hop in 6½ hours to Liberators which fly regularly from Montreal to North Africa, 3,700 miles non-stop.

Yet the outstanding part of the story of No. 45 (Atlantic Transport) Group, R.A.F., Transport Command is not this conquest of a once-formidable water barrier, but rather the extension of flying routes to the point where the trans-Atlantic hop has become a routine prelude to mightier flights more than half-way around the world.

The story of No. 45 Group is also the story of No. 231 Squadron, the squadron composed largely of the original Atlantic-beaters, who in conjunction with British Overseas Airways, have built up a tremendous ferry service so that the crews who fly the fighting planes to their battle-front destinations can be brought back to their starting point in the shortest possible time.

Return Ferry Service.

Once the trans-Atlantic eastbound flights had become established, the big problem was getting their crews back. To do this quickly, in readiness for further eastward flights, No. 45 Group set up its return ferry service, and within the framework of that service they grouped the top-notch distance flyers of all time. Thus was born

Canadians' Swift Drive Across S. Beveland Is. 'A Superhuman Effort'

By ROSS MUNRO
(CP War Correspondent)

With the 1st Canadian Army, Holland, Oct. 31 — (CP-Cable) — The lightning advance of Canadian troops across South Beveland Island, on the north side of the Schelde estuary, to the Walcheren causeway tonight was described by the Canadian commander on Beveland as "a superhuman effort."

"Right from the Dutch mainland in the struggle up the long East Beveland peninsula, and then over the canal and across the main part of the island these troops have done a superhuman job under extremely difficult conditions," he said in a roadside interview near the town of Goes.

Goes had been liberated by his troops and now was bedecked with huge Netherlands flags and orange bunting, symbol of the Royal House of Holland.

I reached Goes late in the afternoon and went beyond toward the Walcheren causeway on a long straight highway jammed with our trucks and guns streaming westward. Goes is the major town of South Beveland and scarcely was damaged as the fighting swept swiftly past it.

The population was milling around the streets waving orange flags in welcome to the Canadians, and in the main square a batch of collaborators were already lined up and having their heads shaved by people of the resistance movement.

To reach Goes you drive along the highway from the Netherlands mainland which was the axis of the Canadian advance. Five miles east of the town is a 100-yards-wide canal which might have stopped the Canadians for a week.

But Eastern Canada troops stormed over the canal at night in assault boats and French-speaking troops from Quebec moved across on their flank. Then Royal Canadian Engineers built a bridge over the canal.

For 18 hours the sappers worked under mortar and artillery fire but did the job. Later British engineers threw another bridge across the canal.

Supporting weapons were rushed across to aid the infantry as they fought their way right across the island, driving the Germans before them or taking them prisoner. Battalions fanned out through the island to link up with the British beachhead force and by tonight practically all South Beveland had been enveloped by our troops.

INDIAN TROOPS INCREASE THREAT TO CITY OF FORLI

Throw Bridgehead Across the Ronco River Near Meldola

By LYNN HEINZERLING
Associated Press War Correspondent

Rome, Oct. 31 — (AP) — Indian troops of the British 8th Army increased the threat to the German stronghold of Forli astride the Rimini-Bologna highway today by throwing a bridgehead across the Ronco River near Meldola, seven miles to the south.

Allied headquarters announced the foothold was quickly consolidated and extended to a depth of half a mile.

Less than five miles to the southwest Polish troops, who captured the mountain town of Predappio two days ago, ran into strong German positions at Caminato in the hills to the north in the direction of Forli.

Elsewhere on the Italian front activities yesterday were largely limited to local actions.

In the West Coast sector Brazilian troops captured a peak 2,800 feet high against enemy machine-gun fire and other Brazilians occupied Calomini, about 15 miles east of Massa.

Along the Adriatic, 8th Army forces were advancing against only light opposition. The Germans apparently were swinging their line north to a more advantageous anchor somewhere north of Ravenna.

In one local action north of the Bologna-Prato road in Central Italy, American troops of the Allied 5th Army took 100 Germans prisoner.

Weather again restricted bombing operations by the M. A. A. F., which flew slightly more than 400 sorties, attacking communication facilities in the Balkans and in areas behind enemy lines in Italy. Four planes were lost.

Residents Feel Earth Tremors

Canton, N.Y., Oct. 31. (AP)—Residents of Canton and nearby Massena, both of which have felt earth tremors of varying intensity since a sharp shock centring in Cornwall, Ont., last Labor Day, reported they were awakened by another quake today. No damage was noted.

Eye witnesses said buildings were shaken by the tremor, about 4.40 a.m. E.D.T. They related the shock lasted about 10 seconds, shook houses and was accompanied by "a loud, roaring noise".

Several thousand dollars' damage resulted in the September quake.

HALF-WAY MARK NEARLY REACHED IN LOAN DRIVE

Individual Canadians Big Buyers to Send Cumulative Total to $501,469,750

Ottawa, Oct. 31 —(CP)— Ground lost in the last three days of the first week of selling was regained by accumulated weekend results as Canadians purchased $72,585,500 in bonds of the $1,300,000,000 Seventh Victory Loan, it was announced today. This brought the cumulative total to $501,469,750, as compared with $481,244,069 at the same stage in the Sixth Loan. Yesterday's purchases compared with $61,911,500 in the same day of the loan six months ago.

Individual Canadians were big buyers yesterday, with a total of $34,078,250. This brings their cumulative total to $231,746,850 — an average of about $33,300,000, for each day of the loan. In the Sixth Loan the daily average for individual purchasers was $35,700,000, but officials explained this includes a volume of late reports.

"Yesterday's purchases are very satisfying," an official of the National War Finance Committee said. "In one day, we have regained what was lost in the last three days of last week. It, of course, should not be forgotten that there is still $900,000,000 to be bought to equal the record of the Sixth Loan, but I think we may say satisfactory progress is being made and, if the trend continues for the remainder of loan, this Seventh Loan may equal, if not exceed, the all-time high of $1,407,000,000."

The most recent compilation of Canadian Pacific Railway subscriptions showed a total of $5,905,850 of its $8,500,000 quota.

With slightly more than 50 per cent of 49,313 C.P.R. employees already having subscribed, the loan total is now well over 60 per cent of quota.

With little more than one-third of the selling period passed, Montreal Island had reached 28.32 per cent of its mark last night. Total purchases now stand at $80,134,550.

The province of Quebec as a whole was making a better showing. With sales of $19,512,100 in the last 24 hours, it was within 30.83 per cent of its goal with a total of $113,590,450 bonds bought.

The armed forces continued to pull ahead with total subscriptions of $36,558,150, 76 per cent of their final figure of $47,853,200 in the last loan. The army had $19,420,800, 92 per cent of quota, the navy $4,131,200, 86 per cent, and the air force $13,006,150, also 86 per cent.

Camp Borden Leads.

Leading the National army competition was Camp Borden, Ont., with $1,147,550 for 125 per cent of quota. Next were Military District No. 3, Kingston, Ont., 115 per cent, M.D. 12, Regina, 110 per cent, and M.D. 10, Winnipeg, 107 per cent.

BOMBING RAISES JAPANESE NAVAL LOSS TO 60 SHIPS

Three Naval Battles Off Leyte, Samar and Luzon Impose a Crushing Defeat

Pearl Harbor, Oct. 31 — (AP) — High Naval authorities today viewed Japan's still-growing fleet catastrophe off the Philippines — two bomb-blasted cruisers have lifted the toll to 60 — as rendering the enemy impotent at sea for many months, except for suicidal actions in opposing the Allied China-bound offensive.

Three naval battles off Leyte, Samar and Luzon imposed a crushing defeat on all Japan's navy "except two or three more units we can take in our stride," Admiral Halsey told Rembert James, Associated Press War Correspondent, board the U. S. 3rd fleet flagship.

The dogged search of Halsey's carrier planes uncovered a previously-damaged heavy cruiser and two other cruisers in the Manila area Saturday and hits were scored on all three, Admiral Nimitz disclosed in a communique. The damaged warship probably sank and 1,000-pound bombs damaged the other two, adding them to the previously-announced total of 58 sunk or crippled.

Halsey, pointing up Japan's grave naval situation, said what enemy cripples managed to elude his planes and reach repair yards must wait their turn inasmuch as the enemy's repair facilities were "taxed to the utmost before this catastrophic beating they took."

The three cruisers were attacked during a rising air offensive against big Luzon Island, the next stepping stone 15 miles north of Gen. MacArthur's invasion army on Samar.

The 3rd fleet planes roared on to Manila and increased Japan's shortage of escort warships despite efforts by swarming enemy planes to block the raiders' path at the south end of Luzon and to attack the aircraft carriers. Forty-five enemy planes were shot down in Southern Luzon, at least 12 were wrecked on Manila fields, 12 more were shot down over the carriers Saturday and two more Sunday.

The toll in cruisers sunk or damaged since submarines opened the first phase of the three naval battles Oct. 22 now stands at 24. That makes the cruiser category the highest of any in the still-incomplete toll of 60 enemy warships announced.

A Japanese oil tanker was hit by a 1,000-pound bomb at Manila.

West of invaded Leyte, other carrier planes Saturday and Sunday shot down 19 enemy planes and destroyed three coastal cargo vessels.

PUT LIGHTED CIGARETTES IN STUFFED BUFFALO'S MOUTH

Buffalo, N.Y., Oct. 31 (AP)—The stuffed buffalo in the New York Central Railroad terminal weathered five years of admiration but was back in the museum of science today, its tail pulled off and whiskers pulled out. The railroad said the animal was removed because "travellers were putting lighted cigarettes in its mouth, causing a fire hazard."

But the excitement was too much. Mrs. Hagins died last night, apparently of a heart attack, just before the film started.

18 Months Needed To Beat Japs After Hitler's Downfall

Churchill Asks Extension Of Parliament for Year

By ALEX H. SINGLETON, AP STAFF WRITER

London, Oct. 31 —(AP)— Prime Minister Churchill, urging pre-victory retention of Britain's war-born coalition government and nine-year parliament, cautioned the House of Commons today that war against Germany might last into next summer and against Japan until the end of 1946.

In terms of caution he held out some hope that "political convulsions in Germany may bring the war to a speedy end at any time."

But, in almost the same breath, he warned that against that possibility "must be set the iron control of German life in all its forms including the army which has been established by Hitler's storm troops and secret police."

"This," said Mr. Churchill, "exceeds anything previously known among men."

Saying that the present coalition government should "not be broken before Nazism is broken," the Prime Minister declared at one point that "I certainly would not predict—still less guarantee—the end of the war before the end of the spring or even before we reach early summer. It may come earlier, and no will rejoice more than I if it should."

At another point, he asserted:

"On military grounds alone it would not be prudent to assume that a shorter period than 18 months after the destruction of Hitler will be required for the final destruction of the Japanese will and capacity to fight."

Likely to Carry.

There were immediate indications the House would string along with Mr. Churchill. Arthur Greenwood, prominent in the Labor Party's councils, endorsed extension of prolongation of parliament for a year, but he served notice the Churchill Government would not be free from controversy in coming months.

Mr. Greenwood also made it clear Labor's ranks would oppose extension of the coalition government until Japan was defeated. He argued it would be against national interest to prolong parliament "until the whole of this desperate struggle is tied up."

Mr. Churchill touched only briefly upon military operations now underway.

In Holland, he said "a great deal of work has to be done to improve the ports and build up supplies and concentrate forward the ever growing Allied army."

In Italy, he conceded the fighting "is also of the most obstinate character and the weather has broken."

He found a brighter situation on the eastern front where he declared: "immense successes have rewarded the strenuous Russian military efforts and skilful Russian and Allied diplomacy."

Urging qualified extension of Britain's nine-year parliament for another year, he said that "roughly speaking there is no likelihood of a general election for from seven to nine months from now," and warned that "those who force such a disaster would take upon themselves immense responsibility."

"It seems to me," said Mr. Churchill, "that unless all political parties resolve to maintain the present coalition until the Japanese are defeated, we must look to the termination of the war against Nazism as a pointer which will fix the date of the general election."

No More than Guess

"Any attempt to estimate the date when the war with Germany can be officially declared over can be no more than a guess," Mr. Churchill said as he called the extension bill to the floor.

At the same time, however, he said "it would seem that roughly speaking there is no likelihood of a general election for from seven to eight months from now."

"I do not place any dependence on a political uprising in Germany," he added.

"I certainly could not predict — still less guarantee—the end of the German war before the end of the spring or even before we reach early summer. It may come earlier, and no one will rejoice more than I if it should."

Expect Guerilla Warfare

In estimating the difficulty of determining when the war might shift from organized resistance to the guerilla stage, he said he was "confident that all organized parties will see that business through to the very end."

As he called the measure to the floor, the Prime Minister said that various parties in coalition government would be holding conferences before Christmas and "while one can not forecast what will occur, the possibility that a desire for return to the party system will be strongly expressed cannot be excluded."

"On military grounds," he said, "it seems difficult to believe that the war could be ended before Christmas or even before Easter although many high military authorities with every means of forming an accurate judgment have expressed themselves more hopefully."

Although not anticipating any large degree of trouble in the matter of the destruction of property, Chief Constable R. W. Probert today deputized several additional special constables to assist in the policing of city streets today when the Hallowe'en pranksters will be out in full force.

"With the Kinsmen Hallowe'en parties at the Y.M.C.A. and armouries the smaller children will have ample entertainment and we do not anticipate any large degree of oldtime Hallowe'en activities. However, in order to safeguard property additional special constables will patrol the outlying sections of the city as well as the business section today thus leaving the regular force to continue with their routine duties," stated Chief Probert as he urged a safe and sane Hallowe'en for all.

Club Personnel Assigned Duties For Hallowe'en

Designation of club personnel to their various duties at the "Y" and at the Armouries for the Kinsmen Shell-Out party this evening occupied the major part of the program at the regular Kinsmen club dinner meeting held at the Quinte Monday evening.

With experience of last year's shell-out party under their belts, Kinsmen this year have ironed out any small difficulties and a well-rounded program, efficiently conducted, program offering fun for all youngsters on Hallowe'en is assured for this evening. Children up to grade four will congregate at the "Y", while their older brothers and sisters will convene at the Armouries.

Program at Monday night's Kinsmen meeting differed considerably from the ordinary in that instead of one guest speaker there were three on hand with varied topics at their command. The three guest speakers were members of the local Columbian Squires junior club, who in their program emphasize public speaking.

Introducing the three young orators was Tommy Mascaro Jr. who with that ease of manner, which designates the accomplished speaker efficiently introduced his "proteges" to the club members. First of the three boys to speak was Boyd Upper who spoke on "Canada", while "Teddy" Boyle spoke on Marshal Tito, leader of guerilla forces in Yugoslavia who have done much to interfere with German rule in the Balkans. Final speaker of the evening was John Doyle, who in his talk on Argentina outlined some of the more important reasons why that Latin American nation apparently fails to agree in international relations with many of her sister countries. Thanks of the club to the boys was expressed by Bryson Reid.

President Matt Currie presided over the meeting with Frank Lang making a report on the recent Kinsmen executive meeting, while J. E. Shortt outlined his 'Shell-Out' party program for tonight at the "Y". Reference was made by President "Matt" to the nearing of election time in the club, indicating that good officers were needed for a successful club. Phil Huddleston acted as pianist for the club sing song with Ernie Coleborne as song leader and Jim Elliott sergeant at arms.

Robomb, Which Fell in South England, On Exhibition Front St., Belleville Thurs. Nov. 2nd From Noon to 2 P.M.

Hitler Secret Weapon, Reconstructed, Assembled From Salvaged Parts

Previously on display in Montreal and eastern Ontario centres, a German robomb, an actual bomb that fell in the southern part of England during the summer will be displayed in Belleville on Thursday afternoon in the interests of the Seventh Victory Loan, it was announced today by local campaign officials.

The robomb, reconstructed from salvaged parts through the efforts and skill of the newly formed Royal Canadian Electrical and Maintenance Engineers, Ottawa Company, will arrive in Belleville at noon on Thursday and will be set up at the Front Street entrance of Campbell Street, where shoppers may view the machine which caused so much damage in England since D-Day. It will be on display from 12 o'clock until two.

The bomb is about twenty feet long and has a wing spread of approximately 16 feet. Without its explosive load it weighs slightly under two tons. It will arrive in Belleville by truck, then be assembled and placed on display in Campbell street for two hours before passing on to another centre.

Victory Loan officials invite all residents of Belleville and district to examine the "thing", as the people of England called the robomb, during its short stay in the city. It is expected personnel travelling with the robomb will answer questions pertaining to the actual operation of the mechanical bombs, over 2,300 of which fell in the greater London area in the period following D-Day.

Tribute to Late Maj. Ivan Martin Is Paid at Memorial Service Held in St. Paul's Church, Stirling

Stirling, Oct. 31 —(Special)— On Sunday, October 29th., at three o'clock in St. Paul's United Church, the memorial service in memory of Major Ivan Harold Martin of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders of Canada (P.L.), who was killed in action in France, Aug. 21st., was held. The church was very beautiful with white, gold and mauve chrysanthemums, flags, and on the communion table, draped with the Union Jack, was Ivan's photo and red roses. Rev. David Gray, minister of St. Paul's, was in charge of the service, assisted by Rev. Dr. James Semple of Belleville and Rev. E. W. Rowland of Peterborough. Besides the full choir, Mr. Albert Baldwin of Batawa, sang a solo, "Beyond the Dawn," Sanderson, with Mr. G. Clute at the console of the organ throughout.

Major Ivan Martin

Veterans and Reserves Attend.

First Great War veterans, members of the Canadian Legion of this district and the Hastings and Prince Edward Reserve Army marched to the church and sat in a body to the left of the mourners. The organ prelude was the "Marching Song" of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders of Canada, followed by the "Funeral March," (Chopin). The Rev. David Gray opened the impressive service with prayer followed by the hymn "These Things Shall Be." Rev. Mr. Rowland read the Scripture Lesson: Revelation 21:1-7; 23-27.

In prayer Dr. Semple brought out the assurance that "no matter how great our needs they can be met by Jesus Christ Our Lord, and as we go into His Holy Presence, we thank Thee, that Thou knowest all about us. From everlasting to everlasting Thou art God. The changing years have no effect upon Thee. Thou art the same yesterday, today and forever. We think of the contribution the young people are making who have laid down their lives in a cause which they know is right. As we think of those who died for a better world we think, may not have died in vain. May the new world, they see in their vision be a reality." The prayer was followed by the Lord's Prayer in unison and the hymn "O Lord of Life, Where'er They Be."

The Rev. D. Gray spoke briefly making reference to the fact that Major Martin was the fourth generation to serve in St. Paul's United Church faithfully and well.

Rev. E. W. Rowland's Tribute.

The address of the memorial service was given by Rev. Mr. Rowland who knew Major Martin, his parents and grandparents well during his years in Stirling as minister of St. Paul's. He asked those present to think with him on the words in the 16th chapter of St. Matthew at the 21st verse: "Then said Jesus unto His disciples, if any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow Me. For whosoever will save his life shall lose it: and whosoever will lose his life for My sake shall find it." Jesus went about doing good striving to show the Father's love and goodness.

"Jesus went out with a song in his heart knowing that no salvation could come to the world without Calvary and the Cross. Men and women have met their hour of trial inspired by the great example. Many are passing through that experience, on these days—Shall I live simply to get by or shall I stand upon my feet and fight for the things that are good and right and noble? Shall I shut my eyes to wrong or shall I go out and strive for what is right?

Followed Great Example.

"In 1939 Ivan Martin decided to follow the great example with an understanding far beyond his years. He knew that honor could not stand unless he enlisted. Time passes quickly and Ivan went overseas and in a short time he came home to take up instruction work as chief instructor at The Canadian Battle Drill Training Centre at Vernon, B.C., which he did nobly and well. His men not only served him but loved him as he would not ask his men to do anything he would not do himself.

In Battle of Normandy.

"He took part in the battle of Normandy in the Caen-Falaise sector, particularly in the taking of the town of St. Lambert, when his unit became the spearhead of that drive which brought a brilliant and noble victory at a great cost. A few days before his passing a brother officer was in conversation with him and pleaded with him not to take undue risks, but, with a smile, he said "I have been lucky the past few days and I feel I am immune." Gladly he laid his life down and I pray that the sacrifice might not be in vain.

He Played the Game.

"As a lad he played the game. His courtesy was spontaneous. In a letter he wrote to his lad, he urged that he be fair, honest and tolerant with his playmates.

"I cannot close without making an appeal to the youth of this gathering and to the youth of the land: love your God and serve Him wholeheartedly with understanding—It is the only way to true happiness. Be loyal and love your King and Country and Empire. Hold fast to your ideals and know the value of moral living. Never surrender that heritage. Keep faith with the dead, the glorious dead, yourself, your country and may the peace of God and the Grace of the Lord Jesus Christ attend you all."

Following Mr. Rowland's address all joined in the hymn "O Valiant Hearts." The military ceremony followed with the bugle sounding. Everyone stood at attention for the Last Post and two minutes' silence, Reveille and the National Anthem and benediction.

Hallowe'en Party Will Be Used To Assist Loan

It may be rather difficult for the man in the street to see the connection between the observance of Hallowe'en and the Seventh Victory Loan, but the public relations committee of the county loan organization have struck upon an idea by which goblins and witches will assist in making parents Victory Loan conscious.

Through co-operation of the local Kinsmen club who this evening are staging their annual shell-out party for the kiddies, a special form will be enclosed in each of the bags of candy that are to be distributed. This slip of paper actually is an entry form for a lucky draw, the winner of which will receive a ten dollar war savings certificate.

Two questions will appear on the special form. These are "what is the slogan of the Seventh Victory Loan" and "What is your suggestion for a slogan for the Eighth Victory Loan." Victory Loan public relations committee stress that this is not a slogan contest but rather a lucky draw contest.

The draw will be held on Saturday afternoon at the Belleville theatre with Mayor Harry Rollins scheduled to draw the ticket. The lucky winner will then receive a ten dollar certificate.

25,000 AIRCRAFT

No. 231 Squadron—a single squadron which now is so large it ranks as one of the great air passenger, freight and mail services of the world.

As many as 100 trans-Atlantic delivery planes have been started on their way out of the Montreal base and its out-stations in a single day. That scale of operation is possible because 231 Squadron has overcome the problem of getting entire air crews back to their starting base in record time, so that as fast as planes are ready for the hop there are crews ready to fly them.

To do that job, 231 Squadron now operates a shuttle service to Labrador, Newfoundland and Elizabeth City, N.C.; to Bermuda, Nassau, Trinidad, Brazil and across the South Atlantic to the Gold Coast; a daily service through the Azores to French Morocco and thence to Cairo; and a flying boat service to Legos and Freetown in West Africa.

Crews Return Quickly.

Linked with all that is the return ferry service of British Overseas Airways, bringing crews back from the United Kingdom.

The result of the inter-locking service is that ferrying crews flying to the Azores are back in Montreal 21 hours after they set out; crews to Rabat, French Morocco, are back in 45 hours after their take-off from Dorval Airport; crews flying big fellows to India are back at their starting point in six or seven days after 17,000 miles of flying.

Not content with this achievement in an eastward direction, No. 45 Group is turning its eyes westward. It is an open secret that survey flights are being completed and that soon aircraft from Montreal will be flying direct to California and thence to Australia via Honolulu and New Zealand.

Canadians Help Free 100 French, Bomb Their Prison

By ALAN RANDAL
Canadian Press War Correspondent

With the Canadians in the R.A.F., Oct. 31 (CP Cable)—Three Canadian airmen, now it can be told, had a hand in one of the most amazing jail breaks in history. It saved at least 100 Frenchmen, held by the Germans in occupied France, from almost certain death. For security reasons, I am unable to give the names of the Canadians.

Three Mosquito bomber squadrons—an Australian, a New Zealand and an R.A.F. squadron—carried out the daring exploit.

Group Capt. P. C. Pickard, D.S.O. and two Bars, D.F.C., who figured so largely in "F for Freddie" in the motion picture "Target for Tonight," was lost on the operation along with his navigator, Flt. Lt. J. A. Broadley, D.S.O., D.F.C., D.F.M.

Briefing instructions for the operation said: "Mosquitos are to attack the prison at Amiens in an attempt to assist more than 100 prisoners to escape These prisoners are Allied Patriots condemned to death."

Some of these Frenchmen had been condemned to death for assisting Allied airmen to escape after being brought down in France.

Hop Over Prison Wall

In the first flight was a Canadian Warrant Officer Navigator, who said: "Dropping to low level, we came in and dropped our bombs and hopped over the prison wall at a height of 18 feet. Of course we could not see the results, for we were well away when they went off."

Another Canadian Warrant Officer flew in the New Zealand squadron in the second flight. He said: "We cleared the northern wall by 20 feet and reconnaissance showed afterwards we had made a fine breach."

Flying over the prison during the attack was a Mosquito of the R.A.F. film unit. Its crew saw breaches in the wall and the ends of the buildings broken and prisoners running out through the breaches, and Germans lying on the ground. Two Mosquitos were lost, and two of the Typhoon fighter escort.

Women Speed Mail To Boys Overseas

Ottawa (CP) — It's women's hands that sort the four and a half million letters sent monthly to the members of Canada's armed forces overseas and these same women's hands now are busy speeding a flood of Christmas mail which the Post Office Department reports is the heaviest military mail volume on record.

The Canadian Women's Army Corps and the Royal Canadian Air Force (Women's Division) have detailed extra staffs to work with other girls in uniform at the Base Post Office and with the Canadian Postal Corps.

Where in past years the sorting cases and opening tables have been staffed by men, this year the service women are handling the letter mail, preparing unit labels for parcel bags, redirecting incorrectly addressed letters and parcels, helping in the "parcel hospital", sorting news and handling mail for prisoners of war in the internment section.

Oysters Get Through

Men, however, still have charge of the heavy job of sorting gift parcels by unit.

At the "parcel hospital"—otherwise known as the repair section—the girls give first aid to damaged Christmas boxes. Out of one thin cardboard box a sharp oyster shell was protruding—someone had planned an oyster supper for a soldier up the line without taking pains to see the shellfish survived the trip. After repacking, the oysters went on their way.

In the 1943 Christmas season the Canadian Postal Corps forwarded nearly 8,000,000 letters, 10,000,000 pounds of parcel post, more than 2,000,000 pounds of tobacco gifts and 308,400 pounds of newspapers.

"This Christmas," a Canadian Postal Corps officer said, "we will work in shifts 24 hours a day until the parcel mail is cleared away. If citizens do their part, we can be depended upon to give them the service they expect, and our men overseas will not be disapopinted Christmas Day. All that remains is for the public to mail early."

WHY WE OFFER YOU THIS OPPORTUNITY

21 years ago, a young Canadian druggist who believed that actual use of a good product offered the most convincing proof of its merits, suggested to United Drug Company, the parent house of Rexall Drug Stores that instead of advertising, they inaugurate the Rexall 1c Sale. Since that time, this unusual sale has been offered twice a year to REXALL Stores throughout Canada.

Through this sale, money that would otherwise go into press and radio advertising is used to your direct advantage. For the price of one, plus one cent, you receive two regular full size packages of high quality REXALL merchandise.

In other words — YOU save money — WE gain friends.

Hallowe'en

Again Hallowe'en has come with its infectious appeal to the young and even to their elders. Folklore lingers on in the world in the garb and actions of "sprites" or goblins who are really very nice little boys and girls and sometimes their elders too for that matter. On such a night there is a great deal of fun and hilarity, there are parties and the imagination runs free.

This merriment is a source of much true pleasure and it has also its value in cultivating the sense of imagination. A masquerader really gets something valuable out of his or her antics on the night of October 31st.

Hallowe'en has a background of the great revels formerly held on the night before All Saints' Day. In early times the mind of man ran riot in conjuring up the doings of spirits, untrammeled on the eve of All Saints' Day. In fact these revels go back deep into history even before the rise of Christianity. As on others of our festive occasions some of the accompaniments of the celebration date from the early days of Rome and other nations.

The great solemnity of All Saints' Day and of the next day All Souls' Day naturally intensified the general beliefs of paganism which were gathered into the festivities of the night before these church festivals.

Today that aspect has been lost but the imagination lingers on and it is so easy for a youngster to pretend to be a witch or strange creature on the night before November 1st.

In this present age much of the background of the festive occasion has disappeared but there is enough left to make a night of merriment and hilarity. Dressing up as a spirit, or masquerading in any other form attracts a great deal of attention even in a scientific world, as manhood and womanhood and childhood alike are incurably imaginative and love to sport and play. All this fun is so innocent that one can almost hesitate to mention that sometimes some older celebrants cause damage or injury in their waywardness or thoughtlessness. They should enjoy all the innocent pleasure and fun they can on such an occasion for to misbehave or be a roudy on such a night is only a step that tends to rob the young of their heritage, the right to frolic and play as witches or what you will on Hallowe'en.

Difference in Men

Goebbels as a forecaster has been hopelessly out of march with events because he has been connected with a system which is in no way associated with truth and fact. The other night he said that though German "fronts in the east, west and south are exposed to tremendous pressure, we have not unfounded hopes they will take concrete form shortly." But what ground have the German people for believing that when so many things Goebbels has spoken have proved to be wrong or false because they were upholding a regime that is going to the wall of defeat?

Germans know that the Allies have crossed into Germany in places and Goebbels has not explained these facts after the false prophecies and predictions he made long ago when the great tide had not turned so sharply against the enemy as it has since turned. Goebbels has been hard hit in his department for facts speak volumes against his prophecies. This last speech of his as plenipotentiary for total mobilization sounded a weak note as he remarked that "the Germans intend to go on fighting until a peace is possible which guarantees our people's right to live, their national independence and the expansion of the basis of their existence," for which things he says that the Germans "will fight however bitter and tormenting events of the war may be sometimes." Nothing, he said, could alter that decision not even the fact that "no slackening of the enemy offensive from the west, east and southeast and south can be felt up to today." That is confession enough of Germany's dire straits.

Contrast with this speech which tries to bolster up Nazi morale the words last week of Prime Minister Churchill when he made the graphic remark that "we believe we are in the last lap" of the European war. The careful but confident view of Mr. Churchill as spoken here should make the enemy realize that Mr. Churchill is that confident figure who knows that the United Nations are winning. Then too Churchill handed to the Hitlerites a blow at the hope that Hitler has of something turning up to get him out of the mess he is in. It was a solemn warning, "Let all hope die in German breasts that there will be the slightest division or weakening among the forces that are crowding in upon them and will crush the life out of their resistance."

Goebbels in deadly and frantic earnest tries to make his case look well. How little will be his success may be apparent. But Mr. Churchill with all the weight of carrying on the war against the Hun is still able to refer humorously to his task as "a wandering minstrel of diplomacy." The wandering minstrel has been achieving great results while "wandering" as he calls it. He has figured in a series of great events to which he has contributed his sage advice and spirit of confidence—a sign that the only end of such a road can be victory with the crushing of the enemy a certain goal.

The Patriots and Those Others

Fortunately law-abiding people, the vast majority even under the Hun oppression have had only one thought, to be true, to strike the enemy if possible and to keep alive their national spirt. But somehow there were also some who co-operated with the enemy, and now liberation of their country can mean but one thing, being brought to justice or flight along with the Huns.

In fear and trembling those who have co-operated are living. They have made their names by-words in their own country. And can they trust to the enemy to guard them? For what does the Hun care?

But they fortunately are the very few. The vast majorities faced the domination and oppression of the enemy, remained loyal, and though many lost their lives from the actions of the enemy, they had their reward in being permitted to lose their lives in the cause of their country, but what shall men say of those who "dealt" with the enemy, when their country was in mortal danger? They will receive the reward of their offences and leave blasted names behind them.

Those patriots who have lived through the years of the occupation have the great satisfaction of having suffered for love of country and of seeing their freedom restored.

Like Nazi, Like Jap

If Jap and German would take a moment to look at events in the other's long list of defeats and disasters piling up with a deadly iteration, they would see real significance in the picture that presents itself in the world today. The Germans are losing. Their Axis ally the Japs are losing at the same time. Why? The avalanche of Allied power is caught up with the gangsters. Then there is another reason which no German or Jap can admit, they are going down to defeat because they are evil in the sight of the mass of humanity. The enemy are the lawless, the law-breakers who are being rounded up. The sense of humankind for true and just dealing among nations is so strong among the United Nations who represent the great body of mankind, that the Hun and the Jap cannot win. They are doomed in the very nature of their cause.

It is a great proof of the scene of mankind to practical idealism in international affairs that the vast majority of mankind want to outlaw the criminal in international affairs. Only the criminal Huns and Nipponese would deny it.

HALLOWE'EN

Tonight, the Holy Saints look down
Upon the children of the town
And watch them, garbed and masked once more,
Go meekly begging, door to door,
Preserving in a world unclean
The pure delight of Hallowe'en.

Tonight, till childhood falls asleep,
The Saints their vigil long will keep,
And smile as little ghosts in white
Go round about the old to fright,
And ring at bells and run away
As if this world were meant for play.

But adult, land and sky and sea,
With peril grave will dreadful be;
For men must battle still today
For childhood"s right to romp in play;
And die, that Hallowe'en may know
A jack o'lantern's cheery glow.

Oh Holy Saints, look down we pray
On all good men of earth today;
Safe keep them through their darkest hours
Till peace and victory are ours.
And grant to all a world serene
Made fit for many a Hallowe'en.

GUINEA PIGS

The name of the guinea pig is one of the unsolved riddles of etymology.

The little rodent is a native of South America, not Africa.

Several plausible theories have been advanced to account for the name.

The most popular theory holds that "guinea" here is merely a corruption of "Guiana," which arose from the fact that early writers confused Guiana in South America with Guinea in Africa.

But there is positive evidence that in 1607 this animal was called "cony pig" or "pig cony." This led to the second theory, namely, that "guinea" in the name does not refer to the region in Africa, but was applied, as it seems to have been in several other instances, to designate an animal that came from an unknown country. A fourth theory suggests that guinea pig may have been so named because it was supposed to resemble the young of the Guinea hog. Still another theory is that this rodent was first carried from South America to England by "Guineamen" engaged in the slave trade.

Scientists believe the domestic guinea pig, and in a sense it is a domestic animal, is descended from the "restless cavy" of Guiana and Brazil.

At any rate, it is a stout, short-tailed, short-legged cavy about seven inches long. All sorts of fancy types have been developed by selective breeding.

Because guinea pigs have a life cycle of only about four years and produce young five or six times a year they have been widely used in biological experiments of various kinds, although for this purpose guinea pigs have been largely supplanted by rats and mice. Any subject of a scientific experiment is often referred to as "guinea pig."

Baby guinea pigs are unique in that they possess their second set of teeth at birth and are able to nibble grain when only 48 hours old.

It is said that a guinea pig will live about as long without water as with it. Going a long time without water, however, is a characteristic of most rodents.

Ellis Parker Butler's sketch entitled "Pigs Is Pigs," published in 1906, deals with the amazing fecundity of guinea pigs.

Flying Bomb Hits Crowded Hotel In Southern England

London, Oct. 31 —(CP)— A crowded hotel was demolished by a flying bomb in southern England early today and searchers combed the ruins for a number of guests, some of whom were believed to be children.

Houses nearby were blasted and windows were blown out of an orphanage from which all children had been removed three months ago.

Anti-aircraft guns threw up a terrific barrage as the bombs came in from the North Sea. Thousands of families in East Anglia took shelter as the ground shook from the concussion of the guns. Several bombs were blown up in flight.

500 WALNUTS HARVESTED

Greek Guerillas Nearing Border Of Yugoslavia

Rome, Oct. 31 — (AP) — Greek guerillas operating with British troops have captured Arnissa, about 40 miles north of Kozane and only seven miles from the southern border of Yugoslavia, Allied Headquarters announced today.

The German garrison was wiped out at Arnissa, on one of the main escape routes for the Nazis fleeing from the Allies in Northern Greece.

Special praise for the guerilla forces was continued in the Allied headquarters communique, which said the Greek fighters were "well represented" in the closely coordinated attack that liberated Kozane, capture of which was announced yesterday.

Britain to Issue No Nat. War Bonds After November 6

London, Oct. 31 —(CP)— Chancellor of the Exchequer Sir John Anderson announced in the House of Commons today the sale of national war bonds would be discontinued after Nov. 6.

Sir John said that, from Nov. 7 and until further notice, a new security known as the 1¾ per cent exchequer bond 1950 would be on sale. The bond is to be issued at par and repayable at par Feb. 15, 1950.

He said Britain's total expenditures during five years of the war up to Sept. 2 were £24,000,000,000 ($112,000,000,000) of which war services totalled £20,000,000,000.

Of the total expenditures, £11,234,000,000 was raised by taxation and other revenue, and £12,650,000,000 by borrowing.

The total national debt as of Sept. 30, he said, was approximately $31,200,000,000, an increase of £12,800,000,000 since the beginning of the war.

NOT CHOCOLATE BUT WHAT GOES WITH IT.

Some physicians and authors of standard textbooks on dermatology believe chocolate is one of the innumerable causes or contributing factors of acne—excessively oily skin, blackheads and pimples.

I, Doc Brady, no specialist forsooth, just a plodding door-to-door practitioner toting his long, low rakish black bag on every call do not believe chocolate per se should be held responsible for any such skin trouble. I believe it is rather what goes with the chocolate that young persons with acne must go easy on, if not eschew.

Of course you know what I mean. The delectable refined carbohydrates, easy to eat even when you're not at all hungry and certainly do not need food. Yes, yes, that's it—chocolate ice cream, chocolate pudding, chocolate cake, chocolate fudge, chocolate candy.

Remember, now, kids, I'm as fond of most of these chocolate flavored or coated confections as you are. Why, on very warm days I get a considerable pleasure of a sort from just resisting the impulse to gobble one of those chocolate coated hunks of chocolate ice cream frozen on a stick, because I know I get too darn much refined carbohydrate in my everyday diet.

Now that, I believe, has a good deal to do with the development of pimples on the skin. Excessive daily intake of refined carbohydrate (starch, sugar).

Even if a young person never indulged in any of the extra delicacies or treats mentioned, he or she would probably still get more refined carbohydrate than is required to maintain growth, strength and warmth, from white bread and other breadstuffs, cakes, pastries etc., made of refined white flour, and from white sugar and refined syrups or so-called molasses and so-called "brown sugar", which is not by any means the same thing as the brown sugar that was a staple in the days before the Civil War.

It is not that refined flour, pure starch or refined white or "brown" sugar is itself harmful in any way. But if you get as much as half of your daily calories from these items, it is practically certain that you will not get enough minerals and vitamins from other foods to meet your daily requirements. In other words the more you depend on the quick calories in refined carbohydrates the more likely you are to suffer from nutritional deficiency—and in my crude opinion the pimples of youth may be a manifestation of just such nutritional deficiency.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Baby's Bottle

How long should baby's bottle be warmed? I couldn't find it in your baby book.

(Mrs. R. V. M.)

Answer—Whatever the baby takes from the bottle should be warmed to approximately the warmth of the body until the baby is a year old. If the baby has an occasional bottle feeding after that the food may be at ordinary room temperature. A normal, well trained baby should be weaned fom the bottle at the age of one year, and take all liquid food from cup or spoon after the age of 13 months.

Blood Is Weak

Refused as Red Cross blood bank donor because my blood was found too low in hemoglobin. How can I correct this?

(Miss E. H. F.)

Answer—You owe it to yourself to have the benefit of a thorough examination, which may reveal the cause of your anemia. Hemoglobin is the coloring-matter in the red blood corpuscles—if it is deficient you have anemia, the blood cannot carry oxygen to the working cells and organs, and your vitality and functional efficiency will inevitably remain below par. Send ten cents and stamped envelope bearing your address, for booklet "Blood and Health".

Fashion Flashes

No wardrobe seems to be complete without at least one dress with a touch of glitter. A black crepe frock has a halter scarf of black net embroidered with varisized stars of royal blue sequins which is drawn through bodice slits, shirred below the waist and extends into panels either side of the skirt.

A dress to live in throughout the day is a simply cut model of sheer woolen in grey with high round neckline and appliques of felt flowers in rust and brown. With it there is a short boxy coat of rust woolen with brown nutria tuxedo revers.

It isn't easy to resist the new hats, especially such models as gold felt that is gilt embroidered and overlaid with ruchings of brown tulle.

Nice alternative to carrying an evening bag when dancing is a belt pocket. We saw one in pink satin, pouch-shaped, that is slung through the belt to lie flat on one hip. It is edged with looped black fringe and has large jet embroider-motifs.

Really lovely evening frocks for holiday dances are shown in the junior miss departments. A slim black crepe skirt that rises to a high point above the waist in front is topped with rhinestone-spattered white lace. Unbelted waistline, short sleeves.

NEW BEAUTY in this season's hats is exemplified in a shallow, flat breton made entirely of white ermine, the brim lined in black velvet.

IVANHOE W.M.S.

On Thursday last a pot luck dinner and quilting was held at the parsonage. After a most delicious dinner the president called everyone to order and the meeting opened with Mrs. S. Prest leading in prayer. Business was discussed and an invitation was extended for everyone who could to attend Hazzard's Fifth Anniversary of its W.M.S.

Corresponding Secretary was asked to send Christmas greetings to H/Capt. S. A. R. Delve on behalf of the Society. He used to be the pastor at Beulah United Church, but is now serving overseas as a chaplain.

Twenty members and two visitors were present. Group Leader No. 2 Mrs. S. Twiddy then took charge of the remaining part of the meeting. The theme was "Love Thy Neighbor". A reading "If We Knew", was given by Miss Doris Twiddy and a reading of "Our Duty to our Neighbour" was contributed by Mrs. Twiddy and Mrs. Clifford Mitz. Mrs. B. Reid led in prayer. Mrs. N. Thomilson and Mrs. A. Reid gave readings on the Watch Tower. Mrs. Will Shaw, a member of one of our neighboring societies spoke briefly and Mrs. B. Reid gave a very interesting reading.

Mrs. Ray then moved a vote of thanks to Mrs. Wagar for her kind hospitality and the meeting closed with the Mizpah benediction. Dinner money amounted to $6.35. Collection $1.25.

H. Clifford Argue Re-elected For Fourth Consecutive Year President Lawn Bowling Club

Concerted Effort Will be Made for New Members in 1945

For the fourth consecutive year H. Clifford Argue was named president of the Belleville Lawn Bowling Club As a matter of fact the entire lawn bowling club executive committee was returned to office at the annual meeting and election of officers held in the Chamber of Commerce Building Monday evening. Before unanimously re-electing President "Cliff" Argue for a "fourth term" the members of the club extended to him their appreciation for the untiring efforts put forth by him, especialy in the introduction and continuation of the club's annual Corbin Gold Cup tournament. Expressions of thanks and appreciation were also tendered Mr. L. E. McLean, donor of the Corbin Gold Cup for his continued interest in making this tournament outstanding in Canadian lawn bowling circles.

Executive reports from the 1944 season disclosed the club concluded a successful season, both on the greens and in a financial manner. However, a concerted movement towards the increasing of the club's membership will be a paramount phase in the club's 1945 program. Last season the club had but 57 male members, all of whom will be requested to introduce at least one new member in 1945. "After all the Belleville Lawn Bowling Club is a civic or community group open to all walks of life and it should be our duty to welcome new and novice bowlers," stated C. R. Clapp during a general discussion when the question was approached as to the best policy to increase the club membership and at the same time interest younger men in the pastime.

May Enlarge grounds

President Argue reported on the proposed program drafted by the 1944 executive, that included the enlargement of the present grounds on Yeomans Street in order to provide better bowling facilities, especially along the north side of the greens. Mr. Argue expressed regret in the fact that only one club championship was completed in 1944, that being the men's singles won by Raymond Zufelt with Robt. Dewar as runner up. "However, with new members in our midst next year we would be well advised to commence our club championships earlier and include all members in the various groups," suggested Mr. Argue. Discussions regarding a better system for the completion of the club championships another year were heard and the matter referred back to the 1945 executive. President Argue asked for a vote of appreciation to the ladies' group for their splendid co-operation in making the Corbin Gold Cup tournament, and other district matches, the success enjoyed. Harvey Stewart called for a unanimous vote, that was spontaneous in response. Considerable club business was heard and completed before the annual election of officers became the order of the night.

The officers of the Belleville Lawn Bowling Club for the year 1945 are as follows:

President: H. Clifford Argue.
Vice-President: Ab Wonnacott.
Secretary: M. J. Vanner.
Treasurer: H. W. Cross.
Games Chairman: R. Zufelt.
Greens Chairman—Col. Bonisteel.
Vice Chairman: M. P. Duff.
Membership Chairman: Ray Zufelt.
Executive Committee: H. W. Hanton, E. W. Vanner, Elgin Ford, Geo. Pauley, H. D. Row and D. C. Boyd.

TROUBLE SHOOTER

When it comes to aiming his wrestling guns at ring ruffians, Pierre DeGlane, the popular Montreal grappler, is the No. 1 trouble shooter in the business and delights in mixing matters with villainous ringmen. However, at the Hume Arena tomorrow night DeGlane runs into one of wrestling's most unorthodox wrestlers — Dr. Len Hall, the Hollywood ring villain. Hall boasts he has no ring scruples whatsoever and will stoop to any low degree in order to win. With this thought in mind tomorrow night's main bout should prove interesting from all possible angles.

To open the show Al Dunlop meets Joe Christie while Tom Collins takes on Babe Zaharias, the Salt Lake City badman.

ADAMS, DAY SEEM TO HAVE FOUND SCORING RECIPE

Score Two Touchdowns in Second Half to Clinch Victory

By The Canadian Press

Early skirmishing in the National Hockey League's fifth wartime campaign indicates that at least two coaches — Jack Adams of Detroit Red Wings and Clarence (Happy) Day of Toronto Maple Leafs — have found a successful recipe for a high-scoring forward line.

Both put a promising young player on a line with two veterans and the initial results have been gratifying to the hockey faithful of the two cities. Adams picked 21-year-old Jud McAtee as left wing on a line with two old Detroit reliables—centre Syd Howe and right wing Modere (Mud) Bruneteau. Day put last season's rookie-of-the-year, Gus Bodnar, at centre between Lorne Carr and Dave (Sweeney) Schriner.

The Detroit combination paid off with six of their team's seven goals against Boston Sunday night, each getting two of the counters. They had four assists as well, Howe getting two and the others one each, giving them a total of 10 scoring points.

The Toronto trio picked up 18 scoring points in their games against Rangers Saturday night and against Chicago Sunday night. They provided both Toronto goals against Rangers and seven of the 11 Leafs scored against Chicago.

The three Toronto players each collected six points. Schriner, on the comeback trail after a year in retirement, led in the goal-scoring department with five — including the two against Rangers. Carr had three goals and three assists and the 22-year-old Bodnar had one goal and five assists.

Next scheduled game in the league is Wednesday night when Rangers visit Black Hawks. A two-game program is billed for Thursday night with Leafs at Canadiens and Rangers at Detroit.

Sherts and Shells.

When Tami Mauriello was handed an indefinite suspension the other day for pulling out of a match with Lee Oma, he walked out of the meeting room with a puzzled look on his face and asked: "What does indefinitely mean? Does that mean I can't fight anywhere else?"

B.C.I. JUNIORS UNDEFEATED IN SIX-MAN GROUP

Both Put Promising Young Player on Line With Two Veterans

Belleville Collegiate Institute junior six-man gridders chalked up their second season victory to remain the only undefeated sextette in the Bay of Quinte Junior Interscholastic conference. Yesterday the Church St. "Collegians" were forced to call upon all of their power and grid deception to down the St. Michael's Academy kids 12 to 7 and remain in the undefeated bracket. The half-time score was 1-0 in favor of the B. C. I.

The lone initial half score came after McCarthy punted far over the St. Mikes goal line for a rouge, following which play surged up and down the field with little to choose from as all offensive play halted by a strong defence.

However, the tide of battle moved towards a Collegiate victory early in the second half, when Rollins moved the yardsticks to St. Mikes' 23-yard line from where the shifty McCarthy skirted left and broke through for an unconverted touchdown giving B. C. I. a 6-0 advantage. Kelleher and Moher came back for the Irish with substantial gains, but the battling "trio color" held on their own 19 following which St. Mikes broke through for a safety touch to bring the count to 6-2 for the Irish.

Touch Clinches Game

Again in possession the Collegians capitalized on the situation via the ground route to have Johnny Rollins move in from right end and crack the St. Mikes' line wide apart and scurry over for the touchdown that clinched the game, as it was converted, Locke to Strachan giving B. C. I. a 12 to 2 lead. At this point Rollins was outstanding and a principal ground-gainer for the group leaders.

With their backs to the wall St. Mikes kept feeding the powerful Al Kelleher, who marched with power plays until he lugged the pigskin across the Collegiate line hauling along a goodly portion of the B. C. I. line. The try was not converted but brought the final score to 12-7.

The line-ups:-

St. Mikes — Ed Barrett quarter, Semark and Kelleher halves, Cooper centre, Peets and Moher ends, Brian, D. Barrett, Garvin and Bradden subs.

Belleville Collegiate — Strachan quarter, Diamond and Locke halves, Carefoot centre, Rollins and McCarthy ends, Marcus, Stewart, Neil and Denton subs.

What's Doing in Sport

By The Canadian Press

President Maurice A. Podoloff of the American Hockey League last night said at New Haven he had awarded a game played Oct. 25 between Indianapolis and Hershey to the later by a 3-0 score because Indianapolis used three members of the Detroit National League Club. Originally, Indianapolis outscored Hershey, 7-3. Podoloff said the use of the Detroit trio violated the American League's player loan rule.

Boston Bruins announced last night that they had purchased right-winger Bill Jennings from the Detroit Red Wings, in exchange for right winger Pete Leswick and an unannounced sum of cash.

Schoolboy Berthiaume of Montreal used one blazing left hook to the chin to knock out Al Stephany, New York negro, at 1:02 of the second round of a scheduled eight round bout at Providence alst night. Berthiaume weikhed 175, Stephany 184. It took two full minutes to revive Stephany after the knockout.

Rev. S. J. Forrest, vicar of Leighton Buzzard, England, was inspired to poetry when he read that "pasteurized" beer is in use and wrote in his parish magazine a poem ending:

"So who to the toast or the wassail is prone
"May drink others' health without risking his own,
"And timorous topers imbibe without fear
"Their sterilized, peptonized, iodized, humanized, vitaminiferous, pasteurized beer".

Good Show.

The Belleville Lawn Bowling Club cleared its decks for another year and undoubtedly started off on the right foot when members re-elected Cliff Argue to a fourth term. After all it's sound business to first find a good executive head, but it's much better business to keep him in office once such an individual is available. And that's just what Cliff Argue happens to be—the right person on the right job; that is insofar as the Belleville Lawn Bowling Club is concerned.

However, the local lawn bowlers were confronted with a pertinent question at their annual meeting last night. The question is—why potential bowlers feel the Belleville Lawn Bowling Club is an exclusive or closed corporation? Frankly we can say such a condition does not exist. True enough maybe in the past new or novice members may not have been as cordially received as they might have been, but the local lawn bowling club is purely a community venture and the 57 members of 1944 have been asked to bring in at least one new member each in 1945. The club greens are situated on civic-owned property and open to the public to enjoy watching the games whether a member or not. However, it would be much more interesting to become an active member.

"Those Yanks couldn't do enough for our boys", is how Steve expressed his feelings, while recuperating with relatives here ... To Clarence Gibson, local softball executive, went the first four box seats drawn in the Kinsmen Club weekly Toronto Maple Leaf N.H.L. hockey draw ... As host Clarence entertained some of his friends in the Gardens to see the Leafs eke out a lucky 2-1 win over New York Saturday night...Yesterday afternoon's senior Interscholastic 12-man football practice had to be postponed until Wednesday owing to abbreviated games Monday and today.

Ring Wranglings.

The canvas at Walt Gerow's sport emporium is in for a beating (and one that will not do it any particular good either) this week. Tomorrow night it's professional wrestling with a half dozen pachyderms of the grappling world trying their best to wreck and ruin the four ring uprights, while on Friday night the Reliance Boxing Club is returning with another of those popular amateur mitt-slinging shows featuring "Jibber" Ellis and "Herb" Smith.

In the grappling business Promoter Tunney apparently hasn't much love in his heart for Pierre DeGlane. Otherwise he wouldn't toss him to the brutality of Hollywood's No. 1 ring villain, Dr. Len Hall, who was never too popular insofar as local wrestling fans are concerned. There is one thing certain, Pierre will command plenty of moral support tomorrow night and maybe the odd bit of physical assistance, which might not come amiss at that.

Remember When

John Henry Lewis received practically nothing for his trouble when he won the light heavyweight boxing championship of the world from Bob Olin nine years ago tonight. The attendance at the bout was some 8,000, the receipts $16,584, while Olin, who had been guaranteed $15,000, received only ten grand, lost his title and had a very bad night. Lewis had been guaranteed 12 1/2 per cent of the gate, but received practically nothing for his efforts.

Page Bill Terry

Brooklyn Dodger fans are wondering if they haven't got Mel Ott all wrong. The manager of the Giants always has been popular at Ebbets Field. But Ott made a remark down at New Orleans recently that has all Flatbush up in arms.

"We finished fifth," Ott was quoted as saying. "But we beat out the Dodgers in the season's series and the standing of the clubs. That's a successful year for us."

It's comparable to Bill Terry's historic question: "Are the Dodgers still in the league?" Brooklyn just can't be happy with wise-cracking Giant pilots.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By SYD THOMAS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Oct. 31—(CP)—Hockey and football get the cold shoulder today, with Hallowe'en pranks the sport of the day among the young fry. Things have been very quiet in this realm of sport, and we haven't heard of one argument arising that couldn't be settled amicably. No moves have been launched yet to establish a hall of fame in honor of the apple-bobbers, nor has there been any agitation to appoint a czar in charge of pinning tails on respective donkeys.

That's a refreshing situation in the current sport scene!

Battle of the Sexes:

Male sportwriters, clinging tenaciously to one of the last refugees of their sex, the press box, are gradually being eased out of that once exclusive domain in Winnipeg. Bill Good wrote of the situation somewhat bitterly in the Winnipeg Tribune, telling how he and his colleagues were ousted from the choicest seats in the football and hockey press boxes by invading females.

Though we blush to admit it, one of the female usurpers was a colleague of ours, Miss Enid Nemy of The Canadian Press staff in Winnipeg. Defending her reprehensible action in a letter to the Tribune's sport department, the girl was shameless in her insistence she and her girl friends would continue to sit in the press box as long as they were writing sport.

The men will get used to it after a while, she remarked blithely, adding ominously: "If not, they have my profound sympathy—for I rather think they'll have to."

Here to There:

Grant Warwick of Regina, member of the famous athletic family, is trying a comeback with New York Rangers after fracturing his skull in the 1943 season. He's one of the very few hockey players able to attempt a comeback. His teammate, goalie Ken McCauley, is another ... Doug (Windsor Star) Vaughan picks Detroit Red Wings to finish first in the N.H.L. this year, with Montreal Canadiens, Toronto, Boston, Chicago and Rangers trailing in that order. Many will disagree with that selection.

SALE! Dollars at Half Price!

Sounds like a sure-thing bargain. But how many of us realize that in Canada we're getting dollars at less than half the price of other years ...at a fraction the price in many other countries to day. Here's what we mean. A dollar is worth as much as it will buy. And to day your dollar buys at least twice as much as it did in the last war. For instance, your 5¢ buys a bar of laundry soap that cost 15¢ in those days. To day, you can buy the same quality felt fedora for $3.50 that set you back $8.50 then. Truly your dollar is half price since it buys twice as much. Price ceilings and other anti-inflationary measures have kept its value HIGH! And you protect your dollars worth every time you buy a bond ..pay off a debt ..refuse to hoard goods or frequent black markets. That's how to make dollars count MORE!

Make This Pledge Today!

I promise to give my support to keeping the cost of living down. I will buy only what I need. I will observe the ceiling whether buying or selling goods or services. I will pay off old debts, save for the future, invest in Victory Bonds and War Savings Certificates. And I will support taxes which help lower the cost of living.

Keep Your Dollar Value High!

LESSON NO. 519

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

You think you have troubles. But you don't get letters asking how to bid and make a grand slam with this deal:

NORTH
♠A J 9 6
♥A 6 5 2
♦3
♣8 5 4 2

WEST
♠8 5 4 3 2
♥9 8 7 4
♦9 7
♣9 3

EAST
♠K Q 10
♥K J 10
♦4 2
♣K Q J 8 7

SOUTH
♠7
♥Q 3
♦A K Q J 10 8 6 5
♣A 10

With oppenent cards where they are, a grand slam can be made. It may look tough to a palooka. But, although it teems with thrills, taking 13 tricks holds no terrors for an experienced player.

However, when it comes to correctly bidding this deal to grand slam, I pass the buck. Superman might show you some mystic way of getting there. But next time, it would not work.

I might gamble for it. But that would not teach you anything. You could do much better if you had your neck stretched. Or played against opponents who fail to keep their hands close to their chest.

The correct bidding should go like this:

SOUTH	NORTH
4 D	4 S
4 NT	6 C
6 D	Pass

The four diamond opening shows a long-strong suit with an outside sure trick. The fact that north does not respond with five diamonds shows he has two sure tricks.

Four no-trump is the ace and king asking convention. Six clubs is the Kibitzer's convention response for showing two aces and no kings. That tells south the opponents have three kings.

With three kings missing, south should not go to seven. The wear and tear on his partner would be too great. However, a grand slam can be made in either diamonds or no-trump.

West leads a heart. Dummy wins and south takes seven trumps to leave himself with a trump, a spade, heart queen, and clubs A 10. The dummy saves a club, heart, and spades A J 9.

East must cling to his three kings and two queens. But south now leads the last trump and sluffs dummy nine. East is squeezed. Nothing he can throw away can keep south and dummy from taking all the rest. Lay out the cards and see.

Help yourself to the aspirin.

"Going My Way"

Bing Crosby's been on the Road to Morocco, Road to Zanzibar and Road to Singapore — but now he's on the road to fame in Paramount's captivating motion picture, "Going My Way," now attracting large audiences at the Belle Theatre.

Of course, Crosby long ago was included in the charmed circle of the famous, but more for his velvety covalizing than anything else. From here, the "groaner" isn't sitting back to let others take laurels in the acting profession — He's put his own oar in the Hollywood waters and has come up with the finest catch of the year. He plays Father "Chuck" O'Malley, and the way he plays him elicits rave notices from reviewers.

There's nothing lacking in "Going My Way," critics say, for the heart-warming story is acted out by one of the most competent casts and has Leo McCarey at the reins to handle direction. Bing's brother-priests are Barry Fitzgerald, the kindly, temperate whimsical Father Fitzgibbon and Frank McHugh, genial and enthusiastic in his role as Father O'Dowd. Then, too, Rise Stevens appears throughout the film as a famous opera singer, (which she is), rendering the "Habanera" aria from "Carmen" while the Robert Mitchell boys' choir captivates audiences, according to reports, when the group joins Bing in several selections.

The simple but eloquent story relates how Bing is sent as "trouble shooter" to Fitzgerald's parish and immediately confounds that conservative priest by instituting innovations which to him are seemingly radical. His first act is to placate Gene Lockhart, bank prexy who holds the mortgage on the parish. The latter's son, played by James Brown, figures in the act, too, for he falls in love with Jean Heather, a young girl set on the right trail after receiving some sound advice from "Father" Crosby. The golf course scene is one of the shining examples of the temper of "Going My Way," it is said, for the laughs and chuckles become howls as Fitzgerald indulgently lets himself be taught the science of the game by Crosby and McHugh.

The action all the way, in fact, is characterized by a display of humane quualities which alternately moves audiences to laughter and tears A grand variety of songs is tears. A grand variety of songs is three new tunes by Johnny Burke and Jimmy van Heusen heading for the hit parade. They're "Swinging on a Star," "The Day After Forever" and the title song, "Gong My Way." In addition, "Ave Maria," "Adeste Fidelis," "Silent Night" and other immortal melodies are sung.

De Gaulle Sees Importance Of Full French Participation

By DeWITT MACKENZIE
Associated Press War Analyst

France's fresh crisis brought about by the De Gaulle government's decree disarming everybody except the regular army and the police — an order directed at Communist Partisans who have defied its authority —is symptomatic of the heavy trials she must endure to achieve regeneration.

If the present crisis didn't involve the Communists it would revolve about some other pressing problem —though the Communist question is big and growing, and is likely to reach momentous proportions. France is plagued politically, economically and physically. Gen. deGaulle and his provisional government will have to run the gauntlet of many and great troubles.

France Terribly Ill

To understand this we must recognise that France still is terribly ill from a complete national collapse. Her debacle in 1940 was due less to Hitler's great strength than to her own weakness resulting from a break-down both in spirit and in moral stamina among many who had responsibility for the guidance of their country. That came from a dry rot that had been going on for a long time.

The formal recognition just accorded the provisional government by London, Washington, Moscow and other capitals should have a beneficial effect. Prime Minister Churchill says it can be regarded "as a symbol of France's emergence from four d[illegible] years of terrible and woeful expe[illegible]nce," and as "heralding a period in which she will resume her rightful role on the world stage."

Must be Master of Own Fate

The French nation must be master of its own fate. Gen. de Gaulle's government must pull itself up by its boot-straps. Friendly and sympathetic assistance by other nations is needed, and it can work wonders, but foreign interference would only add to the difficulties which already exist.

Gen. deGaulle's recognition of this, I take it, accounts for his desire that France take a greater part in the concluding days of the war. One senses an eagerness that his country be given a chance to redeem itself in actual combat.

Plans to Prolong Life of Parliament For Another Year

London, Oct. 31—(CP) — Prime Minister Churchill is expected to take a direct hand in steering thru the House of Commons a measure to extend the life of the present parliament for another year and end any immediate prospects of a wartime general election in Great Britain.

The Prime Minister told the House last week he would personally move the second reading of the prolongation of parliament bill, and added:

"Naturally, in moving a bill of such vital consequence to our lives, I shall feel it my duty to make a few introductory remarks which may be of general interest."

This will be the first time that Mr. Churchill has taken a personal hand in steering the bill through the House, having left the task in previous years to the home secretary. It has been nine years since Britain has had a general election.

Rumblings of political activity were heard during the week-end as Mr. Churchill—in his role as leader of the Conservatives—named Ralph Assheton, 43-year-old financial secretary to the treasury, to be the party's new organizational chairman.

At the same time Labor party leaders held a series of meetings designed, in part, to determine the attitude of its members in the Churchill cabinet toward the political truce.

German Food Shortage "Alarmingly Acute"

Zurich, Oct. 31 — (CP-Reuter)— The food shortage in Germany is becoming "alarmingly acute" following the loss of the Ukraine, Rumania and part of Hungary, the newspaper Courier de Geneve said today. The situation is the more serious owing to the large number of foreign-workers in Germany, estimated at some 12,000,000, the paper added.

AT THE McCARTHY — Claudette Colbert creates an unforgettable portrayal as Anne Hilton in David O. Selznick's tribute to the American home front, "Since You Went Away," opening next at the McCarthy. Miss Colbert shares stellar honors with Joseph Cotten, Jennifer Jones, Shirley Temple, Monty Woolley, Lionel Barrymore and Robert Walker.

Sports Roundup

New York, Oct. 31 (AP)—Texas Pete Cawthon should have waited another day before he quit as Brooklyn Tigers coach..He couldn't have seen any more spooks on Hallowe'en than he did in Dodgertown....This year's Tigers have lost five straight games and not one by more than seven points—the last two were 17-14 and Washington's winning field goal hit the cross bar. Pete said he never had seen that happen before in all his coaching days....Incidentally, it wasn't the Ebbets Field fans who ran Cawthon out of Brooklyn but the other common complaint—front office interference.

Unsolicited Comment.

Commenting on wartime changes in college football yesterday, coach Carl Snavely of Cornell remarked: "The players have to take a day off occasionally to go and draw their pay. That's a little different.... Maybe he wasn't pointing the finger at anyone in particular but it sounded as if the difference came in taking a day off.

CHAPTER ELEVEN

he officer at the desk was ne- arily brusque. There were a dred young men waiting. They e always waiting and it was the e every day, from morning till t, interviewing, hoping for or- s for more drafts, saying, "We'll you when we need you. Be ent." Lord, let them be pa- t, don't let us let them down . "Name?" "James Riley." l this out. We'll call you when need you." The young man quiet and dark. White teeth hed briefly when he said, "Yes will it be long?" We need you. won't be long. We'll send for ." "Thank you, sir."

Outside he waited for Punchy l Gus and then they went to the b to celebrate. "I tell you fel- , it's going to be great," Gus t saying. "It's great." unchy said, "Chet said the phy- l is awful tough." And Jimmy ndered out loud if there was any- ng the matter with him.

"Hell", Gus said. "We're all t. They shook on it. Much r they went home. "What're going to do?" Punchy asked .

Well, I'm not going back to the that's sure", Jimmy said. They pped and shook on that too. He a thought.

Why not come up North to our se?" They climbed into Gus' Mercury and headed for the urentians. It was seven o'clock , as they drove up the narrow d beside the Lake at last, the was going down behind the rple hills and they fell silent, estruck, as they gazed at the long eamers of misty clouds, purple, k, orange, that ran across the ta of sky over the setting sun. s was a wild driver and Jimmy d a weird impression as they ove swiftly down the Lake road at they were racing the sun to- rds the other side of the earth. the car radio, loud ,was Beeth- en's Fifth, the air was cool and s beat time on the big white astic steering wheel as they cov- ed the narrow dirt road ,swung ound narrow hairpin bends, al- ys with the magnificence of the aurentian sunset before them ross the swiftly darkening quick- ver lake, vast, beautiful, and un- onquerable. It was life, and eath, unending, it was Canada, tangible yet concrete; something ght there before them yet unat- inable and Jimmy thought, this what they mean by mine own, y native land. He thought, this what they mean when they say orth fighting, worth dying for. They ate thick steaks at the Manoir. "Emile", Jimmy said to the bartender. "How're your steaks?" They waited for his laugh. It was classic. Making a motion with his arm, first clenched, he said. "The best, Jimmy, solid, the best". They all laughed and had steaks, thick, the outside crisp and brown the inside pink and tender, with cold ale, and French fried, green wax beans and Gus said. "It's going to be great fellows, I tell you it's the real McCoy". They didn't say anything, Jimmy and Punchy, for a while but then Jimmy asked him, "What do you think, Punch? Is it right? We could keep out of it easy enough."

Punchy finished his mouthful of steak and took a drink of ale. "Jimmy, you're damn right we could keep out of it. But do you want to?" Jimmy shook his head. "Neither do I, neither does Gus here. It's too big for that, Jimmy, It's bigger than anything we can think of. It's bigger than us, than you or me or Verna or Gus here, or Margaret Kelley or any of the old gang". He stopped and looked down, his face red, for he was ordinarily unemotional; then he looked up again. "War is funny, Jimmy. It sure is funny".

"I don't see anything funny about it", Gus said, and he laughed and then they all laughed together. They realised you couldn't put it into words. It was just there, that was all, right there inside, close to the heart, the realization that it was happening and they were in it and that things like the girls they knew and their families and their school and sunsets across the lake and thick steaks and ale at the Manoir were all part of it. They drove up to Jimmy's place at twelve but they couldn't sleep right away. They were too excited. Instead they sat out on the front verandah and looked at the lake, blue black under the moon, with the island in it a dim blur in the middle, no a ripple on the water, not a sound in the air and they didn't say anything for a while.

"God, I like this country", Jimmy blurted after a while. Punchy passed cigarettes around they agreed there was nothing like it. They smoked and looked at the lake some more they couldn't seem to see it long enough and then they fell into bed. He still couldn't go to sleep; it was funny. It was the first time he'd ever really noticed the lake or the water or sunsets or thick steaks. He wondered what it'd be like not to be able to come home, not to see the lake and the hills of home, not to . . . he'd miss them all right . . . it was morning and sun streamed through the open window, warm, and it was summertime, when the living is easy.

Punchy and Gus were gone over to see the girls down to the store his mother told him . . but he didn't mind . . . it was Summertime, when the living is easy. . . Fish are jumping and the cotton is high. . . your pappy's rich and your ma is good looking, so hush little baby and don't you cry . . . he hummed it when he got up and washed and looked at his face in the mirror at ten. He had shaved the day before and there was a slight stubble but he was nineteen and it wasn't much. He didn't shave.

He went into the kitchen and had cereal and coffee and toast and crabapple jelly and bacon and eggs and more coffee. Then he went into the dining room and switched on the radio and while it warmed up he took out the pack and lit a cigarette. This was the cigarette he enjoyed most of the whole day, this one after breakfast; and he dragged on it slow and deep and it felt very good going into his mouth with smell of it in his nostrils and the music was recorded— lovely records all Artie Shaw and they were mostly Cole Porter tunes. . .Under My Skin, Night and Day, Begin the Beguine. He crooned, "I've got you under my skin, I've got you deep in the heart of me, so deep in my heart you're really a part of me. . I've got you under my skin. . ."till Elaine, twelve now and more precocious than ever, came in and started playing up to it.

After that there were Body and Soul and Stardust. There never would be another record like Stardust, played by Artie, written by Hoagy Carmichall. It was immortal like a poem or really good music. It had lasted and would last. Artie's clarinet was loud and high and very nice.

After that though there were only advertisements that always started with "Ladeeez. . ." and he shut it off and went outside and down the lawn to the lake. It was almost cold in the shade but in the morning sun it was very warm and nice and comfortable and he took off his shirt and lay in his shorts on the wharf. The wharf was about twelve feel long and it rested on four cement blocks in the water. The water was cold from the deepness of the lake when he dangled his hand in it and it was so clear he could see little clam shells on the bottom and little plants with their spreading leaves. He wondered whether there would ever be any more tunes like Cole Porter's. The pops nowadays were not worth a damn and they didn't last. Or whether there ever would be another Artie Shaw or Glenn Miller.

He looked into the water, clear and cool beside the wharf and then he looked across the lake at the twin mountains on the other side of the lake with the white and blue and green and yellow summer cottages running down their sides and the boat houses painted the same colors along the shore. Across the little channel from the wharf was the island with one house on it buried in the trees that covered the island. It was thick with trees and they grew, green and thick, right to the water's edge. They were laced with white birches that stood among the others, and at the water's edge the trees dipped their roots into the water, and there were little plants along the shore, green, then brown further down the stems from where the water had been higher in the Spring.

After a while the sun got hot on his shoulders and he began to sweat a little so he went into the boathouse and put on his trunks and stood on the wharf and looked at the water. When he put his foot in it it was cold, very cold, and he stood on the wharf for a little while and the sun was hot—it was nearly noon—so he took a deep breath and took a shallow dive. He felt the coldness close over him, flowing over his back and legs, and then he started a swift kicking crawl, breathing only every fourth stroke and he swam out to the raft and climbed onto it.

Russia's Action At Air Conference Real Bomb Shell

By C. R. BLACKBURN
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Washington, Oct. 31 — (CP) — Russia's sudden and dramatic refusal to participate in the International Air Conference in Chicago has had the effect of a bomb shell on Washington diplomats and even the best informed today seemed at a loss to explain it.

The sudden decision to withdraw, after the head of the Soviet delegation had been named and some of the delegation had arrived, with others on the way, left in its wake speculation as to the future of proposed international co-operation in other fields.

Absence of the Soviet delegation from the Chicago civil aviation talks need not greatly handicap the progress of that conference, since Russia is not yet greatly interested in the field of inter-continental aviation, pending the provision of domestic services.

But the political effect of the withdrawal was viewed with grave concern. Many were reluctant to believe the whole reason was that given in Russian communications—the fact that such allegedly pro-Fascist and anti-Soviet countries as Spain, Portugal and Switzerland had been invited.

However, even such doubters were unable — or unwilling — to offer any alternative explanation.

Undersecretary of State Stettinius said yesterday he was sorry about Russia's decision and expressed the hope it would not portend any difficulty in building, with full Russian co-operation, the proposed world organization for peace based on the Dumbarton Oaks agreement.

Americans Battle Typhoon and Jap Delaying Tactics

By C. YATES McDANIEL
Associated Press War Correspondent

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Oct. 31 (AP) — American infantrymen, battling a typhoon and desperate Japanese delaying tactics, drove ahead through Leyte valley today toward the island's northwest coast and a possible showdown with cornered but sizeable enemy forces.

One unit was 16 miles from linking with another invading force on Carigara Bay, after capturing Jaro, last important inland road junction, in fierce battling Sunday.

Gen. MacArthur announced Japanese casualties on Leyte and Samar total 24,000, against a total of 3,221 for the Americans—706 killed, 270 missing and 2,245 wounded.

Japanese reinforcements from Cebu were landed in darkness at Ormoc, on Leyte's west-central coast. It was possible they were intended to bulwark forces who have succeeded in escaping to Carigara Bay, linked to Ormoc by a mountain highway.

Frontline dispatches also reported that between 4,800 and 6,000 Japanese were retiring toward the bay from the central Leyte valley, where organized resistance has been smashed. Small enemy units were straggling through the hills toward Ormoc.

The Americans held a tight grip on escape routes, by controlling the main highways and maintaining a blockade of Carigara bay.

Rain-laden typhoon winds sometimes reaching 70 miles an hour, hammered the battle zones.

Around Dagami, in the central Leyte valley, some 1,500 Japanese were trapped. They were brought under one of the campaign's most comprehensive artillery barrages.

Japanese aerial activity has decreased sharply. Six enemy planes were shot down, without American loss.

Gen. MacArthur announced yesterday that liberation of 1,500,000 Filipinos on Leyte and Samar "virtually is accomplished" and his troops swept on to eliminate disintegrating Japanese resistance in the two central Philippine islands.

On strategic Samar, important stepping stone to the main island of Luzon on which Manila is situated, small Japanese garrison are helpless and "can be destroyed at will," Gen. MacArthur declared.

No One in Britain Under 30 Years Has Cast a Vote

London, Oct. 31 — (CP)—Prime Minister Churchill said in the House of Commons today that no one in Britain under 30 had ever cast a vote.

No general elections have been held in nine years and registration for bye-elections is suspended. The last register of electors was compiled for the 1935 election and it has never since been revised.

CARTON BURSTS INTO FLAMES

Owen Sound, Oct. 31 — (CP) — The afternoon sun was focussed so intensely through a bottle of vinegar in the show window of a store at nearby Mildmay that a carton standing behind it burst into flames and another was scorched.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Oct. 31 —(CP)— Prices improved to show sizeable index gains at noon today for the western oils and both mining groups while the industrials weakened .27. Trading volume was comparatively light at 235,000 shares for the first three hours.

The market was fairly strong for some of the golds. Gains of 10 cents or more came out for Frobisher, Conwest, Buffalo-Ankerite and Malartic Gold Fields and smaller gains were netted by Preston, O'Brien, Sullivan and Upper Canada. Belleterre dropped 15.

In the base metals Steep Rock led the rally with a gain of 10 cents to 2.87. Smelters and Pend Oreille improved narrowly.

Abitibi Pfd. gained a point at the opening but failed to hold the gain. The common was up ¼. Other papers were steady. Senior oils were stronger and the steels were down narrowly.

MONTREAL LIVESTOCK

Montreal, Oct. 31 —(AP)— Trading was slow today on the livestock markets, with substantial holdovers in the cattle and calf classes. Receipts: Cattle 109, calves 100, sheep 75, hogs 325.

In the cattle section, 2,100 offerings were unsold. Market officials announced all reports indicated a heavy carry over throughout this week.

Veal calves were 13.50-14 and common lights down as low as 7. Grass calves were 4-5.50. Good ewes and wethers were 11.50. Hogs were 17.85 for Grade A and sows 12.50-12.75 dressed.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

New York, Oct. 31 —(AP)— Aircrafts and steels led a selective and quiet recovery shift in today's stock market. Issues with armament connections apparently were buoyed by Prime Minister Churchill's warning of a possibly much longer war than most expected although there was no particular buying rush for these groups. Gains of fractions to around 2 points were in the majority near the fourth hour.

Douglas Aircraft and Grumman touched peaks for 1944. Ahead the greater part of the time were Boeing, Glenn Martin, United Aircraft, U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Chrysler, General Motors, Sears Roebuck, Montgomery Ward, Du Pont and Allied Chemicals.

HOGS

Toronto, Oct. 31 —(CP)— The market was unsettled and no price for bacon-hogs established at Stratford early today while prices were unchanged at other markets reporting. Dressed-weight, Grade A, delivered, London and Hamilton $17.50, Barrie and Hull $17.40.

Hallowe'en Party At Kiwanis Centre For Clubmen and Wives

Members of the local Kiwanis club and their wives spent an enjoyable Hallowe'en party at the Kiwanis centre on Monday evening when dressed in costumes ranging from the ridiculous to the sublime, they hobnobbed with the goblins and for the evening relived happy memories of younger days.

Euchre and bridge were enjoyed to start off the evening, following which a riotous program of fun was staged thanks to the planning of Kiwanian J. Marsh and Mrs. J. McIntosh. Kiwanians at luncheon Tuesday noon were still agog over the previous evening's fun, while President Jack McVeigh expressed appreciation of the club to those responsible for planning the night's program.

Sgt. E. McAllister Killed in Action

Hamilton, Oct. 31 (CP) — Lance Sgt. Earl McAllister, the Hamilton soldier who captured 180 fully armed Germans during the battle of Normandy, has been killed in action somewhere in Holland.

Then a private, the 'one-man army' was driving a captured German amphibious car when some Germans tried to cross in front of it.

He fired above their heads and took them prisoners. French resistance forces told him the nearby woods were full of Germans so McAllister entered the woods firing and routed out the enemy soldiers.

After his exploits he received rapid promotion and continued in front line action. He apparently fought through with the Canadians in France and joined in the invasion of Holland.

Of United Empire stock, Sgt. McAllister's forbears came from Pennsylvania at the time of the American revolution. He was a graduate of Hamilton Technical School and enlisted in the R.C.A.F. but was demobilized because of an ear defect. He then joined the army.

STIRLING

Hastings Deanery Meets in Rawdon

Stirling — On October 24th the Hastings Deanery was held at St. Thomas Church, Rawdon, although the sky was overcast and dull there was a good representation from each parish. The day began with Holy Communion at 10.30. Rural Dean Robinson of Tweed and Rev. C. C. Brazill were the celebrants. There were 78 communicants.

A most inspiring sermon was delivered by Rev. Blatchford, vicar of St. George's, Trenton. His message touched the hearts of everyone present and contained many helpful thoughts for every W. A. member. Dinner was served in the Orange Hall.

Mrs. W. J. Tanner then gave the address of welcome which was responded to by Mrs. I. Clute of Stirling. The minutes of the last Deanery meeting were read and adopted. Rural Dean Robinson spoke a few words giving the W.A. members much credit for all the work they had done.

A report of C.B.L. was given by Rev. Mr. Simmons, Bancroft, stating there were 4 active members in Bancroft and urged that the W.A. encourage as many boys as possible to become active in this very important work. Mrs. Clarke read several letters from members regretting their absence.

A junior report was given by Mrs Dowdell stressing the religious training of Juniors also Little Helpers.

Miss F. Howard of China Speaks

Rev. Mr. Brazill then introduced the guest speaker Miss Frances Howard, missionary on furlough from China. Miss Howard told of many experiences in the war zone which were most interesting, and all carried home a very inspiring message.

Reports from different branches were given as follows:
